TUESDAY, AUGUST 18, 1885.

Personal.

Mr. R. Smith, photographer, died at his father's residence, in Harvey, on Sunday last.

Mr. W. B. Cryster, of Toronto, with Picturesque Canada, is in town, delivering the balance of Picturesque Canada to those who were not-come-at-able when the last numbers were being delivered.

Lawn Tennis.

Brantford, Ontario, is evincing great interest in lawn tennis, and has arranged a tournament for the championship of the city. The following gentlemen were recently elected officers of the club: L. C. Blackader, President; J. C. Sullivan, Vice-President; W. A. Grassett, Secretary; and Mr. D. S. Carnegie, Treasurer.

What We Would Like to See.

A fine day for the True Blue's excursion to Stoney Lake to-morrow.

And a big crowd going on it.

The town council transact some business at their meetings.

And not try to monopolize the gas business of the entire community.

An electric light in Central Park.

"John Smith's" reception at Racine, Wis.

A boom in business.

Another week of civic holidays.

What We may Expect.

Some lively debates on the exemption question at the next council meeting.

Smith street bridge to be at once repaired.

The Clippers to make our boys feel tired.

Toronto people to say that the "ball game" is no good after all.

But still to go and see it.

John Bell to keep his cow at home.

The decision of the lacrosse council in the Beaverton-Orillia dispute.

The club it goes against to think themselves hardly dealt with.

The Peterboroughs to bring back the championship.

The True Blue's excursion to-morrow to be a grand success.

What they are Saying.

I made a good chairman.—Councillor Kelly.

I believe in exempting industries.—Councillor Kendry.

Pray why not stores?—Councillor Menzies.

We would like to see an electric light in the Central Park.—The Fire Brigade Band.

We'll rattle the Peterboroughs.—The Clippers.

We can't do much worse than the Torontos did yesterday.—Tip O'Neill.

What's the use arresting a man if he is to be let off?—P. C. McGinty.

That's my business.—The acting magistrate.

A Destructive Cattle Disease.

It is Cutting Down the Stock of Illinois—Spanish or Texan Fever Sure.

BLOOMINGTON, Ill., Aug. 17.—A cattle disease, alleged to be Spanish or Texan fever, has developed here, and is creating considerable excitement among stockmen. Two weeks ago 61 stock cattle were shipped here from Hutchinson, Kansas. When they arrived they appeared to be in perfect health. On Friday last the cattle showed signs of being sick, and already 15 are dead and 12 more are down with the disease. Veterinary surgeons say it is genuine Spanish or Texan fever.

Smiths Market.

Peaches, Plums, Pears, Grapes, Oranges, Lemons, Apples, Cherries, Garden Raspberries, Melons, Currants, Gooseberries, and all kinds of green vegetables. Ripe Tomatoes one dollar per box, twenty pounds in the box. Fresh Fish, Hams and Bacon.

TOWN COUNCIL.

Councillors at Cross Purposes—The Exemptions Question.

Smith Street Bridge to be Inspected.

An adjourned meeting of the Town Council was held last evening, Councillor Kelly presiding.

The following other members were present—Councillors Cahill, Davidson, Rutherford, Green, Douglas, Menzies and Kendry.

After reading and confirmation of the minutes of last meeting the following communications were read:

From John Bell, complaining of improper action of police in impounding his cow.

From town clerk, enclosing returns of rates on water and public office by-laws.

From J. Corkery, Secretary of Separate School Board, asking a levy of $2500 for Separate schools.

From G. A. Ranney, asking that the expenses of conveying a sick immigrant girl to the Montreal hospital, amounting to $7, be defrayed by the council.

From H. Denne, P. Hamilton, the Hamilton Manufacturing Company and Messrs. W. Patterson & Sons, asking for the same exemption from taxation recently extended to other manufacturing industries.

The communication from Mr. Corkery was referred to the Finance Committee. Mr. Ranney's request re immigrant girl's railway fare was granted, and the communication of Messrs. Denne, Hamilton and others referred to the Finance Committee, with instructions to prepare a by-law on the subject.

After a number of accounts had been read and referred to the committee on finance, Councillor Davidson, seconded by Councillor Kendry, moved that the request of Mr. Denne and others be granted.

Councillor Menzies went him one better by moving that all stores be included.

Mr. Denne, being granted a hearing, explained the position taken by him, stating that he asked no more than had been granted industries similar to that in which he was engaged. He intended adopting the new roller process, and held that no extra assessment should be levied on account of such improvement, and that he should be exempted from taxation on any manufacturing enterprises established on property adjoining his mills.

Councillor Rutherford was willing to allow the same privileges to all, but was brought up all standing by Councillor Yelland, who disapproved of exemptions and believed that the by-law exempting the Dickson property should have had more consideration.

Councillor Kendry was in favor of exempting all new industries, believing their presence in town as beneficial.

Councillor Menzies, who was supported by Councillor Cahill, gave notice of motion to the following effect:—"That all the stores on George street, Peterborough, be exempt from taxes and that a by-law be prepared for that purpose." He had paid taxes in Peterborough for 40 years and claimed as good a right to exemption from taxation as Mr. Denne or, indeed, anyone else.

This finished the discussion on the exemption matter, and the matter of the new town buildings was brought up for consideration.

Councillor Kendry moved that the work be at once proceeded with and his motion carried.

Councillor Douglas, seconded by Councillor Yelland, moved as follows:—"That the taxation of the present year be taken as a basis, and that no change be made for ten years."

Councillor Rutherford characterized the idea as ridiculous.

Councillor Green held that the Dickson by-law had been too sweeping altogether.

After some sarcastic remarks by Councillor Menzies, the resolution was laid over as a notice of motion.

It was then moved by Councillor Menzies, seconded by Councillor Kendry, that the whole Council be a committee to inspect the Smith street Bridge at 9 o'clock to-day, and see what can be devised to place it in a proper condition for traffic.

After Mr. Belcher had expressed the opinion that from $400 to $500 would make it serviceable for four or five years the motion carried.

After a slight discussion in reference to complaints of the way in which the street sprinkling done by Mr. Trennium was carried out, an adjournment was mode till a call from the Mayor is made.

Poisoned by Parsnip.

A Young Man Dies Through Eating Wild Parsnips.

BLENHEIM, Aug. 17.—A very sad and fatal poisoning accident occurred about two miles from here to day. Three sons of David Walker found some wild parsnip, which they mistook for spignett and ate it. The eldest, Wallace, about 24 years old, died in a few hours. He leaves a wife and one child. The other two, aged 17 and 15, are very low, but the doctor has hopes of their recovery.

"LEAD US NOT INTO TEMPTATION."

At last came a letter, not from Paul, but from her little fair-haired cousin Elsie, written in the first flush of a bride's happiness.

"She was Judith's neighbor now, living only twenty miles away, in the dearest old house, where Judith must come and spend a month with her. She would tell her nothing about her husband. She had told him nothing about her, because she intended them to surprise one another. They would be great friends—she was sure."

Judith was tired of her own anxious thoughts. There was something contagious, too, in Elsie's gaiety and hope, and so she went.

It was sunset when she reached the place. A fine house, just old enough to avoid that painful look of newness common to modern country houses, and standing in full view of the river, to which sloped banks, shaded by maples, elms, and willows.

"They were all out in the grounds," the servant told Judith.

And, hearing merry singing, she stole around the corner of the house, to surprise them. Elsie, looking up spied her, and gave a gleeful shout. Her husband, who was sitting on a bank, started to his feet, and faced Judith.

It was Paul. The shock was too awful; and Judith, who had never known a day's illness, and scoffed at the mention of nerves, fell senseless at his feet.

If she had died then and there, blessed and happy had it been for her! But the efforts of the unsuspicious Elsie soon brought her back to life, while a warning look from Paul checked the words that were on her lips.

Heat and fatigue were hinted at; her joyous cousin was too much occupied with her own happiness to think long about the matter, and Judith did her best to shine in the virtuous hypocrisy and moral suicide line, which women are so fond of.

Paul only was silent.

Sitting apart in the shadow, his wife thought him uninterested and sleepy.

Judith knew his eyes were fixed on her—that he was watching every move, and noticing every inflection of voice. Though he was almost as motionless as if he had ceased to breathe, she felt that he was questioning her, fiercely, eagerly, and that, spite of herself, she was answering him.

She blushed, and shrank away in the very silence and solitude of her own room, when she thought of what his eyes had said to her.

When she looked into her own heart she cried out, and struck her hands together, and seizing what she had already taken from her trunk, began to thrust it back again in desperate haste.

Someone touched her, and springing up she met the eyes that had haunted her.

"Paul!"

"Well, Judith,"—and oh, what depths of tenderness in his voice—"you are not afraid of me?"

"No, not afraid."

"Why are you going, then? For you are going; I know what these preparations mean."

"Because I am not stone nor steel. I should go mad."

"Then you did love me?"

"If it will give you any pleasure to know, yes."

The light that had terrified her before leaped up in Paul's eyes.

"My darling, you need not shrink from me. You have nothing to fear. Only stay. Judith, if you love Elsie, stay. It has been so long since I have been near you, looked into your eyes, heard your speech. Dearing me out of it too suddenly. Let me contemplate and grow familiar with my sorrow, or I shall die in my despair."

"Oh, Paul!" she burst forth, "why did you stay away all this weary time, and why did you let me come here?"

"Why did you answer me as you did, the last night we were together, Judith? As for your coming, I knew nothing of it. I never dreamed that Elsie's Judith was my Judith."

"Poor Elsie!"

"You pity her? Stay, then. If you go now she will learn all. Stay, and I promise not to offend by word or look."

So Judith stayed—from pity for Elsie, said her deceived heart. Cruel mercy, that held the poison to her own lips day by day.

At first the guileless Elsie saw nothing of the tiny cloud arising, that was one day to darken her whole horizon.

She fancied that, somehow, Paul and Judith didn't agree, and, anxious that they should know and appreciate one another, was continually leaving them alone together, fancying that her presence was a restraint.

By one of those convenient sophistries which poor humanity calls in when right and reason have deserted it, Paul argued that because his wife was pure and trusting, there was a destiny managing his affairs over which he had no control.

Presently he ceased to argue at all. He took matters out of destiny's hands and refused to listen to conscience.

It was all the worse that he dared not speak out the thoughts of his heart. He was all the more eager to be by her—his eyes more constantly sought her face. She seemed to move in an atmosphere of his waiting and watchfulness.

Again Judith wished to go. Again she stayed for Elsie's sake.

At length, what experience had not shown the poor young bride, instinct did. She felt first that there was restraint and unhappiness. She saw that she was repeatedly forgotten. There were walks and conversations in which she had no share; allusions that she could not understand; looks that made her angry and frightened even to think of.

Once the horses ran away, and she and Judith were thrown out. Judith was only slightly scratched; yet on coming out of her death-like swoon, she saw her husband kneeling by her cousin's side, and forgetful of her very existence.

People talked and shook their heads. The servants vowed loudly that it was a shame; and, at last, even Elsie's gentle spirit rose.

She had been waiting supper for her husband and Judith, who had gone out to hunt violets, and it was two hours past the usual time when she saw them coming slowly across the fields.

Judith, coming in alone, remarked her looks with surprise, and stooped to kiss her. But Elsie drew back.

"No, Cousin Judith, don't! I can't say 'Our Father' any more, because I think of you always; and I sometimes feel as if you were so cruel that I can't forgive you. Paul is all I have, cousin, and you want to take him from me. I wish I had died before I had learned to believe it."

"No, Elsie," returned her cousin gently; "there you wrong me. I have not been blameless; but I have not been as heartless and wicked as you think. Dear Elsie, long ago I was to have been Paul's wife. When I came here, and found who your husband was, I was going away. Now I will go, dear, and your happiness will come back to you. You are fairer and sweeter and better than I, and Paul will love you better than he has ever done me. Only don't tell him that I am going, Elsie."

She was too delicate to say why, but Elsie understood.

So, in tears and silence, all was made ready, and, when Paul was absent, Judith hurriedly kissed the pale Elsie and drove away.

Amidst all the bitterness of departure, she found one ray of comfort—the sense of freedom from bondage. Her last weeks had been weeks of terror. She had seen the fate fast approaching, and, magnetized by Paul's strong will had been powerless to escape.

As she said this to herself, she mechanically drew away her dress from the vacant seat where a gentleman had placed himself beside her. He bent forward and looked in her face. It was Paul.

"You see you can't escape me, Judith," he said, under his breath; "you might have known that I would have followed you to the Antipodes. Further disguise is useless. Fate has united us again, and Fate itself shall not separate us."

Three days after Elsie's poor loving heart was crushed into a lifelong sorrow.

A most hurried letter from Paul said to her what he had said to Judith, and built up a great chasm between her and them forever.

Let us not condemn them, but pray, rather: "Lead us not into temptation."

Smokers will further their own interest by insisting upon having the "Cable," or "El Padre" brands of cigars which have stood the test for a quarter of a century, and yet allow greedy and unscrupulous dealers to persuade them to take other brands which pays them a larger profit, the consumer being a loser thereby. 13d-26w

THE REALLY GUILTY.

The Prince Albert Colonization Company was a corporation to which the Dominion Government granted the lands that had been occupied by Halfbreed settlers along the Saskatchewan for ten years. These parties, with the right of freehold, under the statue of limitations as it exists in Ontario, had petitioned the Government time after time, to grant them patents for the lands they had occupied and improved. What was the action of the Government? Instead of granting the Halfbreeds their rights and redressing their grievances, they grant to a colonization company in which one member of Parliament, at least, and a firm supporter of the Government, and also a son-in-law of a Minister of the Crown, were interested, these lands. The Halfbreeds were then ordered to vacate the lands they had occupied long enough to equitably entitle them to possession, and were threatened with eviction. What would an East Durham or Peterboro' farmer do, if the farm he occupies had been granted to a band of land grabbers, and he ordered to vacate it. Would he go quietly? Would he give up his home without a struggle? Not at all likely. He would be unworthy of the name of a man if he did not resist in defence of his rights, the tyranny of the spoiler and oppressor. This is what the Half-breeds of the settlement of St. Louis de Langeven did. But they were overpowered, and they have met the following fates:

Two were killed in battle in the late rebellion.

Three were wounded.

Three were taken prisoners

Two fled to the States.

Two have been sentenced to seven years penal servitude.

One has been sentenced to penal servitude for three years.

Technically these poor deluded men received the punishment due those who oppose force to constituted authority. Morally they were sacrificed to serve the partizian ends of a corrupt Government, who sought to deprive them of their rights, to reward their political favourites. The Government is morally as guilty of the death and sufferings of these misguided and distracted men, as is the robber who seeks to enter and spoil a man's house, and who shoots him down in cold blood because he resists.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The nominations for East Durham took place yesterday. Polling is on Monday next.

"No negroes need apply" is the motto of the Dominion minister, Pope. On the Intercolonial he discharged negro Pullman porters and put two white men in the place of each evicted Ethiopian.

Sir John, by his Franchise Bill, declared the Indian superior to a white man. But Hon. Mr. Pope, the counterfeit Minister of Railways and Canals, holds that it takes two white men to be equal to one negro. He has appointed two white Pullman car porters on the Intercolonial where one negro did the work formerly.

Mr. Thos. White, is claimed by Ontario Tories as a representative of this Province in the Dominion Cabinet. The Quebec Bleus claim him as the friend and representative of that Province. Hon. Thomas will probably cut the gordian knot by being a representative of himself as he was when the Gazette (his paper) got something like $20,000 of illicit government printing.

The Mail seeks to justify the enormous public debt of Canada on the grounds that the wealth of the country is increasing. This is the enunciation of a most vicious economic principle. What private person, if in debt, and seeking to better his condition, would succeed, if he recklessly increased his expenses as fast as his wealth increased? The Mail's special pleading is intended to cloak the wild extravagance of the present government in the accumulation of debt and the increase of the expense of government.

National railways are something costly to the Canadian people. The cost of the Intercolonial has been 42½ millions and already there have been expended on the Canadian Pacific Railway 86 millions cash, not including the fifteen millions recently borrowed, "really on the credit of Canada or the ten millions obtained from the sale of lands." This makes a total of 128½ millions, for these two railways. The Intercolonial, under the management of the government, does not even pay running expenses, while the difficulties of the C. P. Route by no means come to an end.

The Mail will lose caste now. Mr. Martin J. Griffin, its late editor, entered upon his duties as Parliamentary Librarian Monday morning. He has waded through a good deal of journalistic filth to this position. But he will have to be brought to Toronto at the time of the Young Men's Reform Convention. He can but his own work in the delicate allusions to "plug tobacco, free whiskey, and the need of a bath," by Reformers.

This is how the public domain is used in the North-West for purposes of bribery. Ranche privileges are granted to members of Parliament on condition of their supporting the Government. At least this appears from the fact that a gentleman—one not in the ring—on applying for a ranche was told that the lands were reserved for colonization purposes and that no more ranches could be granted. He pointed out that [illegible] given one of several ranche privileges he indicated, as the conditions were not carried out. He was told that these belonged to members of Parliament and if their privileges were cancelled they would vote against and defeat the Government. A fine way this to settle the Northwest! It was one of the chief pleas urged in support of giving the 86 millions the C.P.R. has cost, that it would help to settle the Northwest. Yet, after paying out this enormous sum to encourage settlement, the Government deliberately locks up in the hands of speculating land grabbers, for purpose of bribery, immense tracts of tillable land.

Crop Prospects.

We reprint from the summary of the report of the Ontario Bureau of Industries the following, based on the returns made by 1000 correspondents on August 5th:—

FALL WHEAT.

The reports of the fall wheat crop just harvested indicate that generally within the principal fall wheat area of the Province—which comprises the whole of the central and southern lake district—the return has been a good one, both in the yield per acre and the quality of grain. The average will be almost as high as that of the fine crop of last year. On wet and poorly cultivated soils the early summer growth was generally retarded by late spring frosts and cold weather; and this, with other influences of a more local character, such as storms, excess of rain or the want of it, and in some places the prevalence of hot, blighting winds, was of sufficient extent to affect the general result. With these exceptions, fall wheat all through western Ontario came to the harvest a full and well ripened crop, in good condition. The prospect was poorest in the north-western part of the Province, particularly in the counties of Grey and Bruce, where the injury from winter killing and rust was considerable. The yield in this district will not probably reach an average, and the sample is generally shrunken and discolored. There was an occasional appearance of rust all through Western Ontario, wherever it had a chance to work in late and thin fields; but outside of the two counties mentioned it was not so general as to do any serious injury. In the eastern part of the Province the area of fall wheat grown is comparatively small, and there was considerable loss from winter killing. Wherever the crop survived the effects of the winter, however, it grew and ripened well. In this portion of the Province there was an almost total immunity from rust, so that even the thinnest fields came to full perfection in point of plumpness and color of grain. Attacks of insects were confined to a few localities where midge, weevil or wire worm appeared to some extent, but not so as to do any serious damage. Harvesting was several days later than usual, and at the time of reporting, the bulk of the crop, excepting in some of the earlier counties in south-western Ontario, was still in the shock. Pretty general mention is made of the heavy storm of wind and rain which set in on the 3rd inst., which retarded operations considerably, though as it was followed by cool, dry, breezy weather there is not much fear of any appreciable damage from sprouting.

SPRING WHEAT.

The present condition of the spring wheat crop throughout the Province, though somewhat inferior to that of fall wheat, affords ground for hope of a fair average yield in spite of a good many adversities. Seeding was generally a little later than usual, and growth was further retarded by a spell of cold, dry weather in May and early in June, which, under ordinary conditions, is a period of vigorous development. As a consequence, not only did the plant fail in many instances to stool out fully, but the season was thrown backward from a week to two weeks, according to locality; nearly all the correspondents state the fields to be still green at the date of the reports, and cutting will not be general until about the 20th of the month. The fields in their green condition are almost invariably reported as luxuriant and highly promising; but these statements have to be accepted with some reservation in view of the vicissitudes to which the grain is liable during the ripening period, and in view also of the fact that many correspondents in southern sections where ripening has begun, report that it is failing to realize the expectations raised by its appearance a short time before. In July there was considerable hot, dry weather, which stimulated a too rapid maturity, and appeared to expose the wheat to its usual enemies of rust, midge and weevil. These evils, especially the two former, prevail pretty extensively throughout the western peninsula formed by Lake Erie and Lake Huron, the rust attacking the fields just as they show signs of changing their color. It is not likely that the western half of the Province, where fall wheat is the staple cereal, and spring wheat the exception, will yield more than a rather low average. In what is known as the spring wheat region of eastern Ontario it is gratifying to find that the accounts so far are more generally favorable. Indeed, an unusually hopeful tone pervades the reports from nearly all parts of the St. Lawrence and Ottawa and East Midland districts. But insect pests and traces of rust are present, and it is possible that before the grain is fully ripe the experiences of the western counties may be to some extent repeated here. A few fields were thinned by the operations of the wire worm, and the Hessian fly was at work in Northumberland and Prince Edward. The recent rain storms in some instances beat down the grain, while in others they have promoted development of the heads.

Will Riel be Hanged?

What His Counsel are Doing About the Appeal.

The Montreal Witness of Monday, says that Mr. Chas. Fitzpatrick, of Messrs. Davidson, Fitzpatrick & Bedard, the leading counsel in the Riel trial, has returned to Montreal from Quebec, and is busily engaged in preparing his argument for the appeal, which will come before the Manitoba Courts early in September. The jurisdiction of Judge Richardson's Court will be called in question, and numerous authorities will be cited why the proceedings should be set aside. Mr. Fitzpatrick, in conversation this morning, expressed himself as confident that the appeal would succeed, and Riel would not be hanged.

Gen. McGregor and Major Nicholson have left Simla, India, to form an entrenchment camp in the Pisheen Valley and construct a military road to the banks of the Helmund.

Smallpox In Montreal.

How the Disease is Spreading and How it was Imported.

MONTREAL, Aug. 17.—This city is at present suffering from a severe epidemic of smallpox. The number of cases is estimated at 1,000 and the disease is spreading rapidly. It was imported here nearly five months ago from Chicago by two Pullman car conductors, who were treated in an hospital and nursed by the nuns. The number of deaths recorded is 120. This month there were as many as forty-five The great obstacle in checking it is the opposition of the large majority of the French Canadian doctors to vaccination. The health authorities are doing all in their power to arrest the epidemic, but the French population will not heed instructions that are deemed for their benefit. The clergy are beginning to speak from the pulpits in favor of vaccination. The civic hospital is overfull, and new extensions are in progress.

Chapter VIII—Continued.

But given that a man may dream the same dream twice, perhaps three times, there is no record of his dreaming it as often as he willed. Yet this was my case. Again I took Pauline's hand, and, after a few moments' waiting, I felt the same strange sensation and saw the same awful sight. Not once, not twice, but many times did this occur, until, skeptical as I was, as even I am now in such matters, I could only believe that in some mysterious way I was actually gazing on the very sight which had met the girl's eyes when memory, perhaps mercifully, fled from her, and reason was left impaired.

It was only when our hands were in contact that the scene came before me. This fact strengthened my theory. I felt then—I feel now, it is the true one. What peculiar mental or physical organization can have brought about such an effect, I am unable to say. Call it cataleptic, clairvoyant, anything you will, but it was as I relate.

Again and again I took Pauline's hand, and as I held it looked into that brilliantly lighted room.

Like the motionless figures in a tableau vivant, again and again, without a change of attitude or expression, I saw Ceneri, Macari, and the man in the background looking at their victim. The appearance of the last named I studied very closely. Even with the agony of death on his face I could see he was supremely handsome. His must have been a face that women love to look upon, and even through the horror of the vision, a painful thought came to me as I wondered what might have been his relations with the girl who saw him suddenly struck down.

Who had struck him? Without a doubt Macari, who, as I said, was standing nearest him, in the attitude of one expecting an attack. His hand might just have quitted the dagger hilt. His downward stroke had driven the blade so deeply into the heart that death and the blow were all but simultaneous. This was what Pauline saw, what perhaps she was seeing now, and what, by some strange power, she was able to show me as one shows another a picture!

Ever since that night I have wondered how I found the presence of mind to sit there and repeatedly call up, by the aid of that senseless girl by my side, that phantasmagoria. It must have been the burning desire to fathom the mysteries of that long past night, the wish to learn exactly what shock had disarranged my wife's intellect, the indignation I felt at the cowardly murder, and the hope of bringing the criminals to justice, which gave me the strength to produce and reproduce that scene until I was satisfied that I knew all that dumb show could tell me, until my heart smote me for letting Pauline lie so long in her present state.

Then I wrapped her cloak around her, raised her in my arms and bore her from the room, down the stairs to the door. The hour was not late; I soon, by the aid of a passer-by, summoned a cab, and in a very short time reached home, and laid her, still insensible, upon her bed.

Whatever strange power she had possessed of communicating her thoughts to me, it ceased as soon as we were outside of that fatal house. Now and hereafter I could hold her hand, but no dream, vision or hallucination followed the act.

This is the one thing I cannot explain—the mystery at which I hinted when I commenced my tale. I have related what happened; if my bare word is insufficient to win credence, I must be content on this one point to be disbelieved.

CHAPTER IX.

A BLACK LIE.

Having placed the poor girl in Priscilla's motherly hands, I fetched the best doctor I could think of, and efforts were at once made to restore consciousness. It was long before any sign of returning animation showed itself, but, at last, she awoke. Need I say what a supreme moment that was to me?

I need not give details of that return to life. After all, it was but a half return, and brought fresh terrors in its train. When morning dawned it found Pauline raving with what I prayed was but the delirium of fever.

The doctor told me her state was a most critical one. There was hope for her life, but no certainty of saving it. It was during those days of anxiety that I learned how much I loved my unhappy girl. How grateful I should be if she were given back to me, even as I had always known her.

Her wild fevered words cut me to the heart. Sometimes in English, in soft Italian, she called on some one; spoke words of deep love and sorrow; gave vent to expressions of fond endearment. These were succeeded by cries of grief, and it seemed as if shudders of fear passed over her.

For me there was no word; no look of recognition. I, who would have given worlds to hear my name spoken once, during her delirium, with an expression of love, was but a stranger at her bedside.

Whom was it she called for and lamented? Who was the man she and I had seen slain? I soon learned—and if my informant spoke the truth, he had, in so doing, dealt me a blow from which I should never rally.

It was Macari who struck it. He called on me the day after Pauline and I had visited the house. I would not see him then. My plans were not formed. For the time I could think of nothing save my wife's danger. But two days afterward, when he again called, I gave orders for him to be admitted.

I shuddered as I took the hand I dared not yet refuse him, although in my own mind I was certain that a murderer's fingers were clasped round my own. Perhaps the very fingers which had once closed on my throat. Yet, with all I knew, I doubted whether I could bring him to justice.

Unless Pauline recovered the evidence I could bring would be of no weight. Even the victim's name was unknown to me. Before the accusation would lie his remains must be found and identified. It was hopeless to think of punishing the murderer, now that more than three years had elapsed since the crime.

Besides—was he Pauline's brother?

Brother or not, I would unmask him. I would show him that the crime was no longer a secret; that an outsider knew every detail. I would tell him this in the hope that his future would be haunted with the dread of a just vengeance overtaking him.

I knew the name of the street to which Pauline had led me. I had noticed it as we drove from it a few nights ago, and the reason of my drunken guide's mistake was apparent. It was Horace street. My conductor had confounded Walpole and Horace in his drink-muddled brain.

On what a slight thread the whole course of a life hangs!

Macari had heard of Pauline's illness and delirium. He was as tenderly solicitous in his inquiries as a brother should be. My replies were cold and brief. Brother or not, he was answerable for everything.

Presently he changed the subject. "I scarcely like to trouble you at such a time, but I should be glad to know if you are willing to join me, as I suggested, in a memorial to Victor Emmanuel?"

"I am not. There are several things I must have explained first."

He bowed politely; but I saw his lips close tightly for a moment.

"I am quite at your service," he said.

"Very well. Before all I must be satisfied that you are my wife's brother."

He raised his thick dark eyebrows and tried to smile.

"That is easily done. Had poor Ceneri been with us, he would have vouched for it."

"But he told me differently."

"Ah, he had his reasons. No matter, I can bring plenty of other persons."

"Then, again," I said, looking him full in the face and speaking very slowly, "I must know why you murdered a man three years ago in a house in Horace street."

Whichever the fellow felt—fear or rage—the expression of his face was that of blank astonishment. Not, I knew, the surprise of innocence, but of wonder that the crime should be known. For a moment his jaw dropped and he gaped at me in silence.

Then he recovered. "Are you mad, Mr. Vaughan?" he cried.

"On the 20th of August, 186—, at No. —Horace street, you stabbed here, to the heart, a young man who was sitting at the table. Dr. Ceneri was in the room at the time, also another man with a scar on his face."

He attempted no evasion. He sprang to his feet with features convulsed with rage. He seized my arm. For a moment I thought he meant to attack me, but found he only wanted to scan my face attentively. I did not shrink from his inspection. I hardly thought he would recognize me; so great a change does blindness make in a face.

But he knew me. He dropped my arm and stamped his foot in fury.

"Fools! Idiots!" he hissed. "Why did they not let me do the work thoroughly!"

He walked once or twice up and down the room, and then with regained composure stood in front of me.

"You are a great actor, Mr. Vaughan," he said, with coolness and cynicism which appalled me. "You deceived even me, and I am very suspicious."

"You do not even deny the crime, you villain?"

He shrugged his shoulders. "Why should I, to an eye-witness? To others I will deny it fast enough. Besides, as you are interested in the matter, there is no occasion to do so."

"I am interested!"

"Certainly; as you married my sister! Now, my fine fellow! my gay bridegroom! my dear brother-in-law! I will tell you why I killed that man and what I meant by my words to you at Geneva."

His air of bitter, callous mockery, as he spoke these words made me dread what was to come. My hands were tingling to throw him from the room.

"That man—I shall not for obvious reasons tell you his name—was Pauline's lover. Translate 'lover' into Italian—into what the word drudo signifies in that language—then you will understand my meaning. We, on our mother's side, have noble blood in our veins—blood which brooks no insult. He was Pauline's, your wife's lover, I say again. He had no wish to marry her, and so Ceneri and I killed him—killed him in London—even in her presence. As I told you once before, Mr. Vaughan, it is well to marry a woman who cannot recall the past."

I made no reply. So hideous a statement. I simply rose and walked toward him. He saw my purpose written in my face. "Not here," he said hastily, and moving away from me; "what good can it do here—a vulgar scuffle between two gentlemen? No; on the Continent—anywhere, meet me, and I will show you how I hate you."

He spoke well, the self-possessed villain! What good could it do? An unseemly struggle, in which I could scarcely hope to kill him; and Pauline the while perhaps upon the point of death!

"Go," I cried, "murderer and coward! Every word you have ever spoken to me has been a lie, and because you hate me, you have to-day told me the greatest lie of all. Go; save yourself from the gallows by flight."

He gave me a look of malicious triumph and left me. The air in the room seemed purer now that he no longer breathed it.

Then I went to Pauline's room, and sitting by her bed heard her parched lips ever and ever calling in English or Italian on some one she loved. Heard them beseeching and warning, and knew that her wild words were addressed to the man whom Macari averred he had slain because he was the lover of his sister—my wife!

The villain lied! I knew he lied. Over and over again I told myself it was a black, slanderous lie—that Pauline was as pure as an angel. But, as I strove to comfort myself with these assertions, I knew that, lie as it was, until I could prove it such, it would rankle in my heart; would be ever with me; would grow until I mistook it for truth; would give me not a moment's rest or peace, until it made me curse the day when Kenyon led me inside that old church to see "the fairest sight of all."

Riverside Park.

A grand base ball match will be played on August 19th, between the Clippers, of Hamilton, champions of the Dominion of Canada, and the Peterborough Club. Game to commence at 2.30 p.m. All admirers of base ball should attend, as this will be one of the best games ever played in Peterborough. Tickets, gentlemen, 25c.; ladies, 10c.

Prof.'s Weather Promises.

The following forecast of the weather for this district for the 24 hours from 1 a. m. to-day, is received from the Toronto Meterological office :—South and west winds, mostly fair; very warm weather, with local showers and thunderstorms.

The Cow Nuisance.

The residents of the northern part of the town still have reason to complain of the cow nuisance. In some parts a lawn cannot be left ten minutes without a sentinel at the gate, without being invaded by predatory cows. The by-law prohibiting the running at large of bovines should be enforced properly or repealed. Let us have either prohibition or free trade in the destruction of private property by vagrant bovines.

Range and Rifle.

Peterborough will be well represented at the Ontario Rifle Association, to be held in Toronto, beginning next Monday and continuing the week. The following local deadshots will attend :—Messrs. W. H. Hill, Geo. Fitzgerald, D. Cameron, R. Smith, Maxwell Dennistoun, F. Hall and J. Foley (Norwood). These gentlemen are practising diligently and may be expected to bother the bullseye at the coming contest in the Queen City to a very creditable extent. There will be a practice meet at the ranges this afternoon and another next Thursday.

Unreasonably Hard.

At the recent meeting of the Ontario Teachers' Association the nature of the history paper for the Entrance Examinations was referred to in condemnatory terms. The paper was unreasonably difficult, consisting as it did of abstract questions far beyond the capacity of the candidates, and would be considered hard for candidates for first-class certificates. Many teachers wonder why well qualified pupils failed to pass the examinations. The History paper was the adamantine rock on which they were wrecked. Some examiners are as unreasonable in the preparation of papers for junior candidates as a monthly nurse would be who would dish up corn beef and cabbage for a three months' infant. Inconsistent caterers, they concoct questions many of which they themselves could not answer, without a stack of books of reference at their elbows.

A Good Week's Business.

Not the least among Peterborough's business interests is the carriage building industry, and among the busiest and most industrious of those engaged in that craft is the firm of Fitzgerald and Stanger, on Brock and Water streets. This firm have, during the past week, finished and turned out a vehicle for every day, among which were the following: A handsome family top phaeton, neatly trimmed with blue cloth; an open family phaeton for Dr. King, a buggy for Mr. Brennan of Norwood, with handsome carmine running gear and black body, and two strong handsome delivery wagons, one of which will be used by Mr. J. Grady, the well known butcher, and the other by a farmer at Westwood. The remaining vehicles are a top buggy with the Atkinson spring gear, in which Mr. A. Donnelly will ride around, and a very neat open buggy with Timkins side-bar gear for Mr. Thomas Howden. These buggies and waggons are all characterized by the excellent workmanship that has secured for the firm so large a patronage, and reflect credit not only on the manufacturers, but the town in which they are made. The painting on these vehicles is a notable feature of their excellence. Where it presents any extent of flat surface the only comparison suitable is the smooth face of a plate glass mirror.

OUR WATER PRIVILEGES.

A Reporter's Ramble Along the Mill Race and What He Saw.

A Mill to be Remodelled and a Factory Erected.

A reporter of the EXAMINER, while taking a walk yesterday afternoon in the northern part of the town, happened to stroll down to the dam, and as he was standing on the bridgeway that crosses it, watching the impetuous rush of the turbid waters, which, seething and foaming angrily, dashed madly on through the waste weir, Mr. T. G. Hazlitt, the energetic and affable manager of the Dickson estate, happened along.

"Good evening, Mr. Hazlitt," said the reporter, "how are things along the race?"

"Oh!" replied Mr. Hazlitt, "we are not doing a great deal just now; but come along, and I will show you around a bit."

The reporter willingly responded and was first conducted to the saw mill, where, for a place in which "not a great deal" was being done, things seemed

DECIDEDLY LIVELY,

the whirl and hum of the busy machinery raising a deafening roar. The endless chains, which moving on and on with the perpetuity of endless motion, seize with relentless grip on the logs as they lie quietly floating in the placid basin, and slowly, but surely, drag them up the slides till they are laid in position near the saws, were in full motion. The rapidly revolving circular saws, that, with a whirr and a buzz, rip their way through a log with lightning-like speed, were turning off clean-looking, sweet-smelling pine planks at a rate that kept the men who carried them away busily at work; while the less rapid gang saws were more steadily, but not less surely, eating their iron way through huge logs, taking four planks at a time off each side of them. The lath cutter and shingle machine were turning out their quantum as fast as their attendants could gather and carry them away, and at another end of the building a small circular saw was with geometrical precision squaring the ends of the newly cut boards, and by the aid of endless chains carrying them to the car on which they were to be rolled off to the yard, there to be piled to dry. Everyone seemed busy, yet none had more than he knew how to manage, the work going on with the regularity and

PRECISION OF CLOCKWORK.

A visit was next paid to the yard where a number of men were engaged in unloading the newly sawed logs from the tram cars, and laying them on the lofty piles of lumber that from a distance suggest the idea of a wooden city. A look was next taken into the electric engine house, and an examination made of the shining, but mysterious looking dynamos and other electrical apparatus.

"By the way, Mr. Hazlitt," said the scribe, "I suppose that you have heard that an agitation is being made to get the electric lights on George street kept burning all night?

"Yes," was the reply, "but I am afraid I could hardly afford to keep a double staff on for the sake of keeping four lights burning a few hours, and that's what would have to be done. You see, at 25c a light per night, I would get just one dollar, and it would cost four times that amount to keep the men on, to say nothing of the wear and tear of the machinery. Perhaps by and by when Peterborough gets bigger,

AS IT SURELY WILL,

and burns more lights, we may be able to do it."

A walk was next taken along the head race, and in reply to a remark of the reporter's that it was a magnificent water power, Mr. Hazlitt stated that there was a vast amount of power at present not utilized, and conducted him to a spot just below Clegg's Ontario Mill. There two piers, 300 feet long, are in course of construction, the object being the formation of a tail race. Near by excavating is going on for the flumes, 36x15 feet, which will receive from the head race the water, which will have a head and fall of 20 feet, to drive two Leffel wheels, designed to drive the machinery of the Ontario grist mills, which are to be converted into roller mills of the most approved modern description. Close by a of clapboard, with stone basement, is being erected, four stories high, which is to fill a want long felt by small manufacturers: a first-class power with a comparatively limited space. To do this the building will be divided into apartments, each with shafting and power, which will be rented to different persons.

The reporter now bade Mr. Hazlitt good day, and following the path along the head race, returned to town past Brodie's and Wilson's mills, which, in common with all the property along the Dickson estate, are being treated to a liberal coating of paint, and thinking if not much was doing along the race, now what must it be like when they are busy.

Central Exhibition.

There will be a meeting of the Central Exhibition Directors on Saturday, 29th of August, when arrangements for the coming exhibition will be considered and fully matured.

A Big Dose.

The indications are that the cholera will strike this continent this year or next, and from the preparations made, as implied in the supply of drug stores with which the town is being favoured, it is probable that Peterborough may also be visited. When the two new establishments are opened, we shall have seven drug stores doing business in the town. A sceptical "exchange" fiend, who is making an over-shoulder survey of the construction of this paragraph, suggests that the possible adoption of the Scott Act explains the boom in 'pothecary shops.

ATHLETICS.

An Explanation.

By one of those inevitable blunders, which the printer alone can explain, though in the present case he could not do it, our remarks on certain affairs athletic in yesterday's paper, were mixed and muddled in a most perplexing manner. Our base ball friends doubtless understood, however, that in the comment on that subject, Lindsay was meant where Peterborough was printed, and friends of the Peterborough Amateur Athletic Association will comprehend that, strong admirers as we are of the association, we hardly expect it to reflect any credit on our sister town, Lindsay.

The Diamond.

THE TEAM WHO WILL FACE THE CLIPPERS TO-MORROW.

The following are the players of the Peterborough club who will to-morrow afternoon try conclusions with the redoubtable league nine, the Clippers, of Hamilton :—P. J. Sullivan, p.; F. J. O'Neil, c.; W. Metheral, 1st b.; A. Campbell, 2nd b.; W. H. Dayman, s. s.; H. Dunn, 3rd b.; C. Sanderson, centre; F. Cameron, r. f., and A. Moore, l. f.

The Clippers yesterday defeated the Torontos by a score of 12 to 3, and a great game may be expected. The home nine turn out for practice to-night and will play a game against the remainder of the club.

A Dual Defeat for the Torontos.

The Torontos seem to be in hard luck. They were beaten by the Hamilton Clippers yesterday morning to the tune of 12 to 3, which of itself was bad enough, but in the afternoon the Londons completed their discomfiture by administering a coat of whitewash to them.

The Legal-Mercantile Game.

The ball game between Members of the legal and mercantile fraternities announced for to-day, has been postponed till Friday, some of the players not being able to take the field sooner.

Cricket.

The Ottawa Cricket Club, who were expected to have played here during the present month, have written Mr. J. E. Hammond, Secretary of the Peterborough club, saying that it will be impossible for them to play before September. They will probably come here about the 20th of that month.

Lacrosse.

The members of the Peterborough club turned out for practice last evening in Riverside park. There was a large attendance and in spite of the rough nature of the ground, some good practice was had. The decision in the Orillia-Beaverton championship dispute will be be given to-morrow, and the boys are beginning to get on their mettle.

Organ Recital.

An organ recital will be held in St. Paul's church on the evening of Thursday, August 27th, by Professor Parker. In addition to other selections, Mr. Parker will, on this occasion, render a musical composition of his own. A musical treat may be expected.

Smith Street Bridge.

The Town Council paid a visit of inspection to the Smith street bridge this morning, and, after looking it over thoroughly, decided to have it put in order at once. The town engineer has accordingly been instructed to prepare the necessary plans, and the work, which will be undertaken by Mr. Crowley, proceeded with at once.

Justice's Justice.

Thomas Ritchie, who was arrested for being drunk and disorderly on Saturday evening, was again in attendance at the Police Court to-day, charged with drunkenness. An appeal from his mother, coupled with a promise on the part of prisoner to do better in future secured his release, much to the disgust of P. C. McGinity, who arrested him. The case of A. Deoman against A. D. Faucher for non-payment of wages again came up. Faucher again failed to put in an appearance and judgment was given for the plaintiff, $23.48.

PANTS.

How often does it happen that the general comfort and happiness of man depends on a good fitting pair of pants. Nothing will ruffle a man's temper more than to find when he tries on his latest new pair of pants that they are either too long or too short; that they pinch him so bad in one place that he dare not stoop, and are so large and baggy around the waist and knees that he is afraid he might be taken for the departed "Smith."

A SAFE THING TO DO

If you want to avoid all troubles and get a good fitting pair of pants that will feel as comfortable as a woollen mit, leave your order at the

What We Would Like to See.

Baseball unaccompanied by betting.

The man who sold Percy Miles' dog.

That "ball game" between the bankers and telegraphers.

Railway crossings kept clear of trains.

Mr. Preston elected for East Durham.

The river kept clear of sawdust.

And a few more of the abusive roughs who frequent the streets arrested and fined.

What they are Saying.

We are going to make three runs.—The Peterboroughs.

Yes, we'll let you have that many.—The Clippers.

Oh! what a day we are having.—The True Blues.

I'll be glad when the schools open.—The mothers.

We won't though.—The children.

Nor will we.—The teachers.

I'll stop these blackguards from abusing me.—P. C. McGinity.

We want to have a shy at the bankers.—The telegraphers.

Base ball is not the game we play.—The bankers.

What We may Expect.

The marriage before long of a certain bachelor of musical proclivities.

A crowd in the Court House Park to hear the band on Friday evening.

Councillor Rutherford to ask for more hose at the next Council meeting.

Another organ recital in September.

The clippers to say the Peterborough's play pretty well for an "agricultural team."

And to let them down easy.

Outsiders who make bets on the game to get badly left.

A lively time at the race course to-morrow afternoon.

And some one to be sold badly.

Educational Items.

Teachers May Clip This Out.

The following in respect to holidays has been taken from the School Regulations:—

The public school year shall consist of two terms; the first shall begin on the 3rd day of January and end on the first Friday of July, the second shall begin on the third Monday of August and end on the 23rd day of December. Every Saturday, statutory holiday, and every day proclaimed a holiday by the municipal authorities in which the school section or division is situated shall be a holiday in the public schools. In cities, towns and incorporated villages, the holidays are the same as prescribed for high schools, viz: High schools shall open on the seventh day of January and close on the Thursday before Easter. They shall re-open on the first Tuesday after Easter, and close on the first Friday of July. They shall re-open on the last Monday of August and close on the 22nd day of December.

The Inspector has received new daily registers for use in all the public schools after the holidays.

The Minister of Education has procured Scripture, lessons and forms of prayer for every school day in the year.

Bishop Jamot in Rochester.

Yesterday, his lordship Rt. Rev. Bishop Jamot, at the French Canadian Convention, delivered a much appreciated address in concluding which he said "My first and last advice to you is to urge you * * * to keep your language which will be the best means of bringing you back to your own, the beloved Canadian cradle of the French Canadian race."

Outside Appreciation.

The carriage work turned out by Messrs. Porter Bros., from its excellence of construction and finish is not only appreciated and demanded at home, but its reputation has extended abroad. The firm has recently shipped a fine delivery wagon, made to the order of Mr. C. Rounsall, granite and marble works, Bowmanville. It is a neat and well made vehicle, highly creditable to the firm producing it. The carriage tops of the firm are a first-class specialty.

Scott Act.

To the Editor of the DAILY EXAMINER:

SIR.—I notice by the dailies that several ladies and gentlemen have arrived from Toronto to lecture on the benefits of the Scott Act. Will you please explain if it will be such a benefit to Peterborough, why do these parties not get it carried in Toronto? Up to date there has been nothing done to even try to get it carried there. Does it not seem like a desire to monopolize all the trade of the county towns and bring it to the cities. For people will go where they can get the best accommodation. Now Mr. Editor, we have the smartest town in the Dominion, and are we to be impeded in our progress by a lot of lecturers sent here, who are paid by the merchants, butchers and hotel-keepers of Toronto to mislead our people and bring trade to their city?

Yours, etc.,

THE LOVE LETTER.

Miss Orinthia Brown set down her teacup with an emphasis that made all the china rattle. And little Mrs. Meeker jumped nervously at the sound.

"I never heard anything so ridiculous in all my life," said Miss Brown, derisively. "Gilbert Mott in love with Georgia Arlington! Why, she's a mere doll, with big blue eyes and pink cheeks and yellow curls."

"She's very fascinating in her manners," Mrs. Meeker ventured to remark.

"Oh, pshaw!" was Miss Orinthia's contemptuous comment. "And you really think he's in love with her?"

"Yes, I must say that I think so."

"Ah-h-h" said Orinthia, meaningly. "If I only dared to tell you all!"

"Dear me!" said Mrs. Meeker, eagerly; "what do you mean?"

"Nothing," said Miss Brown, with a nod of her head. "He walked home from church last night with me—didn't he?"

"Yes, but——"

"He stayed on my side of the room all the time we were decorating the fair rooms with evergreens, didn't he?"

"Yes, but that was because——"

"And—but never mind, never mind!" said Miss Orinthia, mysteriously. "Time will show! Georgia Arlington, indeed—why she's nothing but a child—a mere schoolgirl! I know better!"

"Do tell me, Miss Orinthia," pleaded Mrs. Meeker. "Is he really engaged to you?"

Miss Orinthia pursed up her lips, drooped her eyelids with a manner that was wonderfully eloquent, but she would commit herself no further!

"Let's go upstairs and finish dressing those china dolls for the lucky-bag," said Miss Brown. "We shall get more money out of the lucky-bag than anything else, and we must be sure and have it well furnished!"

While the tea-drinking ceremonial had been going on in the lower part of the mansion of Mrs. Meeker, quite a different chain of circumstances was transpiring above stairs. Mr. Gilbert Mott, who had been inveigled into the snares of the Ladies' Fair, nolens volens, had come early to help in the last preparations, and, walking up to the workroom, had surprised a lovely blue-eyed lassie in the occupation of filling sundry cones of bright-hued paper with sugar plums and French bon-bons.

Georgia Arlington shook back her sunny curls and blushed like a June rose-bud, as she started up.

"Don't go, Miss Arlington, please!" pleaded Gilbert, himself not unembarrassed. But Georgia muttered something about a roll of ribbon which she had forgotten, and fluttered past him ere he could remonstrate further.

Gilbert looked after her, with a whimsical expression of despair on his countenance.

"Now, why does she run away from me like that?" he said to himself. "Probably because she knows it tantalises me! But I'll be even with her yet—if she won't let me tell her how dearly I love her, I'll write it to her!"

And heedless of the neglected piles of cedar-sprigs and princess-pine, yet waiting to be wrought into garlands, he sat down to the table and seizing pen and ink began a passionate billet doux after the following fashion:

"MY OWN PRECIOUS DARLING:—Why are you so cold and cruel to me? Why will you not let me tell you in words what you must so often have read in my eyes—the story of my heart's devotion? For I love you, and have loved you, and shall love you to the world's end, and you must have seen it for yourself during the last few days that we have been working together for the church fair! Yet you will not give me a word or a glance of encouragement!

"Is this right, my ruthless queen of hearts? But I am determined that you shall tell me when we meet again whether I may hope or not! Until then, sweet one, I am, half in despair, half hopeful,

Yours, ever and unalterably,
"G. M."

He had just scribbled off this unstudied effusion when the sound of footsteps on the stairs chased away the soft shadows of his love dream, and he had just time to slip the paper under a leaf of Norway spruce twigs, when Mrs. Meeker and Miss Orinthia Brown entered.

"At work so soon!" cried the latter, archly. "Isn't he industrious, Mrs. Meeker?"

"Yes," said Gilbert, hypocritically. "I'm at work already!"

So he was, but not exactly for the fair.

He watched nervously for an opportunity to possess himself of the precious sheet of paper, without observation, but Miss Orinthia, doubtless prompted thereto by some baleful evil spirit, hovered around the spruce boughs like a middle-aged turtle-dove, and effectually warded off his designs. And presently he was borne downstairs in the popular current to open some boxes of donations, which had just arrived by parcels delivery.

"I can easily come back to get it when they are busy cackling over the new things," he thought.

But—fit illustration this of the futility of all human plans—when he came rejoicing back some twenty minutes or so later, the sheet was gone.

Gone, leaving no trace or vestige behind—gone, wholly and entirely!

"I believe there has been some superhuman agency at work!" thought our bewildered hero, as he tumbled over the chaotic contents on the table in vain.

But Mr. Mott was wrong. The agency had been exceedingly human—to offer, in fact, than mischievous little Billy Arlington, come up in search of stray prizes for the famous lucky-bag which had been temporarily delivered into his hands. Cornucopias, pin-cushions, Rimmel's scent-bags, needle-books he pounced on alike, and perceiving a sheet of pink paper, written on, he crumpled it into an old envelope, directed "Miss Orinthia A. Brown," which lay beyond.

"What larks it will be!" thought the incorrigible Billy. "Some of the girls 'll think they've got a love-letter, and how mad they'll be when they find it ain't nothing but one of Stapley's [illegible] or crochet patterns!"

And away rushed Master Billy, little recking of the mischief he was unwittingly working to the cause of true love!

The evening of the fair came—and the pretty rooms, made still prettier by paper roses and evergreen garlands, were crowded with the brave, the fair, and some that were neither one nor the other. Georgia Arlington, presiding at one of the tables, looked lovely enough to drive half a dozen young men distracted, instead of one, and Miss Orinthia, in a rustling slate-colored silk dress, went about like an ominous leaf in a high wind. The lucky-bag circulated from hand to hand, carrying, as is the wont of these institutions, a little current of merriment and laughter in its wake. Georgia drew a cigar-case, Mr. Mott became the proprietor of a rag-doll, and Miss Orinthia Brown drew—a letter, addressed to herself.

Gilbert Mott, leaning against the doorway, saw Miss Brown hurrying up to Georgia and displaying her prize with malicious glee; while Georgia colored and bit her lips, and looked ready to cry, and feigned a merry little ripple of laughter, all in one and the same breath.

"Why don't that horrid old maid keep away from Georgia Arlington!" thought our discontented hero. "She looks like a dried up bunch of raisins beside a cluster of blooming Isabella grapes."

And, watching his opportunity, he slipped through the crowd and edged up to the table where Georgia was selling pin-cushions and tape trimmings at an exorbitant price.

"Georgia!" he whispered softly, "Georgia!"

But she turned her head haughtily away.

"Please to excuse me, Mr. Mott," she said, coolly.

While Gilbert was staring at her in amazement, a hand was slipped through his arm, and Miss Orinthia Brown drew him gently away.

"Where are you going?" he demanded, rather unwillingly.

"Just outside the door, one minute," whispered Miss Orinthia, falteringly. "It is not in the tumult of a common crowd that such words should be spoken!"

"What words? I haven't an idea what you mean!" cried the young man.

Orinthia drew him into the hall, her head drooped on his shoulder.

"Yes," she faltered, "yes! How could you for a moment doubt it!"

"Doubt what? Excuse me, Miss Brown, but I think your wits are forsaking you," said Gilbert Mott, striving to extricate himself from the damsel's grasp.

"Gilbert, would you, then, be false to me?" sobbed Orinthia, with the dawning symptoms of hysterics.

"If False to you!" echoed our hero. "Miss Brown, will you be so good as to tell me at once, and plainly, what you are talking about?"

Orinthia Brown's sallow cheeks reddened—her eyes sparkled ominously, as she drew from her pocket the precious missive.

"Do you mean to say, sir, that you didn't write this letter?" she demanded.

Gilbert took the letter and scrutinized it closely.

"Yes, of course, I wrote the letter!"

"Then, dearest ——"

"Stop, though," he interrupted, frantically. "It wasn't to you!"

"Not to me?"

"No. Do you suppose I want to marry you!"

Miss Orinthia uttered a shrill shriek—but the next moment she was alone! Gilbert Mott had vanished.

For the matter was growing serious now. If Georgia were to be won, she must be won at once, before Fate conspired with any other old maid to deprive him of her coveted love.

"Georgia," he said, planting himself resolutely beside her. "I have got something I wish to say to you."

"You had a great deal better say it to your beloved Miss Orinthia," said Georgia, tossing her flaxen curls.

"But she isn't my beloved Miss Orinthia," cried Gilbert.

"I suppose you will be denying your own handwriting next," said Georgia, indignantly. "But it's of no use; I saw the letter myself."

"But, Georgia, the letter was written to you."

"Then," said Georgia, brightening up a little, "how did she get it?"

"That's just what I can't comprehend myself," said Gilbert; "but one thing I am very certain of—I love you, and you alone, and I won't leave you until you tell me whether the love is returned."

And he did not; neither was it necessary for him to stay there very long.

But to this day nobody, save Billy, the irrepressible, knows exactly how Georgia's letter came into Miss Orinthia Brown's hands.

"STAND EASY."

We have heard of the "charge of Batoche," till the average newspaper reader must be as sick of the name as our Yankee cousins must be of the name of Grant. After General Middleton's rather non-committal explanation of the charge, the goose quill warriors, who have been wadding the newspapers with accounts of the memorable charge, in which each took the glory to himself or his corps, should "stand easy." It is not surprising that comparatively green volunteer officers should so far forget themselves as to lug family matters, so to speak, into newspaper controversy, but it would have been thought that Col. Von Straubenzie and others of his ilk, should know more of the niceties of military etiquette than to enter a newspaper squabble over matters that discipline would suggest should not be discussed, at least publicly. Those who took part in the charge deserve the highest credit for a most gallant and dashing onslaught. This all are willing to accord them, but they do not add to the lustre of their laurels by squabbling like school boys, who tumble over each other in their mad rush to reach home and be first to give to the home circle the details of some local scandal. It was certainly infra dig for officers to enter into the journalistic scolds that they have done in reference to the charge of Batoche.

THE COMING OF THE CHOLERA.

Spain is suffering from this terrible scourge in a manner immeasurably intensified by the filthy habits and poverty-stricken condition of the poorer classes. No effort of the fancy can paint a picture of the lamentable nature of the visitation in any degree approaching the horrible reality. People dropping dead in the streets, the dying tumbled, still breathing, into trenches, the dead lying unburied, fear paralyzing business and destroying the feelings of humanity and ignoring even the claims of close kinship, are among the milder revelations of the condition of things in the plague-stricken districts. What affects us in Canada more closely is the steady and relentless march of the plague northwards. It has passed from Spain into France, and even Paris is striving to bar its gates against its entrance. From Paris to London is only a step. If it gets a foot-hold in England its transmission to America with the facility and frequency of communication now existing is only a matter to be, of course, expected and dreaded. It has also another easy road to this continent. The communication between Spain and Cuba is frequent, and between Cuba and American ports there is also frequent intercourse, so that we are threatened with cholera through two avenues. It is the part of wisdom to prepare for what seems inevitable. The lesson should not be forgotten that where filthy habits abound among the people, and unsanitary conditions exist, the ravages of the scourge are much more intense and fatal, and that, on the other hand, the utmost cleanliness, both personal and public, reduces the danger to a minimum. Preparations to keep out the cholera are well enough in their way, but it is wiser to have the sanitary conditions of cities and towns such as to discourage the pestilence in its efforts to get a foot hold. It is necessary to have the town in the highest state of cleanliness, and the most active exertions on the part of the health authorities are indicated. The better the town is prepared in the way of perfect cleanliness, the better it is qualified to resist the scourge if it should come. It may not reach this point, but if it comes to this continent, it is hard to see how, with the daily communication between widely separated points of country, resulting from activity in commercial circles, it can be prevented from spreading. Without being unduly alarmed, it is wise to be ready to the best of our ability for a possible, and, as things look now, a probable visitation of cholera to this continent next season if not this.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

It is noticed with pleasure that the Mail since Mr. Martin J. Griffin, was "dropped," as the World remarks, "as one would drop a puppy in a mill pond," has greatly improved in tone. Why, in Tuesday's edition Mr. Preston was actually spoken of as the Reform candidate in East Durham instead of the "unspeakable Grit," or "semi-civilized partisan" candidate, "sadly in need of a bath."

Mr. Christopher Robinson "let the cat out of the bag" at the Riel trial. The counsel for the defence applied for an order for the production of papers found in Riel's possession at Batoche, and Mr. Robinson replied that these could not be produced, as they were regarded as state documents, and that many of them necessarily implicated others. Exactly. There's the rub. The "others" to be "implicated" mean the Dominion Government and officials, and it is no wonder that in self defence the suppression of these documents was agreed upon.

At a recent meeting of the council of the Six Nation Indians, Grand River, it was decided by the chiefs not to have anything to do with the Franchise Bill, nor to take advantage of its provisions. This is the snub direct to Sir John, who tried to force the parliamentary franchise on them, in the hope that their ballots could be used to unseat his opponents, particularly Mr. Paterson of South Brant. Sir John may yet prove it true that his wily instructions (to revising barristers) "being taught, may yet return to plague their inventor."

The Indian Trials.

Examination of Pound-Maker's Son in-Law—The Chief's Damning Letter to Riel.

REGINA, N. W. T., Aug 17.—When the court opened this morning before Colonel Richardson, Pound-Maker was placed in the dock. He wore a stoical look of indifference, which was only changed once or twice for an expression of contempt, when his son-in-law, Robert Jefferson, gave testimony against him.

Mr. J. Beverley Robinson defended the prisoner. Mayor Scott, of Regina, opened the case for the prosecution. He said that he would produce evidence to show that Poundmaker was in command of the rebels at Cut Knife; that he assisted at the looting of Battleford; and that he commanded the attack on the teamsters at Eagle Hills.

Robert Jefferson, the prisoner's son-in-law, was the first witness. He said he did not see the fight at Cut Knife, although he was within a short distance of the field. He could not say that Pound-Maker commanded. He thought the young braves were practically in command of the camp. He was present when Pound-maker received a letter from Louis Riel telling him to capture Battleford. Witness wrote a reply dictated by Pound-Maker and some of the councilmen. He could not swear that Pound-Maker authorized him to sign his name to the letter.

Other witnesses were examined and the court adjourned till to-morrow, when Pound-Maker's trial will likely be concluded.

Crop Prospects.

We reprint from the summary of the report of the Ontario Bureau of Industries the following, based on the returns made by 1090 correspondents on August 5th:—

BARLEY.

The barley crop of this season, with the exception of a few localities, has generally been heavy and well matured; but with the great bulk of the crop the color of the grain—which so largely regulates its market value—has been materially damaged by the storm of the 3rd inst. At that date barley cutting was not more than half through; and it was only in the earlier localities, and generally in the case of fields that had been sown and reaped quite early, that any portion of the crop was under cover. Probably not far from three-fourths of all the barley in the Province was out in that storm, either in the shock or standing ripe and ready to cut. In consequence of this misfortune the sample will be more or less dark in color; but for it the return would have been satisfactory in every way. The crop in nearly every district was exceptionally heavy and long in the straw, and the heads were large and plump. Not more than one or two complaints are made of the barley being short in the straw—a circumstance rather unusual in the case of this crop. The only unfavourable reports of note come from portions of the counties of York, Ontario, Durham and Northumberland, were a week or two of excessively hot and dry weather, occurring just at the time the grain was forming, caused it to ripen too quickly, and the berry in rather small and light in consequence. But the reported shrinkage applies to only a portion of that fine barley district, and does not seem to have been general. The reports from all parts of western Ontario are pretty uniform as to the damage inflicted by the late rain, except that in Lambton and Middlesex, where harvesting appears to have been more forward than elsewhere, probably one-half of the crop was housed before the storm came. In all parts barley, on low and heavy soils, suffered from excess of rain, and in some cases it became lodged from too rank a growth, and in that condition it was struck with rust. Generally, the crop will bulk well; and though a very considerable portion of it may be rendered unsaleable at a profitable figure on account of discoloration, it will at least insure, in conjunction with other coarse cereals, an abundance of valuable feeding grains for the winter. As compared with last year, there is a decrease in area of nearly 100,000 acres.

OATS.

The accounts received of the oat crop are uniformly favourable from any section of the Province. Except in a few rare instances, in which local or exceptional causes have produced a deficiency, the reports give promise of a high average, though not equal on the whole to the bountiful yield of last year. The best accounts, however, are from the eastern and northern districts of the Province, where oats are one of the farmers' main sources of revenue. With oats as with all other spring crops, the season has been late; for this reason the straw is rather stunted. The dry weather of July contributed to the same result, and tended to hasten maturity; yet everywhere the heads appear to be large, well-filled and healthy. The most widespread source of complaint has been the violent wind and rain storm of the 3rd and 4th inst., which flattened and lodged the grain in many fields; yet where it was strong enough to withstand the tempest, the rain has benefitted it by promoting a better development of the heads and checking premature ripening. The only insect pest seriously complained of is the grasshopper, which in the Lake Erie and West Midland counties, as well as occasional localities elsewhere has stripped many of the stalks of their grain. Throughout Western Ontario there have also been some traces of rust and smut, but the crop has not suffered appreciably therefrom. The reports from eastern Ontario make scarcely any mention of any of these drawbacks.

Lindsay.

A passenger on the Midland train from Lindsay, which should have arrived at Toronto at 9.20 on Monday night, accidentally fell off the platform of one of the coaches while it was running at full speed about ten miles north of Unionville. The train was stopped and the unfortunate man taken up. He received a severe injury on the head, which occasioned concussion of the brain. On the arrival of the train he was sent to the hospital. He had a ticket from Lindsay to Guelph. His appearance was that of a workingman. He wore a dark coat and vest and checked trousers, and was clean shaven with the exception of a small black moustache, and was apparently twenty-eight or thirty years of age.

Chapter IX—Continued.

How could I prove the untruth? There were but two other persons in the world who knew Pauline's history—Ceneri and old Teresa. Teresa had disappeared and Ceneri was in the Siberian mines or some other living grave. Even as I thought of the old Italian woman, Macari's slander began to throw forth its first poisonous shoots. Her mysterious words, "not for love or marriage," might bear another meaning, a dishonorable meaning. And other circumstances would come to me. Ceneri's haste to get his niece married—his wish to get rid of her. Thoughts of this sort would steal into my mind until they half-maddened me.

I could bear to sit with Pauline no longer. I went out into the open air and wandered about aimlessly, until two ideas occurred to me. One was that I would go to the greatest authority on brain diseases, and consult him as to Pauline's hope of recovery—the other that I would go to Horace street and examine, by daylight, the house from top to bottom. I went first to the doctor's.

To him I told everything, saving, of course, Macari's black lie. I could see no other way to explain the case without confiding fully. I most certainly succeeded in arousing his interest. He had already seen Pauline, and knew exactly the state in which she had been. I think he believed, as many others will, all I told him except that one strange occurrence. Even this he did not scoff at, accustomed, as he was, to wild fancies and freaks of imagination. He attributed it to this cause, which was but natural. And now what comfort or hope could he give me?

"As I told you before, Mr. Vaughan," he said, "such a thing as losing the recollection of the past for a long while and then picking up the end of the thread where it fell is not altogether unprecedented. I will come and see your wife; but as the case now stands it seems to me it is an attack of brain fever, and as yet no specialist is needed. When that fever leaves her I should like to know, that I may see her. It will, I expect, leave her sane, but she will begin life again from the hour that her mind was first unhinged. You, her husband, may even be as a stranger to her. The case, I say again, is not unprecedented, but the circumstances which surround it are."

I left the doctor and walked to the agents in whose hands the house in Horace street was placed. I obtained keys and made some inquiries. I found that at the time of the murder the house had been let furnished for a few weeks to an Italian gentleman whose name was forgotten. He had paid the rent in advance, so no inquiries had been made about him. The house had been vacant for a long time. There was nothing against it except that the owner would only let it at a certain rent, which most people appeared to consider too high.

I gave my name and address and took the keys. I spent the remainder of the afternoon in searching every nook and cranny in the house, but no discovery rewarded my labor. There was, I believed, no place in which the body of a victim could have been hid—there was no garden in which it might have been buried. I took back the keys and said the house did not suit me. Then I returned home, and brooded on my grief, whilst Macari's lie ate and ate its way to my heart.

And day by day it went on working and gnawing, corroding and warping, until I was told that the crisis was over; that Pauline was out of danger; that she was herself again.

Which self? The self I had only known, or the self before that fatal night? With a beating heart I drew near to her bedside. Weak, exhausted, without strength to move or speak she opened her eyes and looked at me. It was a look of wonder, of non-recognition, but it was the look of restored reason. She knew me not. It was as the doctor had predicted. I might have been a total stranger to those beautiful eyes as they opened, gazed at me, and then reclosed themselves wearily. I went from the room with tears running down my cheeks, and at my heart a feeling of mingled joy and sorrow, hope and fear, which words will not express.

Then Macari's black lie came out from its lurking place and seized me as it were by the throat—clung to me, wrestled with me—cried, "I am true! Push me away, I am still true. The lips of a villain spoke to me, but for once he spoke the truth. If not for this, why the crime? Men do not lightly commit murder." Even then, when the moment I had prayed and longed for had come—when sense, full sense, was given back to my poor love—I was invaded, conquered and crushed to the ground by the foul lie which might be truth.

"We are strangers—she knows me not," I cried. "Let me prove that this lie is a lie, or let us be strangers forever!"

How could I prove it? How could I ask Pauline? Or asking her, how could I expect her to answer? Even if she did, would her word satisfy me? Oh, that I could see Ceneri! Villain he might be, but I felt he was not such a double-dyed villain as Macari.

Thinking thus, I formed a desperate resolve. Men are urged to do strange and desperate things when life is at stake—with me it was more than life. It was the honor, the happiness—everything, of two people!

Yes, I would do it! Mad as the scheme seemed, I would go to Siberia, and if money, perseverance, favor, or craft, could bring me face to face with Ceneri, I would wring the truth, the whole truth from his lips.

CHAPTER X.

IN SEARCH OF THE TRUTH.

Across Europe—half-way across Asia—for the sake of an hour's interview with a Russian political prisoner! It was a wild scheme, but I was determined to carry it out. If my plan was a mad one, I would, at least, insure a chance of its success by putting all the method I could in my preparations. I would not rush wildly to my journey's end and find it rendered fruitless by the stupidity or suspision of some one vested with brief authority. No; I must go armed with credentials which no one would dare to dispute. Money, one of the most important of all, I had plenty of, and was ready to use freely; but there were others which were indispensable; my first step would be to obtain these. I could go quietly and systematically to work, for it would be days before I could venture to leave Pauline. Only when all chance of danger was at an end could I begin my journey.

So during those days whilst the poor girl was gradually, but very, very slowly, regaining strength, I looked up what friends I possessed among the great people of the land, until I found one whose position was such that he could ask a favor of a far greater man than himself, and moreover, expect that it should be granted without delay. He did this for my sake with such efficacy that I received a letter of introduction to the English ambassador at St. Petersburg, and also a copy of a letter which had been forwarded him containing instructions on my behalf. Each of the letters bore an autograph which would insure every assistance being given to me. With these, and the addition of a letter of credit for a large amount on a St. Petersburg bank, I was ready to start.

But before I left, Pauline's safety and well-being during these months of absence must be considered. The difficulties this presented almost made me abandon, or, at least, postpone, the execution of my plan. Yet I knew it must be carried out to the very letter, or Macari's lie would ever stand between my wife and myself. Better I should go at once, while we were strangers; better, if Ceneri by word or silence confirmed the shameful tale, that we should never meet again.

Pauline would be left in good hands. Priscilla would do my bidding faithfully and fully. The old woman was by this time quite aware that her charge had awakened to both memory and new forgetfulness. She knew the reason why for days and days I had not even entered the room. She knew that I considered Pauline, in her present state, no more my wife than when I first met her in Turin. She knew that some mystery was attached to our relations with each other, and that I was bound upon a long journey to clear this up. She was content with this knowledge or sought to obtain no more than I chose to give her.

My instructions were minute. As soon as she well enough Pauline was to be taken to the seaside. Everything was to be done for her comfort and according to her wishes. If she grew curious she was to be told that some near relation, who was now journeying abroad, had placed her in Priscilla's hands, where she was to stay until his return. But, unless the recollection of the past few months came to her, she was to be told nothing as to her true position as my wife. Indeed, I doubted now if she was legally my wife—whether, if she wished, she might not annul the marriage by stating that at the time it took place she was not in her right mind. When I returned from my expedition—if things were right, as I told myself they must be, all would have to be begun again from the beginning.

I had ascertained that, since the departure of the fever, Pauline had said nothing about the terrible deed she had witnessed three years ago. I feared that when her health was re-established her first wish would be to make some stir in the matter. It was hard to see what she could possibly do, Macari, I learned, had left England the day after I accused him of the crime; Ceneri was out of reach. I hoped that Pauline might be induced to remain quiet until my return; and I instructed Priscilla, in the event of her recurring to the subject of a great crime committed by persons she knew, to inform her that all was being done to bring the guilty to their deserts. I trusted she would, with her usual docility, rest contented with this scarcely correct assertion.

Priscilla was to write to me—to St. Petersburg, Moscow, and other places I must stop at, going and returning. I left directed envelopes with her, and would send from St. Petersburg instructions as to the dates when the various letters should be posted. And then all I could think of was done.

All except one thing. To-morrow morning I must start. My passport is duly signed; my trunks are packed—everything ready. Once, once for a moment, I must see her before I sleep to-night—see her it may be for the last time. She was sleeping soundly—Priscilla told me so. Once more I must look upon that beautiful face that I may carry its exact image with me for thousands of miles!

I crept up-stairs and entered her room. I stood by the bedside and gazed with eyes full of tears on my wife—yet not my wife. I felt like a criminal, a desecrator, so little right, I knew, I had to be in the room. Her pale pure face lay on the pillow—the fairest face in all the world to me. Her bosom rose and fell with her soft regular breathing. Fair and white as an angel she looked, and I swore, as I gazed on her, that no word of man should make me doubt her innocence. Yet I would go to Siberia.

I would have given worlds for the right to lay my lips on hers! to have been able to awake her with a kiss, and see those long dark lashes rise, and her eyes beam with love for me. Even as it was I could not refrain from kissing her gently on the temple, just where the soft thick hair began to grow. She stirred in her sleep, her eyelids quivered, and like one detected at the commencement of a crime, I fled.

The next day I was hundreds of miles away, and my mind was in a sterner frame. If when I reached, if ever I did reach, Ceneri, I found that Macari had not lied—found that I had been fooled, cajoled, made a tool of, I should, at least, have the grim consolation of revenge. I should be able to gloat upon the misery of the man who had deceived me and used me for his own purposes. I should see him dragging out his wretched life in chains and degradation. I should see him a slave, beaten and ill-treated. If this was the only reward I should reap it would repay me for my long journey. Perhaps, considering all that had passed, and my present anxiety and dread, this unchristian state of mind was not unnatural to an ordinary son of Adam.

The True Blues Excursion.

A large number of the True Blues and their friends left the Midland station, at 7 o'clock this morning on their annual excursion. Their objective points are Stony Lake and Mount Julian, where the day will be spent. The party were accompanied by the orchestra of the town band, and they will no doubt have a jolly good time on the boat and at their destination.

On the Road.

Mr. E. C. Hill, the town bill poster, started to-morrow morning on a tour for the purpose of advertising the Peterborough Central Exhibition. He will to-morrow visit Mill brook, Omemee and Lindsay posting the bills, continuing his travels until he has visited the whole middle district, the limit of his travel being Toronto on the west and Kingston on the east.

At Last.

Citizens will be glad to learn that, the necessary accommodation having been provided, they are to be favored on Friday evening with a concert by the Fire Brigade Band, in the Court House Park. The Park is looking its prettiest, and the band will play its best, so a large turn out of promenaders may be expected.

A Fast Half Mile.

A rather exciting incident occurred yesterday afternoon at the Driving Park. While a number of horsemen were speeding their trotters around the course, a phaeton drawn by a powerful horse, and containing Misses Ewing, Longley and Green, was driven on the track. A dog that was capering and barking around, startled the animal and he bolted with the ladies and started off round the track at a pace that bid fair to throw dust in the eyes of the owners of the fast stock. Miss Green, who was driving, though quite unable to stop the horse, with rare judgment and presence of mind held him fair in the middle of the track and after he had made a half mile in time that would have done Maud S. no discredit, Mr. Daly succeeded in bringing him to a standstill. Those who witnessed the incident say that the way the trotters in their sulkies gave way to the running horse in the phaeton was a caution.

Presentation.

On Tuesday evening Messrs. Brundrette, F. Mitchell, J. S. Hall, S. J. Kemp, J. Richardson, T. E. Pratt and F. Brownscombe, the entertainment committee of the Sons of England Benevolent Society, waited on Miss Eva Tivey at her home in Ashburnham, and presented her with a handsome silver card receiver as a recognition of her services rendered in training the children for the Maypole dance on 1st of July. The piece of plate, which is from the establishment of Mr. W. A. Sanderson, is 13 inches high, and very handsome, the design being a Cupid holding in one hand a bunch of arrows, and with the other bearing aloft the dish which holds the cards, which is also decorated with arrows. The presentation was made on behalf of the committee by Bro. Brundrette, who, in a suitable address, expressed the grateful feelings of the society for the services so kindly rendered by Miss Tivey. That young lady, though taken quite by surprise, responded suitably and the remainder of the evening was most agreeably spent in singing and conversation.

ATHLETICS.

Hamilton Cliffside vs. Lindsay.

The game between these two clubs, played at Lindsay yesterday afternoon, resulted, as was of course anticipated, in a hollow victory for the league club. The Lindsay men at the commencement of the game manifested a great deal of nervousness, and during the first innings played very wildly. In the subsequent innings, however, they somewhat steadied down, and played a better and cooler game. It was quite evident, however, that their catcher, Lovett, in whom they take so much pride, was away off, the ball being stopped oftener by his protector than it was caught in his hands. McCrimmon, their second baseman, too, played a very poor game, seeming quite unable to hold on to anything, or if he did, by luck more than by good judgment, manage to freeze to the ball, spoiled matters by his erratic throwing. Little's pitching was good, and the remainder of the team played fairly well, especially distinguishing themselves as base-runners, indeed, the Hamilton men remarked that it seemed impossible to throw the ball to the base before the man arrived. Their batting, too, was very fair, and there is little doubt that with less formidable opponents they would make a good show, though their catcher would certainly have to waken up considerably. The visitors gave them every chance, part of the time putting on as pitcher Chub Collins, who had never pitched a game before in his life, and changing the pitcher several times. The following are the players, and subjoined will be found the score by innings:—

ARRIVAL OF THE CLIPPERS.

The team who played against the Lindsays arrived in town last evening and registered at the Oriental hotel. In addition to the names mentioned as having played in the Lindsay game they have with them Mr. Stroud, manager, Geo. Starling, secretary' Charles Wilson, W. Prescott, J. Myers and Jerry Moore, their regular catcher, who is shelved for a time with a broken finger. As Tip Sullivan, the Peterborough's catcher, is ineligible to play against a league club, his place will be taken by either Prescott or Hunter. The Clippers will visit Cobourg and Port Hope on leaving Peterborough, returning to Hamilton, where they meet the Primroses on Saturday or Friday night.

CLIPPERS VS. COBOURG.

The Cobourg club, with whom the Clippers play to-morrow, yesterday telephoned the manager of the Clippers, Mr. Stroud, saying that unless he could bring along a spare battery to officiate for the Cobourgs they would have to cancel the game. Preston, who is with the Clippers, will play for Cobourg behind the bat, and a pitcher has been sent for to Hamilton. It is said that the Cobourgs were disappointed in securing the services of two New York State League men for whose services they had been negotiating.

TELEGRAPHERS VS BANKERS.

In addition to the mercantile-legal game to be played on Friday, there is some prospect of a game between the telegraph operators and bankers, the former being anxious to arrange a game with the latter. The lightning jerkers should be lively in their movements and if the bankers accept their challenge some quick time around ought to be the result.

A Peterborough Athlete.

Mr. F. T. Hunt, of this town, whose name was mentioned on Saturday as the winner of the long jump at the Montreal Caledonian games, was also successful in carrying off the honors in the running hop, step and jump, clearing 42 ft. 9½ in. In the running long jump he won with 21 ft. 1 in.

The Wheel.

CLERICAL WHEELMEN ARRIVE AT THE CITY OF THE BAY.

The advanced guard of the little army of clerical bycicists from across the line, who are "rolling the chariot along" through Canada, arrived in Belleville yesterday, and registered at the Dafoe House. The Rev. Potarists appear to be having a thoroughly good time of it, meeting with ovations wherever they appear. It would be interesting to know how the spiritual wants of their flocks, who can't afford to indulge in bicycle tours, are being ministered to during their somewhat protracted absence.

A Two Days' Tournament for Brockville.

Brockville is taking the preliminary steps towards holding a two days' lacrosse, base ball, and bicycle tournament some time in September. A meeting was held last evening at which committees were appointed to make arrangements. Here is a chance for our lacrosse boys and ball men to distinguish themselves.

Cabooling.

A PETERBOROUGH FAUDLER TO RACE WITH THE A.C.A. CHAMPION.

The Brockville Times says:

"There is a probability that before long a paddling race between Johnson the A.C.A. champion, and J. L. Weller, of Peterborough, will take place here. Last year Weller pushed Johnson very hard in the races at the A.C.A. camp, but this year he was not at the camp. If the race comes off it will be a very exciting one."

Mr. Weller was in the North west during the rebellion, and has come back in first-class condition. Johnson is beyond question a great paddler and, as the Times says, a race between them would be interesting.

A son of Judge Scott, of Brampton, has been drowned near Port Severn.

Justice Justice.

Three delinquents faced the stern gaze of activity police magistrate James Stephenson this morning. Duncan Calhoun and Stanley Green were charged by P. C. Adams with having been drunk last night. They were not in a position to disprove the statement, and were each fined $1 and costs, or in default, ten days in jail. Calhoun came down with the cash, but Green, being impecunious, went down with the policeman—to the Nesbitt stronghold, where he will spend ten days "out of the hurly burly."

Patrick Heffernan is one of the persons who think that a policeman has no right to do his duty. He appeared in response to a summons charging him with grossly abusive language to P. C. McGinty. He, too, was mulcted in $1 and costs, or ten days, and may think himself lucky in getting off so easily.

Scott Act Campaign.

The central committee have arranged for the following lectures with which to open the campaign. Mrs. Susannah E. Peck, of New York, will address meetings as follows:

Lakefield	August 31st
Warsaw	September 1st
South Dummer	" 2nd
Norwood	" 3rd
Peterborough	" 4th
Bridgenorth	" 5th
Zion (Otonabee) at 11 a. m.	" 6th
Keene, at 7 p. m.	" 6th

Mrs. Peck is one of the foremost lady speakers on the continent, and gave great satisfaction in the recent contest in Victoria. The committee had considerable difficulty in securing her, as she was about to return to New York.

Mr. Jno. A. Nicholls will deliver lectures in the following places:

Peterborough	August 31st
Springville	September 1st
Havelock	" 2nd
Harrtoa	" 3rd
Westwood	" 4th
Villiers	" 5th
Lakefield	" 6th
Selwyn	" 7th
Young's Point	" 8th
Peterborough	" 9th
Norwood	" 10th
Hastings	" 11th

Among other lecturers who have been secured, are Mr. F. S. Spence, Toronto, Rev. B. B. Keefer, Hamilton, and Mr. W. H. Howland, Toronto. The organizers engaged are Mr. W. G. Pee and his assistants, Messrs. Stewart and Fessey. These gentlemen have commenced work, and every polling sub-division will be thoroughly organized. It is likely that the proclamation of the polling day will appear on Saturday.

The following municipal conventions will be held at the places and on the dates named:

Peterborough	August 24th
Ashburnham	" 25th
Keene (Otonabee)	" 27th
Lakefield (and Douro)	September 2nd
Smith (Good Templar's Hall 4th con.)	" 7th
W. Dummer (Warsaw)	August 24th
Belmont (Blairton)	" 27th
Burleigh, etc., (Apsley)	" 31st
Harvey (Lakehurst)	September 3rd

All willing to help in the work of the campaign are invited to attend the convention in their locality.

Smiths Market.

Peaches, Plums, Pears, Grapes, Oranges, Lemons, Apples, Cherries, Garden Raspberries, Melons, Currants, Gooseberries, and all kinds of green vegetables. Ripe Tomatoes one dollar per box, twenty pounds in the box. Fresh Fish, Hams and Bacon.

Don't be Duped.

Smokers will further their own interest by insisting upon having the "Cable", or "El Padre" brands of cigars which have stood the test for a quarter of a century, and not allow greedy and unscrupulous dealers to persuade them to take other brands which pays them a larger profit, the consumer being a loser thereby. 13d-25w

DEATHS.

SMITH.—At the family residence, Harvey on Saturday, the 15th instant, Mr. Robert Smith, photographer, Peterborough, and eldest son of John Smith, Esq., aged 47 years.

McCLENNAN.—At the residence of his grandfather, Charlotte street, on Wednesday, August 19th, 1885, Harvey Willard, only son of Mr. W L. McClennan, Buffalo, N. Y., and grandson of Mr. Giles Webber, aged five months and 20 days.

Funeral from Mr. Webber's residence, on Friday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

A Big Bass Fiddle.

A double bass has been ordered for the orchestra of the Fire Brigade Band. When it arrives the instrumental equipment of this organization will be complete, and they will be in a position to furnish first-class music on any occasion on which their services may be required.

Spring Wheat.

The indications, as well as its actual condition, point to the fact that the spring wheat crop will be, to a great extent, a failure. The rust and insect pests are destroying it. In the township of Cavan, for instance, one extensive farmer has a field of fifty acres, which is not worth the cutting. It will be ploughed under or cut for feed. In other parts the blight has, within a few days, turned promising fields into mere grainless straw. Some varieties of spring wheat, however, will give a good yield, but these, unfortunately, are rare exceptions.

PANTS.

How often does it happen that the general comfort and happiness of man depends on a good fitting pair of pants. Nothing will ruffle a man's temper more than to find when he tries on his latest new pair of pants that they are either too long or too short; that they pinch him so bad in one place that he dare not stoop, and are so large and baggy around the waist and knees that he is afraid he might be taken for the departed "Smith."

Railway Official Silver Plated.

Mr. A. White Presented With an Address and Silver Salver.

Mr. A. White, well known as traffic Manager of the Midland Railway, and since occupying a similar position on the Midland Division of the Grand Trunk, was handsomely honored last night. His many friends in town took advantage of the occasion of his removing to Toronto, where he has been promoted to a position similar to that held here, to wait upon him at the Oriental Hotel, where Mr. J. M. Irwin read the following address, at the same time presenting Mr. White with a very beautiful and handsomely chased silver salver, upon which was engraved a suitable inscription :—

To Arthur White, Esq.:

Your many friends among the business men and other citizens of Peterborough desire, on the occasion of your leaving Peterborough to reside in Toronto, to express their appreciation of your estimable qualities, both as a citizen and as a representative of a railway corporation. By your business tact and capability you have shown us that it is possible for the representative of a large corporation to keep the interests of that corporation in view, and at the same time to be courteous, prompt and approachable to the public. While we regret to lose you as a resident of Peterborough we are gratified to know that your valuable services to the Grand Trunk Railway are appreciated, and heartily congratulate you on your advancement in their service. Allow us to present you with the accompanying piece of plate as a memento of your residence in Peterboro' and at the same time to express our sincere wishes for the welfare of yourself and Mrs. White, and the hope that you may both be spared many years of happy life.

Signed on behalf of the subscribers,

James Stevenson,
R. C. Strickland,
Jas. M. Irwin,
H. LeBrun,
J. W. Flavelle,
W. Cluxton,
} Committee.

Peterborough, Aug. 19th, 1885.

Mr. White, who fully appreciated the feelings that prompted the address and its accompanying present, made a brief impromptu reply. He was sensible of the honor of which he had been made the recipient and fittingly returned his thanks for the plate presented. He would consider himself happy if, in the discharge of the duties of his office, he had earned the right to appropriate to himself the cordial sentiments of respect and esteem so gracefully expressed in the words of the address.

We are happy to add our congratulations to those of Mr. White's other friends. Those who have had the pleasure of business relations with him in the capacity in which he has so faithfully promoted the interests of the two railway corporations with which he has been connected here, can bear testimony to the uniform courtesy and disposition to oblige, that have characterized the discharge of his duties. We wish him abundant success in his new sphere of duty.

Hallelujah Wedding.

Staff-Capt. Wyatt and Lieut. Gubbins, Saved Army, United.

A hallelujah wedding occurred in the Ontario hall, Kingston, Tuesday night. The parties are well known in Peterborough. The building was very elaborately decorated with bunting, bannerettes and mottoes. The bride having arrived early occupied a most retired spot. Rev. Mr. Short having arrived, the proceedings began by singing and prayer. Gen. Lindsay addressed the audience briefly, commending the contracting parties who were about to be married. Rev. Mr. Short called for the bridal party. Staff-Capt. Wyatt and Lieut. Gubbins rose up and slowly stepped upon the platform. Private Hornibrook and Captain McGregor followed and wheeled up on the left. On the right of the bridal party stood Mr. W. J. Moore and Mrs. Wyatt.

The bridegroom, who enlisted with the Army here, is a good looking young man and appeared exceedingly well in his handsome dark suit. The bride was attired in Army costume and she carried a highly perfumed flower. She was pretty and intelligent and her responses were clearly and firmly made. The ceremony over, Staff-Capt. Wyatt kissed his bride and then she was kissed by his mother and Mr. Moore.—Com.

Personal.

Mr. E. A. C. Peck, barrister, is spending a few days' holiday at Rice Lake.

Mr. Harry Rubidge, of Brantford, cousin of Mr. Geo. Rubidge, is in town visiting friends.

Mr. William Cullen, formerly a resident of Peterborough, but who now hails from Winnipeg, is visiting in town.

Messrs. J. W. Delaney and P. Corkery are putting in their holiday time at Sturgeon Point and Bobcaygeon.

Mr. Fred. Fitzgerald, telegraph operator, of St. Louis, Missouri, is in the neighborhood on a visit. He is spending a few days with his grandmother, Mrs. John Carlow, Douro.

Mr. A. P. Morgan, of the Morgan House, who has for some time been a martyr to rheumatism, left town last night for the Caledonia Springs, near Ottawa, where he hopes to derive benefit from the mineral waters.

Mr. Jno. Kelly, of Toronto, one of the artists of Grip and the Illustrated War News, passed through town to-day on his way to Warkworth, where he will spend a well earned holiday, after a trip to the Northwest, in the interests of the latter paper.

True Blue's Abroad.

A train containing about 250 True Blues and friends of the Order left the Midland Railway station yesterday morning to enjoy the annual pic-nic of the brotherhood. They were conveyed by the cars as far as Lakefield, where a large number of them remained, the others embarking on the steamer Fairy for Mount Julian. The pic-nic had engaged the services of the Fire Brigade Band Orchestra, and votaries of dancing indulged in their favorite pastime to their heart's content, while others, more sedately inclined, passed the day pleasantly in strolling among the trees and rocks, in boating and fishing. After spending a delightful day the entire party returned to the city, not having met with any untoward event, and arrived at the Midland station shortly after nine o'clock in the evening.

A Distressing Accident.

This morning Miss Lackie, who resides with her widowed mother on Brock street, went for the first time to work as an operative at the Auburn woolen mills, but before noon was taken home suffering from the effects of an accident which will probably preclude the possibility of her ever working again in the same capacity. About 10 o'clock, while engaged at the work to which she had been assigned, she got her right hand involved between two cog wheels, which before the rapidly revolving machinery could be brought to a standstill, and her hand extracted, had lacerated it and her wrist in a most distressing manner, crushing the bones and almost completely severing the tendons and important vessels at this point. The surgical services of Dr. Kincaid were called into requisition. He discovered the injuries to be very severe, but does not, at present, know whether or not amputation will be necessary.

The Cruel Reaper.

A Boy Has Both Feet Cut Off With a Reaper.

LONDON, Aug. 18.—The 12-year-old son of Mr. Donald McPherson, of East Williams, met with a terrible accident on Saturday last. The lad jumped off the reaper, which he had been driving, to remove a sheaf out of the way, when the horses started to run, and the boy's legs were caught in the machine, both his feet being cut off. He is still alive, but in a critical condition.

Strengthening the Navy.

LONDON, Aug. 19.—Although the prospects of peace with Russia are unusually bright, the work of strengthening and reorganizing the British navy proceeds steadily. Large drafts of men were despatched to-day to fill the completements of the war vessels in the Mediterranean fleet. The Tourmaline is being refitted at a cost of $250,000, despite the fact that unofficial experts declare that the ship is not worth the money.

The Scott Act and Tradesman.

To the Editor of the DAILY EXAMINER :

SIR,—In reply to the ridiculous letter from "Tradesman" in your issue this evening, permit me to say: 1st. That active steps are now being taken in Toronto to thoroughly organize for the submission of the Scott Act to the electors there. 2nd. That the lecturers engaged by the County of Peterborough Scott Act Association will be paid by that Association when they come, and that Toronto is not connected in any shape or form with the work in this county. Am sorry to waste my time and your space in replying to your correspondent, but the wrong in any matter seems to be more readily believed than the truth, and it is well that your readers should know what the truth is. The Scott Act in Toronto.

To the Editor of THE EXAMINER :

SIR,—I notice in this evening's issue of the Daily EXAMINER, a correspondent, who signs himself "Merchant," puts the following query : "If the Scott Act will be such a benefit to Peterborough, why not get it carried in Toronto?"

Permit me to inform him that preliminary steps to having the Act submitted in Toronto are now being taken, although, on account of the large amount of liquor trade interest centered there, the organization, as may be expected, will be slow. When the time arrives for the electors of Toronto to vote on it, the same encouraging success that has attended past efforts of the advocates of temperance, will be met with.

If I may be permitted to ask Tradesman a question I would desire to be informed how the restriction of the sale of intoxicating beverages to our citizens will take away legitimate business.

The liquor traffic will go and the earlier it goes the better. Possibly your correspondent is a tradesman in that line of business himself, if so, his hostility to the Scott Act is readily accounted for. Whoever he may be, in stating the question in the false light he did, he has not given the Scott Act or its supporters,

FAIRY'S PUNISHMENT.

"You love me, Fairy?"

"Yes, I love you," I said with a sigh. "But love won't keep us, Robin; so the best thing we can do is to forget our pretty dream of love in a cottage, and think of something more sensible."

My lover is stretched full-length on the grass at my feet, and as I speak my hand falls on his bright young head with lingering tenderness. It is hard to give him up; but I hate poverty even more than I love Robin.

We are so poor at home, and there are so many of us, and we girls are always shabby. I don't know when I have had a new dress or when I can expect to have one, and if I married Robin it would be the same, of course, for how could he afford to gratify my taste for pretty things?

So it is best for him and best for me that our engagement such as it is should be broken off. He will think so too some day, and thank me for being so wise; but at present I am afraid he cannot see the wisdom, but only the cruelty of the thing.

"Fairy," he says, looking up at me with eyes that are dark with pain, "I will work hard—so hard—to win a home for you, if you will only wait."

"Wait!" I say impatiently. "Robin, how can you talk so foolishly? What prospect have you? It is impossible that you can be a rich man, and I have made up my mind never to marry a poor man."

"How long is it since you have arrived at this decision?" asks Robin. His name is Robert, but I always call him Robin. He is getting up now, and his handsome face looks white and drawn. But there is a new dignity about him that awes me a little. The boy seems to have changed to a man in the last few minutes.

"How long!" I began confusedly, while the color mounts to the roots of my hair.

"Don't say any more," and Robin puts his hand on my arm. "I know it is since Lord Westwarren has been visiting the cottage that you have found out your mistake. You are going to marry that old man for his money, Frances."

Perhaps he hopes I will contradict this assertion, for he looks at me longingly as he speaks; but I cannot, for it is true that I mean to marry Lord Westwarren.

"Frances!"

I look up quickly, pleased at the interruption, for I do not wish to hear my lover's reproaches, and see my little sister looking down at me with her grave dark eyes.

"Well, Dolly, what is it?" I ask, while Robin tears up the grass by handfuls.

"That horrid old man has come and is asking for you."

"Don't talk like that of your sister's future husband, child," cries Robin before I can speak; and Dolly stares at him in astonishment, unable to grasp his meaning, and a little startled by the harsh laugh that accompanies the words.

How white he looks, and how miserable! I can't leave him like this.

We must part friends, or his pale face will haunt me all my life.

"Say you can't find me, Dolly," unmindful of the bad example I am setting my little sister; and the child runs off to do my bidding with her shabby hat hanging at the back of her neck, and her short frock making a very unnecessary display of very thin legs in black cotton stockings.

"Pray, why have you despatched your elderly admirer?" Robin asks bitterly. "What would he say if he came to the paddock to look after you?"

"As if he would so far forget his dignity as to walk through this long grass," I say, almost laughing at the idea; "miserable as I am, I hate him, Robin."

"You hate him, Frances!" and Robin gives me a passionately reproachful glance. "You hate him, and yet you are willing to sell yourself for gold. I hope you will be happy."

"How can you breathe such a wish when you know I shall be wretched?"

"I know nothing but that you have made your choice in life," Robin answers sadly. "Your parents could not force you to marry this old man against your will."

We are both standing up now, and he holds my hands tightly, looking into my face with eyes that seem to read my soul.

"I love you," I tell him in faltering tones; "but, Robin, I can never marry a poor man."

"Kiss me—it is for the last time," he says.

Oh, the pain and passion in his voice!

That kiss! When my time comes I shall remember it as I float into the unknown sea. Oh, Robin, it is hard to let you go!

But how can I bear to be poor and shabby all my days, to trudge along in the dust raised by the horses and carriages of the rich, to see my face grow prematurely old with care and worry? No, it would never do, and some day Robin will come to my way of thinking.

All this I try to tell him; but he checks me abruptly—almost rudely.

He is sick of that "best for you, best for me" twaddle, he tells me; for it cannot be best for him to lose me, and he will never think so.

What is the use of lingering over our parting, or repeating all Robin says in his bitter disappointment?

It is over at last, and I go back to the house to find that Lord Westwarren's horses are still standing at the gate.

It seems that he will not leave without seeing me.

I enter the shabby drawing-room without waiting to look at myself or smooth my hair. Lord Westwarren must take Frances as he finds her. I am not going to adorn myself for his benefit. How I hate the old wretch, with his yellow, wrinkled complexion and bloodshot eyes!

SIR FRANCIS HINCKS.

Sir Francis Hincks died in Montreal on Tuesday. He was a prominent figure in Canadian politics, especially in anti-Confederation days, and his voice was ever raised in advocacy of Liberal principles. Sir Francis Hincks was born in Cork on December 14th, 1807. He received a primary education in the Fermoy School and completed his academical training in the Royal Belfast Institute. He came to Canada in the autumn of 1856 and settled in Toronto, following mercantile pursuits and the profession of a journalist. He was elected in 1841 at the first election under the union, representative of Oxford in the Legislature as a Reformer and worked and voted side by side with Mr. Baldwin. In 1842 he joined the Government as Inspector-General, became Premier in 1851, resigned in 1854, was appointed Governor-in-Chief of Barbadoes and the Winward Islands in 1856, and Governor of British Guinea in 1862, was created a K. C. M. G. in 1869, and became Finance Minister of Canada in the same year, succeeding Sir John Rose, under Sir John Macdonald. He was then 61 years of age. A seat was found for him in Renfrew. He resigned in February, 1873, and upon the fall of Sir John's Ministry on the Pacific scandal he retired into private life, accepting the presidency of the City Bank of Montreal. In 1838 he established the Toronto Examiner and several years afterwards the Montreal Pilot. Up to very recently Sir Francis contributed an occasional article to the Montreal Journal of Commerce, showing almost up to the end a love for his old profession. He married in 1832 Martha Anne Stewart, daughter of a prominent merchant of Belfast. In 1874 Lady Hincks died and in the following year Sir Francis married a second wife, Emily Louisa, daughter of Lieut.-Col. Philip Delatre and relict of the Hon. Judge Sullivan. This lady died in Montreal five years later.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

It is announced that Sir Charles Tupper will soon visit Hamilton and other manufacturing points. His object is said to be to secure the co-operation of manufacturers in procuring Canadian exhibits for the Indian and Colonial Exhibition, which takes place in London next year.

The new readers from the first to the fourth, inclusive, will be ready for the opening of the schools in August. Parts I and II and the second book of the Ontario series cease to be authorized after the first of August, and third and fourth can be used no longer than the balance of this year. The authorization of the Royal and Gage readers expires at the same time.

The nomination in Cardwell takes place on Thursday next, and the election a week later. There is much dissatisfaction in the riding with the past course of the new Minister of the Interior, and with that of the men he supports, and there is a probability that, notwithstanding the fact that hitherto Cardwell has been a Tory stronghold, Mr. White will meet with opposition. It is reported that Dr. Samuel Allison, of Caledon East, will oppose the Minister as an Independent candidate.

The present system of school inspection in counties does not give satisfaction in some of the counties. It is argued that the value of the work done is not commensurate with the cost entailed. Many of the visits of these functionaries do not add anything to the efficiency of the schools. In Grey county there are three inspectors. An agitation has been going on for some time for a reduction of the number. The matter was warmly discussed at the late meeting of the county council. On a vote all the incumbents of the offices were retained for the present.

The Canadian Gazette, of London, Eng., in reference to Riel and to Sir John's criminal leniency shown to the rebel of 1870, says that, it is clearly incumbent upon the Government to see that Riel has no possible opportunity of repeating his offence a third time. While it may be well to annul the sentence of death, it would be obviously impolitic to extend again the leniency of 1870. Once for all, it should be decided that, whether mad or sane, Riel is far too dangerous a person ever to be permitted beyond the walls of the prison or the asylum.

Dundee is the most important port on the east of Scotland; and its leading citizens think that it should be constituted a place for receiving cattle. Though Greenock has been denied the privilege of landing cattle from Dominion ports in consequence of the proximity of that port to Glasgow; the Dundee traders hold that no such objection can be laid against their town; and they have appointed a deputation to wait upon the British Privy Council, and secure the necessary authority to open the port. With Dundee participating in the Anglo-Canadian cattle business, we may expect to see the demand—already very large—still further increased. Dundee is the centre of the linen and jute fabric trade, and freights both ways would thus be assured.

Keene.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Forgive, oh, ye owls of the wood and parterre,
And we'll sing you a song to your soothing.

O, owl!
When the music of birds and the humming of bees
Are hushed on the breast of the evening breese;
When Nature is fast in the lap of repose,
And harmony reigns in the bosom of foes;
When the world is asleep and the last ray of light
Is swept from the earth by the besom of night,
Thou art seen on the wing—though we cannot well see,
For thy daylight is darkness, ours darkness to thee,—
Thou art seen on the wing, by the pale moonlight,
To flit like a ghost on the shadow of night;
Or, perched on a tree, art heard nightly to croon
Thy sorrowful tale to the wandering moon.

Oh, child of the night! cease to echo along
The mournful "to-hoo" of thy midnight song;
Or the spirites of the night will assemble to hear,
And the elves of the woods will be caught in a tear.

Mrs. Duncan McColl, of Seymour, west, paid us a visit last week, calling upon several old friends in Keene and vicinity, some of whom she had not seen for twenty-five years.

Donald Campbell, Esq., of Colborne, formerly an old resident here, graced our embryo city with his presence last Wednesday and Thursday. He looks as hale and hearty as he did 15 years ago.

And days o' Lang Syne."

Alex. Laird, Esq., an old resident of Chinguacousy, and an intimate friend of the poet McLachlan, is among us spending a few weeks with auld acquaintances; lang syne companions of his school days.

Gen. Grant's Tomb.

A matter-of-fact description of the temporary resting place of Gen. Grant's remains calls it "a kind of brick oven with a tarred roof, surrounded by an iron fence and hastily set turf, already brown, and amid scrubby trees."

Eccentric Electricity.

DUNNVILLE, Aug. 19.—Last night, during a heavy thunder storm, the residence occupied by James Cassel, of this place, was badly damaged by lightning striking the corner of the building, and the bed on which Mrs. Cassel and a child were sleeping were smashed in slivers. Mrs. Cassel was unconscious for a few hours, but has recovered. The child was not hurt.

The Coming English Cricketers.

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—A meeting was held last night for the purpose of making arrangements to welcome and entertain the English gentlemen cricketers, who are expected to arrive by steamer on Sunday next. A committee was appointed, with Erastus Wiman as chairman. It was decided to entertain the visitors at a public dinner on their arrival, and after their tour through the country to give them a ball on Staten Island. The interest excited by the visit in cricketing and sporting circles is very widespread.

Book Notice.

Godey's Lady Book for September is a number full of notable attractions. The frontispiece this month is an illustration to one of Dorothy Holroyd's pretty poems entitled, "The Dryad and the Nightingale." This plate is another successful adaptation of the new style of engraving for which Godey's Lady's Book is fast gaining a reputation. The fashion cuts and fancy work designs are admirable, both in drawing and color. Among other striking features of the September book, is the centre piece of the new cover, a movable design which is changed from month to month. The literature of this issue embraces a powerful story by Amelia B Edwards, entitled "The Four-Fifteen Express." The translation of the French serial "The Yoke of Honor," is carried forward to an interesting crisis, and a new illustrated paper on Roses fills the department of feminine occupations. Edith Robinson, a popular young magazine writer, has a quiet but witty sketch called "Michael Angelo and I," and Julia Scott contributes "The Exile's daughter." The quality of the stories in Godey's is certainly improving; indeed the whole magazine shows the effect of a progressive influence. The publisher announces the speedy forthcoming of a new serial by Helen Mathers, the title of which is "Love Lies A-Bleeding." This story is bright and engaging, in the author's best style, and promises to do much towards enhancing the attractions of the Lady's Book during the midwinter. Godey's is an old friend and a valuable one whom every lady should cultivate. The cost of the magazine by the year is the nominal sum of two (2) dollars, and such an amount cannot be expended to better advantage than in a subscription.

The Age We Live In.

Much as we boast of our modern improvements we are, most of us, behind the age we live in—that is, behind the best things in it; we not only fail to keep well informed of the minor special inventions and improvements that tend to make life easy and fruitful, but we constantly neglect even the old and familiar ones. Take telegraphing, for instance: excepting those whose business requires them to use it constantly, there is not one man in ten, nor one woman in fifty, who will not at least hesitate before sending an ordinary message in somewhat less than no time by wire, instead of the more tedious and troublesome mail bag, even when it is perfectly evident that the advantage of the swifter and surer method, small as it may be, will greatly outweigh the slight additional cost. As for traveling, why shouldn't we, when, as often happens, it is easier, pleasanter, safer, and cheaper than staying at home? When I can take my entire family and my most cherished household goods in a small portable palace, and carry them away from the burning, blasting heats of summer to a land of cool comfort and health; when, for business purposes, space is annihilated, and I am as near the centre of the universe when I stand like a butterfly on the rim of the wheel as when I am clinging to the hub, like a tree-toad—why must I plant myself, like a telegraph pole or a tombstone, and never stir from the spot where I was born? No, sir! We have scarcely begun to understand our opportunities, or to realize what facilities for moving about are within our reach, much less to take advantage of them.

What Broke a Printer.

The publisher of a weekly newspaper in Michigan before the war was under the saddle and hitched to a wagon to boot. He carried a load of doubt, debt and anxiety which would have crushed a Secretary of the Treasury in one brief week. A dollar was a cart-wheel in his eyes of his employes. It is vividly remembered by the writer how a certain publisher in an interior town felt as happy as a king when he could send for two bundles of paper at once, and it is more vividly remembered that he never saw the week when he could buy one bundle of paper and pay off the hands, too, in cash.

One day a printer died. Perhaps he gradually starved to death, or maybe the anxiety as to how he could buy both wood and flour the same Saturday finished him off. At any rate a new printer came up from Grand Rapids to fill the gap, and his wages were to be $12 per week. On the first Saturday he got an order on a hardware store for $10 and $2 in cash. On the next he got a boot and shoe order for $9 and a $3 order on a grocery. On the third he had to take a $6 order on a livery stable and let the balance go over. His fourth Saturday had arrived, and he had $18 due him. An order for that amount was quietly laid on his case and the books balanced, but he protested:

"Why, I can't use this order."

"Why not?"

"I don't want any lumber."

"You don't?"

"No, sir."

The publisher looked blank, scratched his head, and after a minute hurried over to the desk with the remark:

"I see—all right. I'll tear this up and give you one on a cooper for $10 and another on the undertaker for $8! You had better arrange to get married and settle down here."

The printer went out of that town that evening by a very muddy highway, having disposed of his orders for $2 in cash and a satchel to hold his spare shirt.—Detroit Free Press.

It doesn't follow that because a man is a monopolist he can't say an occasional good thing. Fred Crocker recently refused a pass to a sort of peripatetic humbug, who indignantly demanded to be informed how long the railroad crowd proposed to "grind the faces of the poor." "I don't think you need be alarmed," retorted young Crocker; "we are not workers in brass."

Old Dan had used his neighbors' fence as firewood, and was accordingly brought before the court to answer for the same. "Have you any lawyer for defense?" asked the Judge, as Dan took his place. "No, sor, I hab not," replied the negro. "'Kase yo' know, Jedge, 'taint de fence what needs a lawyer, 'hit am dis po' niggah dat am in fer it; I 'spec yer better pint one out for him."

"Wake up!" exclaimed Mrs. Muiberry in a loud whisper, as she punched the slumbering Mulberry in the short ribs with her elbow the other night "wake up! I'm sure I hear burglars down in the dining-room." "Don't disturb them, then," said the drowsy Mulberry, turning over on the other side. "Be just as quiet as you can, and may be they will eat some of that fruit cake you have in the pantry."

A little child who was playing near a bonfire suddenly tripped and fell into the flames. A sportsman happened to be passing, and his high-bred dog jumped into the flames and pulled the child out. The frantic mother came swooping down from the house screaming: "Is he hurt? Is he hurt?" "Dang it, yes, ma'am!" exclaimed the sportsman, who arrived at the spot just before she did; don't you see the feathering is all burnt off his tail?"

Love-lorn youth hoping to excite sympathy in the bosom of his adored Arabella—"Do you know, my angel, that I cannot bear the slightest excitement, not even to be spoken harshly to, for I am subject to heart-disease and might drop dead at a moment's notice." Adored Arabella—"Oh! dear, dear! Mr. Caramel, please go away, now, right off; go home or out in the street. It would be so inconvenient to have you die here. Do go, or I'll be obliged to call ma." Rapid exit of Caramel.

The letter-carrier had been ringing the bell of an elegant Austin mansion for at least fifteen minutes before the lady of the house appeared. The man of letters was somewhat annoyed, and said peevishly: "I've been knocking at the door ever so long." "Oh, don't let that worry you," replied the lady with a sunny smile; "you did not disturb us. We thought you were only a loafer." The lady should not have used that remark, for it gave the letter-carrier an opportunity to retort: "So your husband has not come yet?"

BY HUGH CONWAY.

Chapter X—Continued.

St. Petersburg at last! The letter I bear, and the letter already received on my account, insure me a gracious reception from her majesty's noble representative in the Russian capital. My request is listened to attentively; not scouted as ridiculous. I am told it is unprecedented, but the words impossible to be granted are not used. There are difficulties, great difficulties, in the way, but, as my business is purely of a domestic nature, with no political tendency, and as the letters bear the magic autograph of a person whom the noble lord is eager to oblige, I am not told that the obstacles are insuperable. I must wait patiently for days, it may be weeks, but I can be sure that everything will be done that can be done. There is, at present, or so the newspapers say, a little friction between the two Governments. Sometimes this is shown by requests more simple than mine being refused. Still, we shall see—

Meanwhile, who is the prisoner, and where is he?

Ah! that I cannot say. I only know him as a doctor named Ceneri—an Italian—an apostle of freedom—patriot—conspirator. I was not foolish enough to imagine he had been tried and sentenced under the name I knew him by. I supposed this to be a false one.

Lord—was certain that no one of that name had been sentenced within the last few months. That mattered little. Permission accorded, with the data I had given, the man would at once be identified by the police. Now, good-morning—as soon as possible I should hear from the embassy.

"And one word of caution, Mr. Vaughan," said his lordship. "You are not in England. Remember that a hasty word, even a look; a casual remark to any stranger you sit next at dinner, may utterly defeat your ends. The system of government here is different from ours."

I thanked him for his advice, although I needed no warning. The truth is that an Englishman in Russia has an even exaggerated dread of spies and the consequences of a loose tongue. More of us are looked upon with suspicion from our taciturnity than from our garrulity. I was not likely to err on the latter point.

I went back to my hotel, and for the next few days whiled away the time as best I could. Not that, under ordinary circumstances, I should have found much difficulty in so doing. St. Petersburg was one of the places I had always wished to visit. Its sights were new and strange to me; its customs worth studying; but I took little interest in anything I saw. I was longing to be away in pursuit of Ceneri.

I was not foolish enough to pester the embassador and make myself a nuisance. Believing he would do all he could, I waited patiently and in silence until I received a letter asking me to call at the embassy. Lord——received me kindly.

"It is all settled," he said. "You will go to Siberia armed with authority which the most ignorant jailer or soldier will recognize. Of course, I have pledged my honor that in no way will you connive at the convict's escape—that your business is purely private."

I expressed my thanks, and asked for instructions.

"First of all," he said, "my instructions are to take you to the palace. The Czar desires to see the eccentric Englishman who wishes to make such a long journey in order to ask a few questions."

I would right willingly have declined the honor, but as there was no chance of escaping from it, nerved myself to meet the autocrat as well as I could. The embassador's carriage was at the door, and in a few minutes we were driven to the Imperial Palace.

I retain a confused recollection of gigantic sentries, glittering officers, grave-looking ushers and other officials; noble staircases and halls; paintings, statues, tapestry and gilding; then, following my conductor, I entered a large apartment, at one end of which stood a tall, noble-looking man in military attire; and I realized that I was in the presence of him whose nod could sway millions and millions of his fellow-creatures—the Emperor of all the Russias—the White Czar, Alexander II. The sovereign whose rule stretches from the highest civilization of Europe to the lowest barbarism of Asia.

Two years ago when the news of his cruel death reached England, I thought of him as I saw him that day—in the prime of life, tall, commanding, and gracious—a man it does one good to look at. Whether—if the whole truth of his great ancestor Catharine the Second's frailties were known—the blood of a peasant or a king ran in his veins, he looked every inch a ruler of men, a splendid despot.

To me he was particularly kind and condescending. His manner set me as much at my ease as it is possible for a man to be in such august company. Lord——presented me by name, and after a proper reverence I waited the Czar's commands.

He looked at me for a second from his towering height. Then he spoke to me in French, fluently and without much foreign accent:

"I am told you wish to go to Siberia?"

"With your majesty's gracious permission."

"To see a political prisoner. Is that so?"

I replied in the affirmative.

"It is a long journey for such a purpose."

"My business is of the most vital importance, your majesty."

"Private importance, I understand from Lord——."

He spoke in a quick, stern way which showed that he admitted of no prevarication. I hastened to assure him of the purely private nature of my desired interview with the criminal.

"Is he a dear friend of yours?"

"Rather an enemy, your majesty; but my happiness and my wife's happiness are at stake."

He smiled at my explanation. "You English are good to your wives. Very well, Mr. Vaughan, it shall be as you wish. The Minister of the Interior will provide you with the fullest passports and authorities. Bon voyage."

Thus dismissed, I bowed myself out, praying mentally that no redtapeism or bureaucracy might delay the transmission of the promised documents.

In three days I received them. The passport authorized me to travel to the end of the Czar's Asiatic dominions if I thought fit, and was worded in such a way that it obviated the necessity of obtaining a fresh passport whenever a fresh government district was to be traversed. It was not until I found the trouble, annoyance and delay I was saved by this magic strip of paper, that I fully realized how much favor had been shown me. Those few words of writing, unintelligible to me, were a magic spell, the potency of which none dared to resist.

But now, armed with power to travel, the question was, where must I go? To ascertain this, I was taken to one of the heads of the police. To him I explained my case. I described Ceneri, gave him what I supposed was about the date of his crime and trial, and begged for information as to the best means to adopt to find him in the place of his banishment.

I was most civilly treated. Indeed, for courtesy commend me to the Russian official when you are properly and powerfully accredited. Ceneri was at once identified, and his right name and secret history given to me. I recognized the name at once.

There is no need to make it public. There are many men in Europe who believe in the disinterested character and noble aims of the unfortunate convict; men who mourn him as a martyr. Perhaps in the cause of liberty he was single-hearted and noble-minded. Why should I distress his followers by revealing any dark secrets of his private life? Let him be, so far as I am concerned, Dr. Ceneri to the end.

I learned from the suave, obliging Russian chief of police, that a few weeks after I had seen him in Geneva, Ceneri had been arrested in St. Petersburg. A deeply laid plot, involving the assassination of the Czar and several members of the government, had been revealed through the treachery of a confederate. The police, fully cognizant of everything, had waited until the pear was nearly ripe, and then struck with dire results to the plotters. Scarcely one of the principals escaped, and Ceneri, one of the most deeply implicated, was shown scant mercy. He certainly had few claims on their consideration. He was no Russian groaning under oppression and despotic government. Although he called himself Italian, he was, in truth, cosmopolitan. One of those restless spirits who wish to overturn all forms of government, save that of republican. He had plotted and schemed—even fought, like a man—for Italian freedom. He had been one of Garibaldi's most trusted workmen; but had turned fiercely against his master when he found Italy was to be a kingdom, not the ideal republic of his dreams. Latterly he had directed his attention to Russia, and the plot he was engaged in having been betrayed, his career, in all human probability, was ended. After lying many months in the fortress of St. Peter and St. Paul, he was tried and condemned to twenty years' hard labor in Siberia. Some months ago he had been dispatched to his destination, and, my informant added, was considered to have been dealt with most leniently.

Where was he now? That could not be said for certain. He might be at the Kara gold washings, at the Ustkutsk salt works, at Troitsk, at Nertschinsk. All convicts were first sent to Tobolsk, which was a kind of general rendezvous; thence they were drafted off, at the pleasure of the Governor-General, to various places and various occupations.

If I wished, the Governor of Tobolsk should be telegraphed or written to; but, as I was bound any way to go to that town, it would be just as well if I made my inquiries in person. To this I quite agreed, mistrusting the speed of the Russian post or the newly-opened telegraph. I was ready to start to-morrow.

So, after getting all the hints and information I could, I thanked the chief for his courtesy, and with my precious papers in my pocket, went to complete my preparations for my journey: a journey which might be a thousand or two thousand miles longer or shorter, according to where it had pleased the Governor of Tobolsk to bestow the wretched Ceneri.

Before I started I received a letter from Priscilla—one of those labored and rather misty epistles usually written by people of her station in life. It told me that Pauline was well: that she was willing to be guided by Priscilla's advice, and to remain with her until the return of her unknown relation or friend. "But, Master Gilbert," the letter went on, "I am sorry to say I believe she is not quite right at times. The poor young lady talks wildly about an awful crime; but she says she is content to wait for justice to be done, as some one she has seen in her dreams during her illness is working for her. She doesn't know who it is, but it is some one who knows everything."

This intelligence made me feel easier. Not only did it show me that Pauline would wait quietly until my return, but also that some glimmering of the immediate past might be dawning upon her. The closing lines of Pauline's letter made my heart beat with hope.

"This afternoon, Master Gilbert, she seemed to discover for the first time that she had a wedding-ring on her finger. She asked me how it came there. I told her I could not say. Then she sat for hours and hours twisting it round and round, thinking and thinking. I asked her, at last, what she was thinking of. 'Dreams I am trying to remember,' said she, with that pretty quiet smile of hers. I was dying to tell the dear young lady that she was my own master's lawful wife. I was afraid she would take the ring off, but she didn't, thank God!"

Yes, thank God, she did not! As I read Priscilla's letter I yearned to turn homeward and fly back to my wife. But I conquered the inclination, although I felt more and more certain that my meeting with Ceneri would be a happy one for me; that I should return, and, if necessary, once more place that ring on her finger and claim her as my own, knowing that she was purer than the gold of which that shining circlet was made.

Pauline! my beautiful Pauline! my wife, my love, we shall be happy yet!

The next day I started for Siberia.

The St. Paul's for Peterborough

An endeavour is being made to secure the St. Paul, Minnesota, Lacrosse Club, who are making a tour of Canada, to play in Peterborough next week. The St. Paul's, many of whom are Canadians, and probably known to local lacrosse players, play on Saturday in Montreal, and there is every prospect that the efforts of the gentlemen who are trying to bring them here will be crowned with success.

A Big Thing at the Lansdowne.

Mr. Ed. Brown, the enterprising manager, is keeping up the attractions at this popular resort. On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, August 24th, 25th and 26th, the celebrated trio of Royal Russian Athletes will appear in their astonishing acrobatic and athletic feats, which are the wonder of all who see them. Skating both before and after the performance. The Fire Brigade Band in attendance.

Street Music.

The Spadafore family of Italian musicians, who have on previous occasions delighted the inhabitants of Peterborough with their music, arrived in town yesterday, and the streets were last evening and this morning made melodious by their exquisite harp and violin playing, and by the rich full tones of Madame Spadafore's beautiful contralto voice. The Spadofore family spend the summer months travelling in this way, and have just come from a tour in the west.

Excursion to Niagara.

A grand all-rail excursion to the wonderful Falls of Niagara from Millbrook, Peterborough, Omemee, Lindsay, Uxbridge and Markham will take place on Thursday, 27th August, 1885. A special train will leave Peterborough at 6 o'clock a.m., sharp, by the Grand Trunk, reaching the Falls at 11 a.m. Returning, will leave Niagara at 5 p.m., reaching Peterborough at 10 o'clock. Tickets—from Peterborough to the Falls and return—$2.50. See posters for full particulars.

Potent Poison.

Mr. Thomas Bradburn was yesterday the loser of two valuable cows, that were poisoned with Paris green. It seems that Mr. Bradburn has a potato patch in close proximity to some standing corn. His man, in sprinkling the former with Paris green, to destroy the bugs, either scattered the poison too widely, or some of it was wafted by the wind on to the standing corn. Later on, the latter, or rather a portion of it, was cut and fed to the cows, resulting in their death. This will be a warning to those in the habit of using Paris green, to take extra precaution in scattering it.

Smith Street Bridge.

After their jaunt to look over the condemned Smith street bridge, the council decided upon repairing it, and the work, under the supervision of Mr. T. M. D. Crowley, was to have been begun this morning, but some hitch has arisen, and the bridge, as well as the question of its repair, still remains in statu quo. There is no denying that the closing of the bridge is putting the public to great inconvenience. The people of Auburn who have paid in taxes more than the total cost of the bridge, are sufferers by its being closed. Messrs. Curtis & Sons are put to great inconvenience. They have to deliver a large order of brick to a point near the Methodist cemetery, and the absence of the Smith street bridge involves the covering of two or three extra miles with heavily laden waggons, not to speak of loss of time. It would be well, if the bridge is to be repaired this fall, to have the work done at once. The grain marketing season is at hand, and farmers in Douro and the northern part of Otonabee will expect to make use of the Smith street bridge.

Don't be Duped.

Smokers will further their own interest by insisting upon having the "Cable", or "El Padre" brands of cigars which have stood the test for a quarter of a century, and not allow greedy and unscrupulous dealers to persuade them to take other brands which pays them a larger profit, the consumer being a loser thereby. 13d-25w

ATHLETICS.

Lacrosse.

THE NEW'S RENCONTRE TO BE KNOWN AS THE OTTAWAS.

At a meeting of the Metropolitan Lacrosse Club held in Ottawa on Tuesday evening it was decided that the club should in future be known as the Ottawa Lacrosse Club. The Marquis of Lansdowne is the club patron.

Notes by the Way.

If the game of baseball played between the Clippers and Lindsays on Tuesday last and that between the Clippers and Peterboroughs yesterday afternoon, might be taken as a criterion whereby to form an opinion as to the relative merits of the Lindsay's and Peterborough's the inevitable conclusion would be that the latter are by all odds the better players. While the Lindsays sustained a defeat to the tune of 14 to 3 the home nine were only beaten by one run, their score too being far higher than that made by the Lindsays, while at the same time they were successful in keeping that of the champions within more measurable limits. We are nearly inclined, however, to believe that such a disparity as is indicated by their relative scores actually exists, and although holding strongly to the belief that the Peterboroughs are capable of defeating the Lindsay men, are of opinion that a contest between those clubs would prove a far more exciting and interesting event than the game of yesterday.

The result of yesterday's game was certainly a surprise to everyone, to no one perhaps, more than to the Peterboroughs, who, although confident of their ability to make a better stand than did the Lindsays—and probably assured of not being pushed too hard by the Clippers—could not, in their most sanguine moments have anticipated giving the league champions such a narrow squeak of it as they did. The Clippers entered the game with the easy confidence begotten of many victories, and, with the magnanimity of conscious strength, allowed the home men to make four runs against their ten, in eight innings, thinking, no doubt, that they would hardly be likely to materially increase the score in the ninth. A sudden development of batting powers, on the part of the Peterboroughs, however, coupled with a series of errors by the Clippers, enabled the home men to get in six runs, leaving the scores even, and lending new strength to the time honored adage "There's may a slip 'twixt the cup and the lip." The Clippers, having another turn at the bat, of course soon settled the matter in their own favor by making a run, but should they ever again meet the Peterboroughs it is hardly likely that they will leave the matter in doubt till so late a period in the game.

Base Ball.

CLIPPERS V. PETERBOROUGHS—A SURPRISE PARTY FOR THE CHAMPIONS.

The match between the Clippers of Hamilton and the Peterboroughs has long been anticipated as the base ball event of the season, and admirers of "the ball game" were out in great force at the Riverside Park yesterday afternoon when they met. Quite a number of ladies, who watched the game with apparent interest, were among the spectators. Peterborough went first to the bat, Moore, Sanderson and Sullivan opening up with a base hit each, and making an earned run. Prescott and Campbell struck out, and Cameron struck a foul fly which was caught on third base, the side being retired for one run, Sanderson, Sullivan and Metheral being left on bases. The Clippers followed and were put out after having started business by making two runs. In the second innings Peterborough went out for a duck egg, while the Clippers put two more runs to their credit. The third innings was unproductive of results for Peterborough, while the visitors made three runs, and in the fourth both sides went out without adding to their scores. In the fifth Moore, of the Peterboroughs, who went first to the bat, made a safe hit. Sanderson struck out, and Sullivan struck to third base who fumbled the ball and let him to first, while Moore reached second base and made third on a passed ball. Metheral followed with a hit which brought Moore home, and Preston, who came next to bat made a two base hit, on which Metheral reached third, coming home on a passed ball. Campbell went out on a fly tip and Cameron struck out, the side retiring for three runs. The Clippers only succeeded in making one run. The sixth innings resulted in a dipher for both sides, while in the seventh and eighth the Clippers made two runs, the home team failing to score. When Peterborough sent Sullivan to the bat in the ninth innings

THE FUN BEGAN.

He opened up with a hit and was followed by Metheral who took first on a fielder's choice in a fruitless attempt made to put Sullivan out at second. Prescott was fielded out at first base, and Campbell made a hit that filled the bases with only one man out. Cameron then took the bat and a wild pitch of Rainey's let in Sullivan and Hunter, and the catcher, in attempting to cut Metheral off at the plate, threw wild and let him home. To add to the growing interest Cameron made a two bagger which brought home Campbell who had sneaked third on a previous error. Dayman struck out. Reynolds made a hit and Moore struck to third baseman. There were at this time two men on bases, and the third baseman had the chance of putting a man out in three ways. He elected to put out the man on first base and in attempting to do so threw wildly over the first baseman's head, and before the ball had been recovered from the vicinity of the grand stand Cameron and Reynolds had got home and Moore had reached third. In bringing the ball home it was thrown wild by Rainey and Moore came home, making of the innings. The Clippers evidently thought it time to do something, and Rainey was taken out of the box and replaced by Collins, Sanderson at the same time coming to the bat. After Collins had pitched two called balls Sanderson went out on three strikes, making the side out, and leaving the scores thus all. The Clippers having half of the 9th innings to play sent Pope to the bat. He made first on called balls and second on a passed ball. Collins knocked a grounder to third base, who, although he made a good catch, threw very wildly and let Pope in from second, making the one run necessary to settle matters.

THE SIXTH RUN

The following are the names of the players :—

Rainey	Pitcher	Sullivan

Prescott, who caught for Peterborough, is a member of the Clippers. Hendricks pitched part of the time for the visitors, and, as before stated, Collins was put in the box during the eighth innings.

Sullivan pitched a very good game and the Peterboroughs did not do badly at the bat, considering the opponents they had to deal with. The fielding, however, was poor, and they might, with advantage, be more watchful for chances to steal runs.

"Tip" O'Neil did the umpiring in a manner that seemed quite satisfactory to both sides, and his decisions were unquestioned.

Lawn Tennis.

A lawn tennis double was played last evening on the Association grounds, Ashburnham, between Messrs. Fortt and Lewis against Messrs. Smith and Grey. The latter pair were the victors, 6 to 0 and 6 to 5, two sets.

What We Would Like to See.

The looks of the Lindsays on hearing of yesterday's ball game.
A raise in the price of cheese.
And a lively demand for it.

What We may Expect.

A boom in baseball.
And the Peterborough stock to go up.
The St. Paul lacrosse players.
And the Royal Russian Athletes.
A first class programme of sports at the lacrosse picnic on Tuesday.

What they are Saying.

Well, we got ahead of the Lindsay record, anyhow.—The Peterboroughs.

That last innings was a surprise party.—The Clippers.

It was a put up job.—The men who lost money on the game.

We had a great time yesterday.—The True Blues.

The Lacrosse Picnic.

Arrangements have been made for a programme of athletic games at the lacrosse picnic on Tuesday, and those who decide to attend it—and who will not?—may make up their minds that it will be the picnic of the season. Dancing and every form of healthful amusement that can be devised will be made provision for, and nothing but fine weather will be required to make the picnic a success.

"El Padre" and "Cable" Cigars, for sale, at G. W. Rubidge's. 27-3mos

Smiths Market.

Peaches, Plums, Pears, Grapes, Oranges, Lemons, Apples, Cherries, Garden Raspberries, Melons, Currants, Gooseberries, and all kinds of green vegetables. Ripe Tomatoes one dollar per box, twenty pounds in the box. Fresh Fish, Hams and Bacon.

More Attractions at the Golden Lion.

Fair, VanEvery & Co. are daily opening new fall goods. Their grand exhibit this season is well worth your inspection, as they will surpass their former efforts for quantity, variety, quality and cheapness. See their new Cretonnes with Fringes to match. Lace Curtains, Edermine and Embroidered Scrim Cloths, Boating Wraps, Fancy Dark English Prints, etc.

Smokers will further their own interest by insisting upon having the "Cable," or "El Padre" brands of cigars which have stood the test for a quarter of a century, and yet allow greedy and unscrupulous dealers to persuade them to take other brands which pays them a larger profit, the consumer being a loser thereby. 13d-25w

THE LAW OF

Supply and Demand

It makes no difference how big a man or how big a business is, there's something that's always bigger—the "LAW OF SUPPLY AND DEMAND.

We can't make men wear two Suits of Clothes at once, just to double the Demand, big as our house and business is.

But we succeed, by the Quality and Price of our "Supply" to invoke the demand to satisfy itself at

Well Worth Seeing.

The world renowned Royal Russian Athletes will appear and perform at the Lansdowne Rink on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, August 24th, 25th and 26th. They will present their great gladiatorial Roman balancing act, and champion double horizontal bar performance, introducing the great English clown, Fredericks. A magnificent performance will delight all who attend. At the rink, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings. Admission 15 cents.

PANTS.

How often does it happen that the general comfort and happiness of man depends on a good fitting pair of pants. Nothing will ruffle a man's temper more than to find when he tries on his latest new pair of pants that they are either too long or too short; that they pinch him so bad in one place that he dare not stoop, and are so large and baggy around the waist and knees that he is afraid he might be taken for the departed "Smith."

A SAFE THING TO DO

If you want to avoid all troubles and get a good fitting pair of pants that will feel as comfortable as a woollen mit, leave your order at the

FRIDAY, AUGUST 21, 1885.

A Disappointed Office-Seeker.

The Norwood Register says:—In both political parties there are men, who, when disappointed in obtaining office, always resort to slandering and abusing the prominent men of the party. West Peterborough appears to have a crank of that description at present, in shape of one Duncan McLeod. Although he has only been a few years in Peterborough he has applied for and been refused nearly every office in the gift of the Government. Being disappointed, he attacks Messrs. Stratton and McWilliams, who looked on him as only a spy in the Reform camp and refused to recommend him for any position. On account of Mr. McWilliams being a prominent Orangeman he thought to injure him with the Roman Catholics, but he soon found out that although he was an Orangeman, his dealings with the Roman Catholics had been so honest and upright that he could make no impression. Now he has turned his attention to the Orangemen, but he might better amuse himself butting his head against a stone wall, for Mr. McWilliams is so well known as a true Orangeman that he can well afford to treat such a character with contempt. The way Messrs. Stratton and McWilliams have handled this man ought to be a warning to all men of the McLeod class in future. We have not space for the EXAMINER editorials, but give Mr. McWilliams' letter, which shows the old Norwood boy is still a hard hitter. * * *

Personal.

Rev. Walter Roger returned home last night from his holiday outing on the back lakes.

Mr. John Wright, Cobourg, Mr. Archie Wright, of Belleville, and Mr. McKeith, of Streetsville, have been spending a few days in town.

Prof. Sawyer has obtained control of the Typewriter Caligraph for Peterborough and district. We hope the Professor may have abundant success.

Mr. Alfred Gracey, of Port Hope, P.D.G.M. of the True Blues, has been in town for the past day or two, and in attendance at the picnic to Stoney Lake.

Mr. W. L. McClelland, of Buffalo, N. Y., is in town attending the funeral, this afternoon, of his infant son, which died while on a visit with its mother to the latters' father, Mr. Giles Webber, Charlotte street.

Mr. H. LeBrun and Mr. Alex. Elliott are in Belleville to-day seeing the Buffalo Bill combination. It is also understood that they will endeavor to bring the noted frontiersman and his collection of cowboys and other attractions to Peterborough.

Mr. W. Brundrette, G.T.R. station agent, left last evening for England, by the Sarmatian of the Allan Line. He will visit relatives and revive old associations in Cheshire. He will be abroad about six weeks. Mr. Geo. Brown, formerly connected with the G. T.R. office here, takes Mr. Brundrette's duties during his absence.

Whose is it?

Chief Johnston has received from the acting chief constable of Hamilton, the following description of a horse and buggy, found in that city on August 14th;—"Bright bay mare, about twelve years old, 14¼ hands high, slightly knee-sprung, rat tail, black points, in fair condition; has a sore on back caused by back-band. Also top-buggy—piano box; corduroy cushion on back; black seat cushion; point broke off end of shaft; spoke broke in off hind wheel; water-proof lap rug, with white and black striped lining. Also nickle-plated harness, breast collar, overcheck bridle, ring rosettes; spring snaps on britchen; round lines." The owner is requested to communicate with Alex. Smith, acting chief constable, Hamilton, Ont.

The "Ten Cent" Store has removed one block south, opposite Alexander's Dry Goods store.

Campbellford.

At cheese board of trade on Wednesday 1,000 boxes were offered and a few hundred sold at 7⅞c.

Belleville.

Alfred Athis, of Picton, was drowned off the Varuna in the bay to-day. He got on the steamer at Thompson's Point about noon, intoxicated, and a few minutes later fell overboard and was drowned. Deceased was married and had six children.

Lakehurst.

(From a Correspondence.)

Mr. Robert Smith, photographer in Peterborough, died in his forty-eighth year, at his father's home at eleven o'clock on Saturday [illegible] Harvey was only of a short duration, but during that time he received the best attendance that could possibly be given him. He was fully reconciled with his Redeemer, and submitted in silent resignation to his will. The funeral, which took place on Monday afternoon, was largely attended. The service was conducted at the deceased's father's house, after which the remains were conveyed to the Harvey cemetery. The bereaved family and parents have the sympathy of their numerous friends and acquaintances.

The funeral sermon was preached by the pastor, in the Presbyterian church last Sabbath.

Miss Patience Chase, while washing, accidentally struck a needle, of which more than half broke, into the palm of her hand. She was taken to Bobcaygeon, where Dr. McCamus, after making a small incision, extracted the needle.

The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper will be dispensed here, D.V., in the Presbyterian Church, by the Rev. Mr. Bell, Peterborough, on the first Sabbath of September next.

Jimmie Weir, a candidate for the Entrance Examination at the Peterborough Collegiate Institute, passed with 458 points, being 4th in order of merit of the successful candidates in Peterborough. Master Weir's success reflects credit both to himself and Mr. Stone, his teacher.

The Nominations for Cardwell.

ORANGEVILLE, Aug. 20.—The Cardwell nominations took place here to-day, Hon. Thomas White was nominated as the conservative candidate and Dr. Allison, liberal.

A Reduction of Rents.

LIMERICK, Aug. 20.—The Earl of Devon has finally made an offer to ten of his tenants to grant their demand for a reduction of 30 per cent. in rents. The tenants will decide to-day whether to pay or resist. A defence fund is being raised, and much excitement prevails.

Howling for Revenge.

PARIS, Aug. 19.—M. Rochefort continues to demand vengeance on England for the alleged murder of Oliver Pain. He still thinks that Lord Lyons, the British ambassador, should be made the object of attack by the friends of Pain, and advises to publicly insult that gentleman.

A Socialistic Demonstration.

LONDON, Aug 20.—The police yesterday raided the Socialists' houses in Hague and Amsterdam. A man was arrested in Amsterdam for placarding a wall with socialistic circulars. He was sentenced to one year's imprisonment. Hundreds of sympathizers followed him to prison displaying red and black flags.

The Agitation in Favor of Riel.

OTTAWA, Aug. 20.—A petition signed by 1,502 residents of Hull, P.Q., has been forwarded to the Governor-General asking for the commutation of the sentence of death passed upon Riel. The French Canadians of Ottawa are also preparing a similar document which will be largely signed.

The Governor-General arrived at 8 a.m. and will remain here ten days. It is said that a deputation of French Canadians will wait on him to urge Riel's respite.

A Seymour Incendiary.

CAMPBELLFORD, Aug. 20.—Mr. Thomas Stillman, of Seymour, swore out an information against his brother, Mr. John Stillman, charging him with having set fire to his barn, which was burned on Sunday morning. The evidence against the prisoner was purely circumstantial. Near the barn and leading to and from it across the field, were foot-prints which corresponded with the boots worn by the prisoner. Mr. Stillman took precaution against obli[illegible] boards over those found near the barn. The prisoner sold his farm last year and for some weeks he resided near Belleville. Subsequently he purchased a property near Woodstock—a few days previous to the fire. He spent Saturday night at the residence of Mr. William Stillman, and slept in a room alone. The latter in his evidence swore that the prisoner did not leave the house during the night, and that he could not have left the house without being heard by some of the family. After hearing the case Justice LeVesconte committed the prisoner for trial at Cobourg, and he was bound in two securities of $1,000.

Cholera's Awful Ravages—Discovery of Hot-beds of Infection.

LONDON, Aug. 20.—The majority of the reports received here give the number of deaths from cholera at Marseilles at almost double that officially announced. A despatch to Reuters' Telegraph Company says the sanitary condition of the city is alarming, and that the epidemic is extending northward.

MADRID, Aug. 20.—The only wealthy persons who have been attacked by the cholera scourge are the public officials, who are compelled to visit the hot-beds of infection. Many people are returning to the city, which they consider safer than the provinces.

TOULON, Aug. 30.—The patients with cholera, in garrison, are recovering. The inhabitants of the city are in no way alarmed.

MARSEILLES, Aug. 20.—There were 23 deaths from cholera in the city yesterday.

Smallpox in Montreal.

It Continues to Spread—There are Now 600 or 700 Cases Under Treatment.

MONTREAL, Aug. 20. — The smallpox spreads here. The number of cases is not known exactly, but it is variously estimated at from 500 to 800. Vaccination is the watchword of the hour. It is enforced as far as possible. The hospital accommodation is limited, and efforts are being made to increase it. In 1876 there was 703 deaths through smallpox in this city; of these 568 were French; in 1877 there were 506 deaths, of these 431 were French; in 1878 there were 728 deaths; of these 622 were French-Canadians; in 1879 there were 472 deaths, of these 417 were French-Canadians; in 1880 there were 140 deaths, of these 111 were French-Canadians; in 1881 there was a local outbreak in Terrebonne, resulting in five deaths, of whom four were French-Canadians; in 1885, from the first of April to the 4th of July, there had been 43 deaths, 35 being French-Canadians. In the Civic Hospital, from April 11 to July 15, 85 patients had been admitted. Of these 28 had died.

FAIRY'S PUNISHMENT.

Can I marry this man when I have these thoughts about him? I can and do, for a month after my final rupture with poor Robin, I enter our little church in bridal white, and promise to love, honor, and obey Lord Westwarren until death do us part.

My honeymoon is spent in Paris, for I insist upon it, although a friend of my elderly bridegroom has placed his home at our disposal. It would have driven me mad if I had been shut up in a country home with Lord Westwarren.

When the honeymoon is over and we return home, I am made much of in society, drive the sweetest pair of ponies, wear the most elegant dresses, and, in short, realise all my girlish dreams. Realised all? Well, every life has its turned-down page, and one cannot expect everything in this world. If I had chosen differently I know I should be an unhappy, discontented woman.

My sisters visit me, and soon make excellent marriages. How delighted I feel to see them comfortably settled.

Only Dolly remains in the old nest, and as time goes on the shy, untidy child blooms out into a fair and graceful maiden. I have always been called the "flower of the flock," and Dolly, they say, resembles me.

When Dolly is sixteen years old, Lord Westwarren succumbs to an attack of gout, and I am left a wealthy widow. I go home to spend the year of mourning in retirement, and to wait with eager impatience for the time when I can take off my widow's cap.

"The nine days' wonder?" I repeat, combing out my long hair, having retired to Phyllis's room in the interval in order to don my dress by a comfortable wrapper.

"Do you know that he saved a boy from drowning, or something of the kind, on the voyage?" says Dolly, looking admiringly at my golden locks. "I could love a man like that, Fitzmaurice."

"You always know all the goings on of the neighborhood," I return, feeling vexed with my sister without exactly knowing why. "I wonder mamma likes you to spend so much time with those vulgar old people, Dolly."

"You forget, Florence," says Dolly, with a smile, "that I am only Dolly Beaforth. and you are Lady Westwarren. Come, give me a kiss and go to bed, for you are tired, I know, and just a little bit cross, Fairy."

"The old name! How I long to hear me addressed as such! Dolly, you are the only one who ever calls me Fairy now, and it is about eight weeks since my husband's death, and Dolly and I are sitting in the drawing-room, now shabby no longer, I with a novel in my listless hand, and my sister—busy child—cutting out flannel petticoats for the sunny old women of the neighborhood.

"Florence," she says with her mouth full of pins, "Do you remember Robert Bernard—I mean the Robert Bernard who went away to America before your marriage. You used to flirt with him, you know."

Do I remember Robert Bernard? A great wave of color rises to the roots of my hair, and I open my book hastily, regardless of the fact that I am holding it up-side down.

"Yes, Dolly," I say. "I do remember Mr. Bernard. Why do you ask the question?"

"Because he is coming home," Dolly answers. "And they do say, Florence, that it's to look for a wife—as if he could not find one out there! I dote on American women."

"You have only seen one American woman," I say, crossly; "and because she was rather nice, you infer that all the rest resemble her. You are like the Cockney, who, having seen a red-haired woman with a cross in her eye in an hotel in Boulogne, came back and told his friends that all French women squinted and had carroty hair. Hy-the-bye, Dolly, I think I shall take off this cap," I add, as I gaze at myself at the mirror.

"It does seem a pity to hide your long hair," acquiesces Dolly, and so the ugly thing is discarded, in spite of my mother's gentle protest. Nobody minds mamma, but Dolly, passed in hopelessly old-fashioned in her ideas.

My little sister's news have set my heart beating as it used to beat when Robin looked at me. He is coming back, and, after all, it is possible that my lover and I may be happy. I am rich, but he is no longer poor, and our joy will be all the greater for our long separation.

We meet in a commonplace way at a commonplace dinner party at the Beechcroft given in his honor, and as I gaze once more at his handsome face grown older, and with a little look of sternness about the well-cut mouth, I feel that I love him better than ever.

Of course we cannot say much before all these people; but he promises to come and see me, and I return home with a light heart, my heart full of delightful anticipations.

"Well," says Dolly, as she helped me to disrobe, "how did you enjoy the party, and what do you think of the nine days' wonder?"

"You have only seen one American woman," I say, crossly; "and because she was rather nice, you infer that all the rest resemble her. Robin call me Fairy in the old loving way. He is coming to-morrow, and perhaps my wish will be realised. Ah! how I long for to-morrow.

Is anything in this world quite up to our expectation? Robin comes, but his manner does not please me.

It is frank, easy, cordial, but there is something wanting.

"Do you think I am changed?" I ask tremulously, and he looks at my face with critical eyes and answers slowly:

"You are more beautiful than ever, Lady Westwarren."

"But I am changed from the old Fairy," I say, and tears spring to my eyes. He does not see them.

"Time changes all things," he says brightly. "Why," with a start, as my little sister enters the room, "this can't be Dolly!"

"But it is, though," she says, with a blush. "You are thinking, I know, of the Dolly who always had her shoes down at heel and her dresses torn; but that is ages ago."

Ages ago! It seems like it to me as I watch the two, and see the admiration in Robin's eyes as he looks at Dolly.

My sister does not know how my heart aches when, after dinner, Robin seeks her society instead of mine.

I am proud, and I hide my disappointment as well as I can, but my punishment is almost greater than I can bear.

But, nevertheless, I have to bear a great deal of it. After his first visit, Robin is always at the place, always asks for Dolly, accompanies her in her rides and drives and walks, and dines with us three or four times a week. I cannot say him nay for very shame, as he has prospered in America, and is reported to have made a fortune; but it may be imagined what purgatory—what intense misery—it is to me to see him lavishing glances and honeyed words upon her, instead of, as I had fondly hoped, upon me—for I love him still. Well, they get married, and I go back to the gay world of fashion; but I refuse offer after offer, until people begin to talk of my "devotion to the dead."

I am glad of it. I would not have them guess the truth, or know that I am a miserable, broken-hearted woman, in spite of all my wealth, and that the person I envy most in the world is gay, light-hearted Dolly.

AN UNEQUAL DIVISION.

In the distribution of rewards, and recognition of services, in connection with the Northwest rebellion, the wheat goes to the pimmed department, and the chaff to the privates who bore the brunt of the hardship and the fighting. While it is proper enough to give General Middleton considerable glory for his prominent share in conducting the expeditionary operations to a successful issue, there seems to be a little disparity in making him a grant of $20,000, and decorating him with a K. C. M. G., while the volunteers are put off with land grants they can't, in one case out of a hundred, take advantage of, or scrip representing the same, which is on the market at $25—a discount of about seventy per cent. Contrast the treatment of the volunteers who are deserving of every honor and reward with the manner which Hon. Joseph Phillipe Rene Adolphe Caron, our perfunctory Minister of Militia, has been honored. The way in which his Department has managed affairs shows that the head thereof was entirely unfitted for discharging satisfactorily and efficiently the duties of the position. Even on the eve of the rebellion, and even when it had actually broken out and blood had been shed, our wise Minister of War denied that there was any outbreak, or that there was need of military force being mobilised for its suppression, and when, in the face of this declaration, he had practically to confess his ignorance of public matters affecting his Department, by ordering out troops, the internal economy was found to be in a sadly neglected condition. The brave boys had to go into the field miserably and inefficiently equipped, and at every step of the campaign important movements were delayed, the contest was prolonged and expense piled on expense, through the miserable manner in which Hon. Mr. Caron conducted the affairs of his Department, or rather allowed affairs to conduct themselves. The bungling, mismanagement, jobbery, waste and wicked extravagance that marked the transport service, is enough of itself to stamp Hon. Mr. Caron and the Government of which he is a member as utterly unfit to occupy the prominent and responsible positions they hold. And yet, this is the man whom the Government, as advisers of Her Majesty, presume to place on a par with General Middleton as worthy of the Knighthood of St. Michael and St. George. And the volunteers who suffered through his neglect of his official duties, and in spite of the way in which they were handicapped thereby, brought an arduous and difficult campaign to a successful conclusion, are put off with servant girls' wages, or land grants that are practically valueless, or scrip that will hardly purchase a suit of clothes. Hon. Mr. Caron may think to hide his official delinquencies behind the unearned honor of a decoration, but he will be mistaken. The day will come when he and the Government with which he was associated will be brought to account.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

If the reader wishes to see how Hon. Mr. Caron, Minister of Militia, as a chevalier, sans peur et sans reproche, merited the distinction of knighthood, conferred on him by the advice of his "pals," he is requested to read the slashing indictment of the Manitoba Free Press, published in another column, under the heading of "Transport Swindles."

Hon. G. W. Ross, Minister of Education, at the stenographers' convention in Toronto, said "he hoped soon to see shorthand taught in the public schools." It is now taught in many of the high schools of the Province as an optional subject, and the young men, with a desire for either business or literary pursuits, need no urging to require a knowledge of it.

The regulation providing that no teacher holding a second-class provincial certificate shall be eligible for appointment as assistant master in a high school, is now brought into force. It is provided, however, that any such teacher at present engaged in a high school may continue his services in that school but in no other until he has passed the prescribed examination at the training institute.

Smokers will further their own interest by insisting upon having the "Cable," or "El Padre" brands of cigars which have stood the test for a quarter of a century, and yet allow greedy and unscrupulous dealers to persuade them to take other brands which yield them a larger profit, the consumer being a loser thereby. 13d-25w

A Triple Alliance.

London, Aug. 19.—[illegible] official of the Foreign Office said to-day that the reports of an alliance, offensive and defensive, between England and China are untrue, but that England, China and Japan have arrived at a satisfactory understanding as to the course to be pursued by each power in the event of a war between England and Russia.

The Mississippi Suit.

In the lawsuit of McLaren vs. Caldwell, the latter have gained an important point. An interim injunction had been obtained, preventing him from running his logs while the case was pending. This he has set aside, so that he can get his lumber to market, leaving the points at issue to be settled at the trial. We presume, as in the other case, it will not be finally settled till it has gone to the Privy Council. Had a final injunction been granted it would not only have been a wrong to the Messrs. Caldwell, but a serious injury to Carleton-Place, where their mill is.

Why he is Thankful.

[illegible] state that he did not offer the services of the Ninth Battalion to go to the front during the late rebellion, but that he was asked by the Militia Minister if it would be ready in the event of its being called upon; he replied in the affirmative, and that on the following day it was called out without any conditions or restrictions whatever. He adds, "Using his own discretion, the General sent us where there was no French half-breeds to fight, and I thanked him from the bottom of my heart." Lt. Col. Amyot is a Tory member of parliament.

A Dangerous Trio.

Sir Charles Tupper has at last with Hon. J. H. Pope gone to visit Sir John Macdonald at Cacouna. A more dangerous trio could not well be got together. The meeting bodes no good to Canada. From Cacouna Sir Charles returns to Montreal and thence proceeds to British Columbia, via the Canadian Pacific Railway. He makes the journey, probably with the object of seeing if Mr. Pope has faithfully looked after the interests of the C. P. R. company, perhaps in order to see if it will be safe for him to resume his position as Minister of Railways. Mr. Pope has carried his Short Line project through Parliament and now would no doubt, just as soon be Minister of something else, providing it could be made to pay. After Sir Charles returns from the Pacific Province he will spend some time in Nova Scotia. This programme hardly tallies with the declaratione of his exceeding haste to return to England.—Globe.

Bathing.

Many people are in the habit of dabbling a great deal in bath-tubs filled with fresh water during hot weather. This is injurious. Sponge-bathing, in the majority of cases, would effect the cooling and refreshing purposes intended, and cleanse the pores just as well. Nature evidently intends a man to bathe frequently in summer. In winter, if one is not engaged in particularly dusty or dirty pursuits, a bath all over once, twice, or perhaps three times a week should be sufficient. Cold baths are the best for the strong and vigorous; but the weaker ones who begin with tepid bathing-water should end each bath with a dash of water as cold as the system will bear. A good friction with a coarse towel, supplemented with a hand rub-down, or perhaps a little bay rum or alcohol rubbed in after the coldest bath, will restore healthy action, and bring a glow to he surface, causing the whole body feel re-invigorated.

There Were Millions in it.

Rothschild's greatest achievement in overreaching distance and his fellow-speculators was in 1815. He was near the Chateau d'Hougoumont on June 18th, watching, as eagerly as Bonaparte and Wellington themselves, the progress of the Battle of Waterloo. All day long he followed the fighting with strained eyes, knowing that on its issue depended his welfare as well as Europe's. At sunset he saw that the victory was with Wellington and his allies. Then, without one moment's delay, he mounted a horse that had been kept in readiness for him, and hurried homeward. Everywhere on his road fresh horses or carriages were waiting to help him over the ground. Riding or driving all night, he reached Ostend at daybreak, to find the sea so stormy that the boatmen refused to trust themselves in it. At last he prevailed upon a fisherman to make the venture for a reward of $100. In that way he managed to reach Dover. At Dover, and at the intermediate stages on the way to London, other horses were in waiting, and he was in London before midnight. Next morning, the morning of June 20th, he was one of the first to enter the Stock Exchange. In gloomy whispers he told those who, as usual, crowded round him for news, that Blucher and his Prussians had been routed by Napoleon before Wellington had been able to reach the field: that by himself he could not possibly succeed, and therefore the cause of England and her allies was lost. The funds fell, as they were meant to fall. Every one was anxious to sell, and Rothschild and his accredited agents scoffed at all who brought them scrip for purchase. But scores of unknown agents were at work all that day and all the next. Before the Stock Exchange closed on the afternoon of the second day, when Nathan Rothschild's strong boxes were full of paper, he announced, an hour or so before the news came through other channels, the real issue of the contest. Very soon the funds were higher than they had been during many previous weeks; and Rothschild found that he had made $5,000,000 by his quick travelling and clever misrepresentation.

Transport Swindles.

We know of one "job" alone out of which the original contractors clagged $200,000 without moving a hand. They sub-let for that sum less than the obtained the contract at. We know of cases of direct larceny, where men, prominent in connection with the transport, deliberately appropriated to their own use valuable stores belonging to the Government, carrying off and hiding their booty like ordinary sneak-thieves, as they were.

Not a dollar short of a million, we have every reason to believe, and do believe, was in effect stolen from the people of Canada by those who were entrusted by the Government with the transportation of supplies for the troops.

We are not making these charges at random, we want the public distinctly to understand. We know that they were true; we can prove that they are true. We know, moreover, that the Government are fully cognizant of the facts to which we are alluding. They have been accurately informed as to all that has transpired by their own friends. Minister of Militia Caron knows as much, probably more, of this matter than we. He, and therefore the Government, knows the names of every one of the gang of robbers [illegible] knows what each of them did. He knows who were the thieves and who the swindlers. He knows minutely the extent of the depredations committed.

We want him to know that we know that he knows. We want the Government to know that we know what it knows. We want the people to know that we know that the Government knows. If the Government were less fully and accurately informed, we would make our charges more definite. For the present, under the circumstances, we feel that we have been explicit enough. If, in the face of what we and they know, the Government dare to proceed as they are at present alleged to be doing with the settlement of accounts, we will later on, furnish the fullest evidence of the truth of our statements.—Manitoba Free Press.

Across Nova Scotia.

A Ship Canal Project that Greatly Interests the People Down East.

A ship-railroad project of great interest is absorbing the attention of men away down east. The scheme is intended to revolutionise the coasting traffic of the Maritime Provinces and develop the resources of the north shore of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. The railway is designed to connect Cumberland Basin, at the head of the Bay of Fundy, with Baie Verte, an arm of Cumberland Strait, Gulf of St. Lawrence. The isthmus which it is to span lies between Westmorland county, New Brunswick and Cumberland county, Nova Scotia, and is the boundary between these two Provinces.

The isthmus is only about a dozen miles wide, and if, as asserted, it is practicable to transport vessels over it, a saving of over 300 miles can be effected in the voyage from the north shore of Prince Edward Island to Boston or other United States ports. By the natural route vessels from the Gulf of St. Lawrence are obliged to make a circuit of Nova Scotia, which is a great obstacle, not only by reason of the distance, but on account of the dangers of navigation along its rocky coast.

Work has already been begun on the railway and good progress is being made, the chief engineer being John Fowler, who constructed the underground railway in London, and is now engaged on the long bridge over the Firth of Forth. Lord Bradbourne, of England, is president of the company engaged in the work. A London syndicate has signed a contract to furnish the money required.

A Little Mixed.

When Fred got up late the other morning his father solemnly quoted to him, "Go to the ant, thou sluggard." Breakfast was no sooner over than the little five-year old disappeared. Ten minutes later he walked into the sitting room of his aunt's house, several blocks away.

"Why, Fred," she said, "how does it happen you are making me so much earlier a call than usual?"

"Papa told me to come and he was mad about it, too."

"Told you to come? Angry about it? Did he send you on an errand?"

"I guess so, but I don't know what he wanted, though."

"What did he say?"

"Why, he just said, 'Go to your aunt, you slugger."—Harper's Bazaar.

PRACTICAL ADVICE TO YOUNG MEN
By an Eminent Divine

THE REV. DE WITT TALMAGE SAYS:—"How a man with no surplus of estate, but still enough money to pay the Premium of a Life Insurance Policy, can refuse to do it, and then look his children in the face and say his prayers at night, on going to bed, expecting them to be answered, is a mystery to me that I have never yet been able to fathom. Procrastination is the Devil's deception." Go to-morrow morning and pay for a Policy.

CHAPTER XI.

A HELL UPON EARTH.

It was midsummer when I left St. Petersburg. The heat was oppressive and quite disturbed my idea of the Russian climate. I went by rail to Moscow, by the iron road which runs straight as a line from the one large city to the other. The Czar ordered it to be so made, without curves or deviations. When the engineers asked him what popular places they should take on their way, his Imperial Majesty took a ruler and on the map ruled a straight line from St. Petersburg to Moscow. "Make it so," were his commands, and so it was made, as rigid and careless of the convenience of other persons as his own despotism—a railway for some four hundred miles running simply to its destination, not daring, however much tempted, to swerve aside and disobey the autocrat's commands.

At Moscow the colossal I lingered a couple of days. It was there I had settled to engage a guide and interpreter. As I spoke two or three languages besides my own, I was able to pick and choose, and at last selected a pleasant-mannered, sharp-looking young fellow who averred that he knew every inch of the great post road to the east. Then bidding farewell to the mighty Kremlin with its churches, watch towers and battlements, I started with my new companion for Nijnei Novgorod; at which place we must bid adieu to the railway.

We passed the old picturesque but decaying town of Vladimir, and after duly admiring its five-domed cathedral I found nothing more to distract my attention until we reached Nijnei. My companion was very anxious that we should linger for a day or two at this city. The great fair was on, and he assured me it was a sight not to be missed. I had not come to Russia to look at fairs or festivities, so commanded him to make instant preparations for continuing the journey.

We now changed our mode of conveyance. Being summer the rivers were open and navigation practicable. We took the steamer and went down the broad Volga till we passed Kasan and reached the River Kama. Up this tortuous stream we went until we landed at the large important town of Perm.

We were five days on the water—I think the five longest days I ever spent. The winding river, the slow-going steamer, made me long for the land again; there one seemed to be making progress. The road there was straight, not running into a hundred bends.

We were now nearly at the end of Europe. A hundred miles further and we shall cross the Ural mountains and be in Asiatic Russia.

At Perm we made our final preparations. From now we must depend on post horses. Ivan, my guide, after the proper amount of haggling, bought a tarantass—a sort of phaeton. The luggage was stowed into it; we took our seats; our first relay of horses were engaged—three in number and harnessed in the peculiar Russian fashion—the yemschik started them with the words of encouragement and endearment which in Russia are supposed to be more efficacious than the thong, and away we went on our long, long drive.

We crossed the Urals, which after all are not so very high. We passed the stone obelisk erected, Ivan told me, in honor of a Cossack chief named Yermak. We read the word "Europe" on the side which first met our eyes, and turning round saw "Asia" written on the back. I spent my first night in Asia at Ekaterineburg; and lay awake the best part of it trying to calculate how many miles stretched between Pauline and myself. For days and days have passed since I left St. Petersburg and I have traveled at all possible speed; yet the journey seems scarcely begun. Indeed, I cannot even guess at its length until I get to Tobolsk.

A trifle of some four hundred miles from Ekaterineburg to Tiumed, another of two hundred from Tiumen to Tobolsk, and I shall await the pleasure of the Governor-General and what information he may choose to give me.

The carriage and ourselves are ferried across the broad yellow Irtuish—that river, the crossing of which by a Russian officer at once raises him a step in rank; for such is the inducement held out to serve in Siberia; and at the east bank of the Irtuish Siberia Siberia proper begins.

Tobolsk at last! The sight of my passports renders the Governor civility itself. He invited me to dine with him, and, as for prudential reasons I thought it better to accept his invitation, treated me royally. His register told me all I wanted to know about Ceneri. He had been sent to the very extreme of the Czar's dominions, as his was a case which called for special severity. Where he would finish his journey was not settled, but that made little difference to me. As he would travel the greater part of the way on foot, and as there was but one road I must overtake him, although he left Tobolsk months ago. The escort which accompanied that particular gang of prisoners was under the command of Captain Variamoff, to whom his Excellency would write a few lines which I should take with me—he would also give me a supplementary passport signed by himself.

"Where do you think I shall overtake the party?" I asked.

The governor made a calculation. "Somewhere about Irkutsk," he thought.

And Irkutsk two thousand miles, more or less, from Tobolsk!

I bade the great man a grateful adieu and quarrel on at each halt that even the good-tempered Ivan began to grumble. Man, even a Russian, was but mortal, he said, and I could not expect to find Arab steeds among government post-horses which the postmasters were compelled to furnish at about twopence a mile a horse. I left the yemschik and himself no time for refreshment. Their tea had not grown cool enough to swallow before I was insisting on a fresh start. And as for a proper night's rest!

Tea! Until I made that journey I never knew the amount of tea a mortal stomach could hold. One and all they drank it by the gallon. They carried it about compressed into bricks, cemented, I heard with a shudder, by sheep's or some other animal's blood. They drank it morn, noon and night. Whenever there was a stoppage and boiling water could be obtained bucketfuls of tea were made and poured down their throats.

The impressions I retain of that long journey are not very deep. I was not traversing the country for the sake of writing a book of travels, or to observe the manner and customs of the people. My great object was to overtake Ceneri as quickly as possible, and my endeavors were directed to passing from one post-house station to another as quickly as I could. We sped over vast steppes, wild marshes, through forests of birch, tall pines, oak, ash, and other trees; we were ferried over broad rivers. On and on we went as straight to our destination as the great post road would take us. When nature forced us to rest we had to put up with such pitiful accommodation as we could get. Unless the place at which we stopped was of some importance, inns were unknown. By dint of practice, I at last contrived to obtain almost enough sleep, if not to satisfy me, to serve my needs, whilst jolting along in the tarantass.

It was a monotonous journey. I turned aside to visit no objects of interest spoken of by travelers, From morn to night and generally through the greater part of the night our wheels rolled along the road. And at every posting station I read on the wooden post which stands in front of it the number of miles we were from St. Petersburg, until, as the days and weeks passed, I began to feel appalled at the distance I had come and the distance I must return. Should I ever see Pauline again? Who can say what may have happened before I return to England? At times I grew quite dispirited.

I think what made me realize the length of the journey even more than days or measured miles was to see, as we went on, the country people gradually changing their costume and dialect. The yemschiks who drove us changed in appearance and in nationality; the very breed of the horses varied. But let man or cattle be of what kind they may, we were well and skillfully conducted.

The weather was glorious, almost too glorious. The cultivated country we passed through looked thriving and productive. Siberia was very different in appearance from what is usually associated with its name. The air when not too warm was simply delicious. Never have I breathed a more invigorating and bracing atmosphere. There were days when the breeze seemed to send new life through every vein.

The people I thought fairly honest, and whenever I found a need of producing my papers the word civility will scarcely express the treatment I received. How I should have been treated without these potent talismans I cannot say.

The whole country-side in most places was busy with the hay-harvest; a matter of such importance to the community at large that convicts are told off for some six weeks to assist in the work of saving the crops. The wild flowers, many of them very beautiful, grew freely; the people looked well and contented. Altogether my impressions of Siberia in summer were pleasant ones.

Yet I wished it had been the dead of winter. Then it is that, in spite of the cold, one travels more pleasantly. Ivan assured me that when a good snow road is formed and a tarantass may be exchanged for a sledge, the amount of ground passed over in a day is something marvelous. I am afraid from memory to say how many miles may be covered in twenty-four hours when the smooth-going runners take the place of wheels.

We had, of course, various small accidents and delays on the road. However strongly built a tarantass may be it is but mortal. Wheels broke, axle-trees gave way, shafts snapped, twice we were overturned, but as no evil except delay ensued I need not relate the history of these misfortunes.

Nor need I enumerate the towns and villages through which we passed unless I wished to make my story as interesting as a scriptural genealogy—Tara, Kainsk, Kolmvan, Tomsk, Achinsk, Krasnoyarsh, Nijni Udinsk, may or may not be familiar to the reader, according to the depth of his geographical studies; but most of the others, even if I knew how to spell their names, would be nothing more than vain sounds. Perhaps, when we trace the march of the Russian army destined to invade our Indian Empire we may become better acquainted with the Czar's Asiatic dominions.

Yet at the entrance to each of these little towns or villages, the very names of which I have forgotten, so surely as you found the well-appointed posting station, you found also a gloomy square building, varying with the size of the place, surrounded by a tall palisade, the gates of which were barred, bolted and sentried—these buildings were the ostrogs, or prisons.

Here it was that the wretched convicts were housed as they halted on their long march. In these places they were packed like sardines in a box. Prisons built to hold two hundred were often called upon to accommodate at least twice that number of luckless wretches. I was told that when ice was breaking up in the rivers; when the floods were out; when in fact the progress must perforce be delayed, the scenes at these prisons or depots beggared description. Men, sometimes unsexed women with them, huddled into rooms reeking with filth, the floors throwing out poisonous emanations—rooms built to give but scanty space to a small number, crowded to suffocation. The mortality at times was fearful. The trials of the march were as nothing when compared with the horrors of the so called rest. And it was in one of these ostrogs I should find Ceneri.

The Daily Examiner.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 21, 1885.

Use the Telephone.

Friends and patrons of the EVENING EXAMINER are requested to use the telephone in communicating items of news which may come under their notice. We should be glad to avail ourselves of any information transmitted in that way before 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Work Begun.

Mr. Rutherford, contractor, has begun work on the construction of the double brick villa for Mr. Lech on Stewart street.

Thanks.

Rev. L. A. H. Allan has sent the EXAMINER an invitation to be present at his annual picnic at Uxbridge on Sept. 3rd. An excursion train will be run over the Midland.

Scott Act Convention.

All temperance workers willing to assist in organizing in the town for the Scott Act election, are invited to meet in a convention to be held in the Y. M. C. A. hall, on Monday, 24th August, at 8 p.m One of the organizers employed will be present to direct the proceedings.

He Collars The Cup.

Young Johnston, the Oriental hotel bell-boy, was successful in the juniors' race at the Lansdowne rink again last night, easily beating a lad named Chamberlain who had pitted himself against him. Johnston has now won this race three times and thus becomes entitled to the cup offered by the management. The senior boys' race will not be held until next Friday evening.

A Big Thing at the Lansdowne.

Mr. Ed. Brown, the enterprising manager, is keeping up the attractions at this popular resort. On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, August 24th, 25th and 26th, the celebrated trio of Royal Russian Athletes will appear in their astonishing acrobatic and athletic feats, which are the wonder of all who see them. Skating both before and after the performance. The Fire Brigade Band in attendance.

The Prize List.

The prize list of the Peterborough Central Exhibition, for 1885, has been issued from THE EXAMINER Office, and copies of it are now being circulated. The inborn modesty of the newspaper profession forbids any remarks as to the beauty of its design or the excellency of the workmanship, but there is no doubt that it can at least be read, and that, after all, is what exhibition printing is intended for. The prize list is a most extensive one in every department, amounting in the aggregate to $2,000.

Trying Their Trotters.

A small gathering of horsemen was attracted to the driving track yesterday afternoon, by the matched race for $50 a side, between W. Clancy's mare "Skylark," and T. Howden's horse "Buckskin." The race was in mile heats, best three in five, and resulted in an easy win for the mare "Skylark," in three straight heats. Howden's horse never having a chance from start to finish. The time was given as 3:07¼, 3:13 and 3:5¼. The winner was driven by H. Winch, and E. Brown sat in the sulky behind Buckskin. The judges were Messrs. T. Pettitt, of Lakefield, and C. E. Starr and W. Kennealy, Peterborough; J. Daly was the starter. There was little betting on the event, and "Skylark" seemed to be fancied before the start. Howden is anxious for another trial.

Lawn Tennis and Tea.

The Tennis members of the P. A. A. A. yesterday afternoon and evening entertained a number of lady friends at a Tennis party in the Association grounds, Ashburnham. The services of the Spadafori family of musicians had been secured for the occasion and their playing added much to the pleasure of the afternoon. The ladies had thoughtfully made arrangements for supplying tea and refreshments on the grounds, and about six o'clock the tennis players adjourned for a time and devoted their attention to these, after which play was resumed and kept up with great vigor till the waning light gave warning that lawn tennis, like all other earthly enjoyments, must end somewhere, when the party broke up. Many ladies who did not join in the sport watched the agile movements of the players as they tossed the ball back and forth, with much interest, and when the four courts were going at the same time the scene was a most animated and pretty one.

ATHLETICS.

Lacrosse.

THE ST. PAULS AND PETERBOROUGHS.

No definite reply has at present been received to the communication sent to the St. Paul lacrosse players asking them to play here. They will be in Montreal to-morrow, and Mr. H. Giroux, secretary of the Peterboroughs, has addressed a letter to them, in care of Mr. Snow, the Shamrocks' secretary, and expects an answer on Monday.

DROP SHOTS.

The St. Paul club play in Toronto on Saturday, Aug. 29th.

The Etnas, of Georgetown, and the Berlin club played a match at Berlin yesterday. The Etnas won in three straight games. Time, 7 mins., 13 mins., and 14 mins., respectively.

The Athletics, of Toronto, and Olympics, of Milton, played a well contested game of lacrosse on the 17th inst. It resulted in a victory for the Athletics in three straight games.

Base Ball.

CLIPPERS VS. COBOURG.

The match between the Clippers and Cobourg yesterday resulted in a victory for the former by a score of 12 to 10. Owing to three costly errors in the third and fifth innings, the Clippers made three and six runs respectively, which—with the three in the other seven innings—made a total of 12. Cobourg did well at the bat, making 22 base hits and 3 earned runs, but were discounted by numerous errors in the field. The Clippers had only four errors, but made no earned runs. Cobourg would be a good club for Peterborough to tackle.

A HIGH-PRICED PITCHER FINED.

Casey, pitcher for the Detroit baseball club, was suspended indefinitely, without pay, yesterday. Some time ago he was fined $100. He got mad and refused to obey orders. The directors then added $50 to the fine. Casey grew red hot and refused to pitch. His suspension followed. Casey is a very young player, being only 19 years of age, and was getting the largest salary paid to any member of the club—$400 per month.

Council Meeting.

A meeting of the Town Council has been called for this evening. The object is announced as general business, and it is likely that some subjects of general interest will be up for discussion.

Prob's Weather Promises.

The following forecast of the weather for this district for the 24 hours from 1 a. m. to-day, is received from the Toronto Meterological office:—Fresh to strong east and south winds; fair to cloudy warmer weather, local showers by night.

Operations Resumed.

Mr. Geo. Goodwin, contractor on the Trent navigation works at Burleigh Falls, went to-day from Peterborough to resume the work recently interrupted. It is understood that it is the intention of the contractor to push on the work as rapidly as possible. A full gang of laborers are at work to-day.

Saved Army.

We have no doubt that the many friends of Captain Hayes will take advantage of this opportunity to hear her. She will be at the Army meeting this (Friday) evening, after which she will return to Kingston. She will then proceed with Div. Capt. Munt and others to Cape Vincent, where they intend opening a branch of the Saved Army on Saturday next, 22nd inst.

Power for the Stove Works.

A 50 horse power engine, for the Powell and Jones Peterborough Stove Works arrived in town to-day from the establishment of Messrs Goldie and McCullough of Galt. It is what is known as the variable cut off engine, and of the best of its kind. The walls are up to the second story and it is expected that operations in stove moulding will be commenced shortly and stoves will be on the market by the end of September.

Well Worth Seeing.

The world renowned Royal Russian Athletes will appear and perform at the Lansdowne Rink on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, August 24th, 25th and 26th. They will present their great gladiatorial Roman balancing act, and champion double horisontal bar performance, introducing the great English clown, Fredericks. A magnificent performance will delight all who attend. At the rink, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings. Admission 15 cents.

A Pleasant Picnic.

About fifty members of the Girls' Friendly Society and their friends yesterday embarked on the steamer Golden Eye for an excursion and picnic to Idyl Wild. On arriving there the day was very agreeably spent by them, dinner being enjoyed al fresco. They returned by the evening steamer, taking tea on board, and arrived home in good time after a day of healthful enjoyment. The ladies under whose management the affair was carried out are loud in their praise of the courtesy of the captain and crew of the Golden Eye.

Departmental Examinations.

The following is a list of the successful candidates from Peterborough and Lindsay, who passed the non-professional examinations in July:—Peterborough.—Third class—M. Condon, E. Brodie, H. Laugh. Second class—M. Armstrong, B; E. Coombes, B; G. Bennett, B. Lindsay.—Third class—F. Bigelow, D. Keys, W. Morgan, J. McCracken, D. McDougall, H. Finney, E. Griffin, A. Patterson, N. Delury, M. Leigh, G. Blackwell, J. Cook, J. Denny, L. Finney, H. Pattyson, R. Ward, G. Howe. Second class.—A. Jewett, A; C. Smith, A; C. McPhaid, A; M. Smith, B; E. Sharpe, B.

Peterborough's Prime Cheese.

Lots of it, but Low Prices and Limited Bidding.

The regular fortnightly cheese market was held yesterday afternoon in the Council Chamber, Mr. J. M. Drummond presiding, and the Secretary, Mr. Warren Taylor, conducting the transactions. The attendance was not large, the following being the buyers present:—Messrs. W. Clinton, W. H. Wrighton and B. Green, town, J. D. Flavelle, Lindsay, and W. Cook, Belleville. The following are the factories boarded and the quantities offered by them:—

The cable quotation was announced as 38 shillings, Woodstock market on the 19th reported no sales, London, Ont., prices from 7¼ to 8 cents.

The bidding was very slow. J. W. Flavelle made an offer of 6⅞c. for July cheese in Lindsay district, and Mr. Green was understood to bid 7c., but withdrew his bid.

There seemed little prospect of any sales being made and at this juncture the secretary stated that if any seller sold after leaving the market he (the secretary) would either resign or have the seller's name taken off the list. Mr. Flavelle then made an offer of 6⅞c. for Lindsay district July, which was refused, and Mr. B. Green bid 7c., which was accepted.

The Relentless Reaper.

A young girl of about 15, who is being brought up by Mr. David Crowley, of Ennismore, had her hand severely crushed in the machinery of a reaper this morning. It seems that the hired man was adjusting some part of the machine, and got the girl to assist him by holding some piece of it, when she got her fingers involved in the cogs and crushed. She was brought to town for medical treatment, when it was found that the hand was so badly lacerated that amputation may have to be resorted to, although every endeavor will be made to avoid that extremity.

What We Would Like to See.

Buffalo Bill in Peterborough next week.
And the St Paul Lacrosse Club.
In fact, anything to make things lively.
Those post holes around Court House Park filled in.

What they are Saying.

We never saw business duller.—The merchants.

Peterborough nearly got away with the Clippers on Wednesday. The score was 11 to 10.—Toronto World.

It's time they passed the Scott Act in Peterborough. When a man gets drunk there they call it "alcoholic paralysis."—Lindsay Post.

What We may Expect.

Fine weather after the rain.
A challenge from the Cobourg base ball men.
A meeting of the Council for general business to-night.
And a racket on exemptions,
Accompanied by petitions to the Council.
A fine evening for the concert by the Fire Brigade Band.

Smiths Market.

Peaches, Plums, Pears, Grapes, Oranges, Lemons, Apples, Cherries, Garden Raspberries, Melons, Currants, Gooseberries, and all kinds of green vegetables. Ripe Tomatoes one dollar per box, twenty pounds in the box. Fresh Fish, Hams and Bacon.

More Attractions at the Golden Lion.

Fair, VanEvery & Co. are daily opening new fall goods. Their grand exhibit this season is well worth your inspection, as they will surpass their former efforts for quantity, variety, quality and cheapness. See their new Cretonnes with Fringes to match, Lace Curtains, Edermine and Embroidered Scrim Cloths, Boating Wraps, Fancy Dark English Prints, etc.

THE LAW OF

Supply and Demand

It makes no difference how big a man or how big a business is, there's something that's always bigger—the "LAW OF SUPPLY AND DEMAND."

We can't make men wear two Suits of Clothes at once, just to double the Demand, big as our house and business is.

But we succeed, by the Quality and Price of our "Supply" to invoke the demand to satisfy itself at

PANTS.

How often does it happen that the general comfort and happiness of man depends on a good fitting pair of pants. Nothing will ruffle a man's temper more than to find when he tries on his latest new pair of pants that they are either too long or too short; that they pinch him so bad in one place that he dare not stoop, and are so large and baggy around the waist and knees that he is afraid he might be taken for the departed "Smith."

A SAFE THING TO DO

If you want to avoid all troubles and get a good fitting pair of pants that will feel as comfortable as a woollen mit, leave your order at the

SATURDAY, AUGUST 22, 1885.

TOWN COUNCIL.

Attempt to Repeal the Dickson Estate Exemption.

That Hose Again.

A meeting of the Town Council was held last evening. Mayor Cox presided, and the following members were in their seats:—Councillors Cahill, Davidson, McNaughton, Kelly, Green, Yelland, Douglas, Rutherford, Kendry and Menzies. After the minutes of last meeting had been read and confirmed.

have much pleasure in supporting the resolution put forward by Conn. Menzies at the last meeting, that the whole of the George street property owners should be exempted from taxation.

The following

COMMUNICATIONS

were then read:—

From James E. Belcher reporting on condition of Smith street bridge.

From Mr. E. B. Osler, Toronto, acknowledging receipt of statement of account, $214-24.

From F. J. Macklin acknowlegiag receipt of resolution passed by Council.

A number of small accounts were presented, among which was one of $5 for a pair of boots for "Pants."

Councillor McNaughton inquired who had authorized the purchase of these boots. He thought there was something wrong about it. This man Smith had come to town a stranger; was in good health and without family. He had been seen a few days before he left town at the council's expense, with several bills in his possession, which he was squandering in drink.

The accounts were referred to the committee on finance.

THE DICKSON EXEMPTION.

Councillor Yelland then rose to move that the by-law exempting the Dickson estate from taxation be repealed. He thought that measure had been altogether too sweeping, and that it should not be allowed to stand.

The mayor requested Councillor Cahill to take the chair, as he desired to address the council in reference to this matter. On Councillor Cahill complying with the request, Mayor Cox, addressing the meeting, said that he was surprised at Mr. Yelland's resolution, and thought that gentleman did not fully understand the nature of the bill, or he would not have raised any objection to it. If Peterborough was ever to be anything, they must encourage manufactories, and he failed to see how it was going to injure Mr. Yelland, if the council said to the managers of the Dickson estate that they would not for the next ten years increase their taxation. No matter what stand point it was viewed from, he could not see how it would be detremental to the interests of the town.

Councillor Yelland said that if the Dickson property were exempted, other grist millers could not compete with them.

The Mayor thought that argument was hardly to the point. There was $50,000 of assessment on the Dickson property and the bill simply said if you like to increase the value of the property by erecting new buildings on it the taxation will not be increased for the next ten years, and at the same time to Mr. Hilliard or anyone else who was in the manufacturing business, if you wish to increase or extend your buildings, or to improve your machinery or enlarge your operations we will not increase your taxation. There was

NO GREAT ENCOURAGEMENT

for anyone to put up buildings for manufacturing purposes. He had himself, in company with Mr. Stevenson, canvassed the town trying to get stock taken up in the lock works and the stove works and all they could get taken was $1,000 by Mr. Hilliard, $1,000 from Mr. Burnham, $1,000 from Mr. Carnegie and $2,000 from Mr. Dunlop. He himself had at that time been so committed to the project that he could not withdraw from it and now would have to bear the brunt. He expected shortly to pay out $4,000 for wages and material and there were now in town 40 men who had been brought here and were waiting to go to work. Men with the requisite amount of money could not be induced to enter into these enterprises unless some advantage was extended to them. Was it not reasonable and fair, he would ask, that men willing to risk their capital in manufacturing should have some encouragement? No one would pretend to say that there was any money in putting up manufactories on the Dickson estate now, and even with the recently conferred advantages there was great difficulty in getting any one to take stock in any such enterprise. The cry had often been raised that if this great water power were in the hands of people of energy great things might be done, and now, as soon as the company came forward and were willing to go ahead, they got no encouragement. He had himself taken some stock in the thing, but the management was still in the hands of of the parties of whom it had been said that they

WOULD NOT DO ANYTHING

to improve the property and benefit the town. Property had increased in value across the river because the company had bought the Rogers property, and they were willing to increase it further, and should be encouraged. He would be delighted to see Mr. Yelland put up a five story building on his lot and fill it with carriage manufacturing, and believed it could be done advantageously, too. Why could he not go down to the race and take the benefit of exemption, too; they would give him a building at 5 per cent. on on the cost of it.

Councillor Yelland pointed out that some who had tried to fly their kite so high in this way had broken down.

The Mayor thought that only another reason why men willing to take the risk should be encouraged.

Councillor Yelland replied that though these men had failed and brought no benefit to the town their competition had been injurious to others in the same business. He believed that any business that could not be made to pay without exemption should not be started.

The Mayor, resuming, said that the fact of exempting a new comer did not impose any fresh taxation on the taxpayers, they could not consistently repeal this bill without also repealing that in reference to the

THE LOCK AND STOVE WORKS.

Councillor Yelland explained that what he objected to was that the owners of the Dickson estate might put up a building in which any kind of industry might be started and exempted from taxes, and that industry might injure someone already engaged in it who did not enjoy exemption.

The Mayor thought that they should be allowed to do so, and that the new industry would not hurt anyone.

Councillor McNaughton said that the ratepayers were glad to exempt the stove works and the lock works, but when the Dickson exemption was passed he took everything the Mayor had said for granted, but had learned much since. He had thought that the Dickson estate only went from the iron bridge to the railway, but had since discovered that it went further north and took in the flour mill and every other factory that was built, and gave the owners of the estate a chance to put any kind of a factory they liked on the race. It seemed to him that Mr. Denne, Mr. Wm. and Mr. P. Hamilton, and other manufacturers in town, should have the same right, but the question was,

WHO WOULD PAY THE TAXES?

He was willing to allow the same liberty to the Dickson estate as to the stove works, if they put up a building for any industry that we had not at present; every ratepayer was willing to do so. He believed that not half a dozen ratepayers in town were pleased with the by-law, were the working people to pay all the taxes of the town? These exemptions would amount to $150,000.

Councillor Douglas was willing to exempt any building the Dickson estate might erect for manufacturing purposes, but was opposed to their having the free sweep to build anything they pleased on the exempted property in competition with men who had been struggling for the last fifty years to make a living, and who had to pay taxes while the others went free. It was putting money into these people's pockets, and inducing people to start business on their race, that would drive others out of town. Whenever the Dickson estate put up a building, and showed clearly what it was for, if it was a purely new industry, they had a right to be exempted as well as had the lock works and stove factory.

The Mayor pointed out that the Dickson Company required encouragement to expend money in the buildings for manufacturing purposes. The town of Lindsay had gone to the expense of procuring special legislation to exempt the Sylvester Agricultural Works for 99 years,

PRACTICALLY FOR EVER.

The result was that they now had an important industry they would otherwise have been without, employing from 70 to 80 hands. The repealing of the by-law simply meant the shutting out of such a chance as this. The Dickson Co. was now putting up a building 40x80 feet, and he did not know of a single tenant for it yet, the only indication being that a letter had been received by a gentleman in town asking if there was a probability of his being able to form a company for the manufacture of saws here, and if power could be had. Had not that building been going up there would have been no chance of bringing that man here. His was an argument in favor of letting the bill stand. No one would be the worse and a great many would be the better.

Councillor Rutherford said he did not know what Lindsay would do without the Sylvester works. In other towns and cities, St. Thomas, London, Hamilton, Brantford and Toronto the same thing as had been done here was being done. There had been a time when Peterborough for manufacturing industries, and it seemed very strange to him that things should have [illegible] Council were as much enlightened three weeks ago as now, and he could not see why they had so suddenly changed their minds. The matter had been fully explained and there were few objections to it. If Mr. Yelland chose, he could avail himself of the advantages offered on the Dickson estate. If the value of property in Peterborough could be raised two or three hundred thousand dollars the town would be benefited. If no manufactories were brought to the town it would have to depend altogether upon the agricultural resources of the surrounding country which were not extensive enough to sustain the rate of progress the town had been making. The question of taxes would be met by the increase of population. It had been said that George street merchants had not been paying their way. Well, what would help them to pay their way better than to have industries started here that would bring an increased population to spend money with them.

IT WAS THE ONLY WAY

he knew of to keep up a town, and if Port Hope or Lindsay had had the same chance they would have jumped at it.

Councillor Kendry said he was for encouraging all industries and bringing manufactories to town. He thought that the only mistake in the by-law was that it might oppose industries already existing. If any one enlarged their business and brought more people into town it paid to exempt them, for the increase in population they would bring would more than balance the thing. He would support any motion to exempt Messrs. Denne or Hilliard if they increased their establishments.

Councillor Douglass thought that if a man built $13,000 of houses he did as much good as the man who built a factory, as long as he paid taxes on them.

Councillor Kendry inquired what would be the use of empty houses.

Councillor McNaughton wanted to correct Mr. Rutherford, who had said he had changed his mind. He held the opinion that, instead of exempting the Dickson property, Mr. Hazlitt should come to the Council each time he started a new factory.

Councillor Menzies thought it would be well to reconsider the matter, and moved for that the Mayor pointed out that on the strength of the by-law, which had been duly passed, the Dickson estate was now putting up a building. He thought that instead of any general business going down Mr. Yelland or any other manufacturer might advantageously avail themselves of the benefit of the power in that building. So far as any interest of his own was concerned, he would undertake to sell his stock in the company at any time during the ten years for what he gave for it plus five per cent., and he believed the owners of the Dickson estate would do the same. He regarded it as of vital importance to introduce manufactories into the town. The building of the O. & Q. Railway had induced a temporary prosperity, and unless something were now done to employ labor that prosperity must decrease.

Councillor Kelly had been told that they had not the power to exempt property in the manner in which the Dickson estate had been exempted.

The Mayor had not heard whether or not it was illegal, but if it was he held that the town was to secure such a law as would make it legal.

Mr. Henry Denne then addressed the Council, stating that he had heard that the Dickson company were putting the roller process in their mill and as he was doing the same he considered it unjust that they should be freed of taxes he was obliged to pay. Parties had come to him looking for power to start new industries, and he could by making certain improvements and enlargements in his machinery, be in a position to meet them, but could not do it if he was taxed. He thought the Hamilton's had as good a right to have their taxes remitted if they made additions to their buildings as anyone else.

The Mayor thought this should encourage them to improve their property, and that was why he favored the exemption.

Councillor Yelland was going to extend his coal yard, and thought it a fit industry to be exempted.

The Mayor said that was not a manufacturing industry, but if Mr. Yelland wanted to extend his carriage business he could do so and get the benefit of exemption.

He then resumed his chair, and Councillor Cahill closed the discussion by stating that he had voted in favour of the by-law, and was now prepared to stand by it. There was evidently a misunderstanding in regard to the matter. The only thing he saw was that there might be a chance of adverse competition. As regarded the carriage industry he had noticed that wheels and other parts of carriages were brought here from other places. He could not see but what it would be as well to make them right down

ON THE DICKSON RACE.

There was, too, a misunderstanding in regard to the assessment, and he believed that instead of the town losing by the exemption they would gain by the increased value of the property. He wished we had three or four more raceways to exempt. As for Messrs. Denne and Patterson, they might rest assured that when they came to the council and showed that they were going to make bona fide improvements, they would get a fair chance too.

Councillor Menzies, seconded by Councillor Yelland, moved "that the by-law exempting the Dickson property, and all other industries exempted from taxes by by-laws, and all applications asking for exemptions now before this Council be referred to the following committee:—viz., Messrs. Cahill, Yelland, Douglas, Kelly, Rutherford, Kendry, Green and the mover, who shall report to the next meeting of the Council."

Councillor Cahill was for having a straight away vote on the matter. If the Council had done wrong it was for them to acknowledge it in a manly way. He would suggest in order to bring it to a vote that a resolution calling for a by-law to amend the by-law be moved for.

Councillor Rutherford, seconded by Councillor Kendry moved "that the petition of Henry Denne and others asking for partial exemption from taxation on the same terms as passed for the Dickson estate by-law be granted."

Councillor Yelland, seconded by Councillor Douglas, moved for the preparation of a By-law to repeal the Dickson By-law, but withdrew it again in favor of Mr. Menzies' motion, which ultimately carried.

THE HOSE QUESTION.

Councillor Rutherford stated that out of of the 1400 or 1500 feet of hose owned by the town, not more than 600 feet, according to the Engineer's report, were fit for service, and in case of a serious fire much loss of property must ensue, and he moved for the purchase of 200 feet of Maltese Cross Hose, from Mr. Mellon, agent for the Maltese Cross Brand of Hose, in Toronto.

Councillor Douglass said that though a member of the Fire and Water Committee, this was the first that he had heard about the matter. Mr. Rutherford seemed to be doing the whole thing himself. The advice of the Committee should have been taken. The report of the Captain of the Fire Company had only called for 200 feet, which had already been procured.

Councillor Rutherford explained that the report of the Chief came in after the purchase of the 200 feet. The old hose was very defective and was continually bursting. Of course if the Council did not see fit to purchase new hose it was none of his business.

Councillor Kendry was in favor of making the purchase and changing the couplings.

Councillor Davidson said it was only within the last month that they had discovered that the hose was rotten. He believed a test would show that there was more good hose than had been stated. If it was as bad as represented he could only say that it on some one. $2,200 had been expended on hose during the last five years. He also noticed that the hose recommended was quoted 10c. higher than the price paid by the Toronto department.

At this juncture a gentleman named Humphrey, who divides his time about equally between performing philanthropic deeds to local fire companies and pushing the interests of Mr. Thomas McIlroy, of the Parkdale Rubber works, addressed the Council at great length, dwelling in doleful tones on the lamentable state of things existing in the Peterborough Fire Brigade, and gradually brightening up as he expatiated on the good Samaritan-like work he had been doing for them, finished up in an enthusiastic panegyric on the excellence of the Maltese cross hose and making the modest suggestion that 2,000 feet of the aforesaid excellent article, which he would be delighted to supply, should be purchased.

Councillors Cahill and Douglas complimented Mr. Humphreys on his oratorical talent, and said that such a sweeping denunciation of the management of fire matters coming from such reflected very severely on the management of the Fire Department that the Chief's coat was gone all to pieces, and that $167 paid to Mr. W. Hamilton for repairs had been wasted. It was certainly too bad. It was to be hoped the chairman of the Fire, Water and Light committee would be able to explain the matter. $2,240 had been spent in five years for hose, and now we were told we had none good for anything. Had we been getting cast off hose, or what was the matter? It was time the whole council in a body should resign or else sack the fire department.

Councillor Rutherford said he had had occasion before to bring to notice the fact that the engine was badly cared for.

Some discussion followed as to the value of the hook and ladder cart recently brought to town, Councillor Yelland expressing a desire to build a similar one at a far lower figure than that asked for it.

The matter was settled by the carriage of the following resolution, moved by Councillor Kendry, seconded by Councillor Douglass,—"That the Fire, Water and Light Committee be instructed to examine the hose in stock in the fire department, and to report thereon to the Council."

SMITH STREET BRIDGE.

The matter of repairs to Smith street bridge was next taken up, and after some discussion it was resolved that tenders for its repair be advertised for.

On motion of Councillor Green, seconded by Councillor Kelly, $8.00 was granted to Mrs. Henry Carveth, a poor sick woman, to pay her rent.

The Council then adjourned.

Sunday School Picnic.

"A day in the woods." A realistic sketch in black and white. It is a glad picnic party. The Sunday school has gone out into the leafy forest. The dark object in the heavens 800 miles wide and 2,000 miles long is a cloud. It got to the woods as soon as the picnic, and is there yet. Under the great oak you can see the dinner. The large waterproof mound in the middle of the table sullenly laughing at the storm is a fruit cake. The teacher of the infant class made it herself for the little ones. But the storm saved them. See, the lightning struck the cake. It will never strike anything else. There stands the cake without a dent, and under the table, shattered and blighted, lies the thunderbolt. Under the cedar tree is a dying dog. He got in the way and the superintendent felled him to the earth with one blow of a biscuit. The tall figure wrapped in the ghostly drapery of a water-soaked linen duster, leading the way to the cars, is the teacher of the young ladies' bible class. His influence with that class is gone forever. The young ladies will never be able to look at him again without thinking how he looked on this occasion. Up in the hickory tree you see a grief-stricken face peering down. It is the superintendent. He climbed up there to fix the swing, and before they could throw him the rope the storm came up and the picnic adjourned sine die and sine mora. And he is waiting for the last straggler to disappear before he comes down. He has officiated at Sunday school picnics often enough to know better than slide down a shell-bark hickory before an audience. The man with the umbrella under his arm is the treasurer. He is getting drenched, but he does not raise the umbrella. He knows there is a name painted on the inside of it, but for the life of him he can't remember whose name it is. He is watching his chance to give the umbrella to a stranger.—R.

POSTPONED.

Owing to the absence from town, on their holidays, of many young men interested in the movement, the meeting for the formation of a Young Men's Liberal Club, which was to have taken place in Mr. Geo. A. Cox's office on Monday evening has been postponed. It will now be held on the evening of Thursday, September 3rd, when it is expected there will be a large gathering of young Liberals present.

THE GOVERNMENT PRINTING SCANDAL.

Systematic bribery under various forms is the life blood of the present Dominion Government. Sir John has thriven on it for years, and his underlings have become ready adepts in applying his methods. Sir John has sense enough to recognize, however, the immense influence on public opinion exercised by the press, and the muzzling of the press is the latest form of bribery he hits upon. Last year, to effect his purposes, over $200,000 of illicit printing was distributed among the party organs, and, therefore, when wrong-doing is to be condemned they are dumb, and when political rascality is to be justified their subsidized columns reek with a fulsome flow of laudation and excuse. Mr. James Somerville, North Brant, has prosecuted a vigorous campaign against the printing scandal, and he has unearthed the job completely. The party organs have not had hearted defence. Mr. Somerville again fastens the guilt upon the Government in a most unmistakable manner. Hon. Thomas White has been made Minister of the Interior, and to indicate his fitness for the position, his qualifications to disinterestedly serve his country, may be shown by the figures below, indicating the extent to which he has profited personally—though, perhaps, indirectly, yet personally, as the proprietor-in-chief of the Montreal Gazette, Mr. Somerville, in his journal, the Dundas True Banner, says:—

"In every case in the accounts rendered for printing emigration pamphlets, charges were made for double the amount of press work performed, as can be verified by an examination of the accounts and pamphlets. The steal was a systematic one all round and was perpetrated with the connivance and approval of the Government. Take the case of the Montreal Gazette, the property of the Hon. Thomas White and family. In the accounts rendered and paid for the British Columbia pamphlet, Mr. White charged for printing 11,046 tokens of press work when he only printed 5,523 tokens—and he was paid for this at 30 cts. per token when the contractors at Ottawa could only have charged 10 cts. per token. That is, Mr. White got $3313.80 for work which the Government could have had done for $552.30—a clear overcharge of $2761.50 on press work alone on this one pamphlet. In the same way the Spectator people pocketed on the pamphlets they printed for press work $6,259.50, which work the contractors could only have charged $1,043.30 for—a clear steal of $5,216.20. Then Mr. White charged $4,768.02 for binding the British Columbia pamphlet, when the regular trade price could not have been more then $1841—an overcharge of $2,927,-02—and the Spectator jobbers charged and were paid no less than $8,395 over and above legitimate profits for pamphlet binding.

These are a few specimens from the mass of accounts, all made out in the same extravagant way, which go to make up the expenditure of $201,915.44, which Sir John's Government spent last year in dealing out pap to its organs."

Tabernacle Sermons.

Discourse by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage.

The Ransomless.

TEXT:—"Beware lest He take thee away with His stroke: then a great ransom cannot deliver thee."—Job 36: 18.

Trouble makes some men mad. It was so with Job. He had lost his property, he had lost his physical health, he had lost his dear children, and the losses had led to exasperation instead of any spiritual profit I suppose that he was in the condition which many are now in who sit before me. There are those here whose fortunes have begun to flap their wings, as though to fly away. There is a hollow cough in some of your dwellings. There is a subtraction of comfort and happiness, and you feel disgusted with the world, and impatient with many events that are transpiring in your history, and you are in the condition in which Job [illegible] when the words of my text accosted him: "Beware lest He take thee away with His stroke: and then a ransom cannot deliver thee."

I propose to show you that sometimes God suddenly removes from us our Gospel opportunities, and that when He has done so our case is ransomless. "Beware lest He take thee away with His stroke: then a great ransom cannot deliver thee."

I. Sometimes the stroke comes in the REMOVAL OF THE INTELLECT.

"Oh!" says some man, "as long as I keep my mind I can afford to adjourn religion." But suppose you do not keep it? A fever, the hurling of a missile, the falling of a brick from a scaffolding, the accidental discharge of a gun—and your mind is gone. If you have ever been in an anatomical room, and have examined the human brain, you know what a delicate organ it is. And can it be possible that our eternity is dependent upon the healthy action of that which can be so easily destroyed?

"Oh!" says some one, "you don't know how strong a mind I have." I reply: Losses, accident, bereavement and sickness may shipwreck the best physical or mental condition. There are those who have been ten years in lunatic asylums who had as good a mind as you. While they had their minds they neglected God, and when their intellect went, with it went their last opportunity for heaven. Now they are not responsible for what they do, or for what they say; but in the last day they will be held responsible for what they did when they were mentally well; and if on that day, a soul should say: "Oh! God, I am demented, and I had no responsibility," God will say: "Yes, you were demented; but there were long years when you were not demented. That was your chance for heaven and you missed it." Oh, better be, as the Scotch say, a little "daft," nevertheless, having grace in the heart; better be like poor Richard Hampson, [illegible] land—a silly man he was, yet bringing souls to Jesus Christ by scores and scores—giving an account of his own conversion, when he said: "The mob got after me, and I lost my hat, and I climbed up by a meat-stand, in order that I might not be trampled under foot; and while I was there, my heart got on fire with love toward those who were chasing me, and springing to my feet, I began to exhort and to pray." Oh! my God, let me be in the last, last day the Cornish fool, rather than have the best intellect God ever created unillumined by the Gospel of Jesus Christ!

AN UNCERTAIN POSSESSION.

Consider what an uncertain possession you have in your intellect, when there are so many things around to destroy it; and beware, lest before you use it in making the religious choice, God takes it away with a stroke. I know a good many of my friends who are putting off religion until the last hour. They say, when they get sick they will attend to it, but generally the intellect is beclouded; and oh, what a doleful thing it is to stand by a dying bed and talk to a man about his soul, and feel from what you see of the motion of his hand, and the glare of his eye, and from what you hear from the jargon of his lips, that he does not understand what you are saying to him. I have stood beside the death-bed of a man who had lived a sinful life, and was as unprepared for eternity as it is possible for a man to be, and I tried to make him understand my pastoral errand; but all in vain. He could not understand it, and so he died.

Oh! ye who are putting off until the sick hour preparation for eternity, let me tell you that, in all probability, you will not be able in your last hour to attend to it at all. There are a great many people who say they will repent on the death-bed. I have no doubt there are many who have repented on the death-bed, but I think it is the exception. Albert Barnes, who was one of the coolest of men, and gave no rash statistics, said thus: That in a ministry of nearly half a century—he was over seventy when he went up to glory—he had known a great many people who said they repented on the dying bed, but unexpectedly to themselves got well; and he says, How many of those do you suppose, who thought it was their dying bed, and who, after they repented on that dying bed, having got well, lived consistently, showing that it was real repentance, and not mock repentance—how many? not one! not one!

II. Again; this stroke may come to you in the WITHDRAWAL OF GOD'S SPIRIT.

I see people before me who were, twenty years ago, serious about their souls. They have no interest in what I am saying. They will never have any anxiety in what any minister of the Gospel says about their souls. Their time seems to have passed. I know a man, seventy-five years of age, who, in early life, became almost a Christian, but grieved away the spirit of God, and he has never thought earnestly since, and he cannot be roused. I do not believe he will be roused until eternity flashes on his astonished vision.

It does seem as if sometimes, in quite early life, the Holy Spirit moves upon a heart, and being grieved away and rejected, never comes back. You say that is all imaginary? A letter, the address of which I will not give, dated last Monday morning came to me on Tuesday, saying this: "Your sermon last night (that is, last Sabbath night) did not fit my case, although I believe it did all others in the Academy; but your sermon of a week ago did fit my case, for I am 'past feeling.' I am not ashamed to be a Christian. I would as soon be known to be a Christian as anything else. Indeed, I wish I was, but I have not the least power to become one. Don't you know that with some persons there is a tide in their spiritual natures which, if taken at the flood, leads on to salvation? Such a tide I felt two years ago. I want you to pray for me, not that I may be led to Christ—for that prayer would not be answered—but that I may be kept from the temptation to suicide!"

NO RETURN.

What I had to say to the author of that I said in a private letter; but what I have to say to this audience is: Beware lest you grieve the Holy Ghost, and He be gone, and never return. Next Wednesday at two or three o'clock, a Cunard steamer will put out from the Jersey City wharf for Liverpool. After it has gone one hour, and the vessel is down by the "Narrows," or beyond, go out on the Jersey City wharf and wave your hand, and shout, and ask that steamer to come back to the wharf. Will it? Yes, sooner than the Holy Ghost will come back when once He has taken his final flight from thy soul. With that Holy Spirit some of you have been in treaty, my dear friends.

The Holy Spirit said: "Come, come to Christ." You said: "No, I want." The Spirit said, more importunately: "Come to Christ." You said: "Well, I will after a while, when I get my business fixed up; when my friends consent to my coming; when they won't laugh at me—then I'll come." But the Holy Spirit more emphatically said: "Come now." You said: "No, I can't. I can't come now." And that Holy Spirit stands in your heart to-night, with His hand on the door of your soul, ready to come out. Will you let Him depart? If so, then, with a pen of light, dipped in ink of eternal blackness, the sentence may be now writing: "Ephraim is joined to to his idols. Let him alone! Let him alone!" When that fatal record is made, you might as well brace yourselves up against the sorrows of the last day, against the anguish of an unforgiven death-bed, against the flame and the overthrow of an undone eternity; for though you might live thirty years after that in the world, your fate would be as certain as though you had already entered the gates of darkness. That is the dead line. Look out how you cross it!

"There is a line by us unseen,
That crosses every path;
The hidden boundary between God's patience and His wrath."

And some of you to-night, have come up to that line. Aye, you have lifted your foot, and when you put it down, it will be on the other side! Look out how you cross it! Oh, grieve not the Spirit of God, lest He never come back!

DEATH.

III. This fatal stroke spoken of in the text may be our exit from this world. I hear aged people sometimes saying: "I can't live much longer." But do you know the fact that there are a hundred young people and middle-aged people who go out of this life, to one aged person, for the simple reason that there are not many aged people to leave life? The aged seem to stand around like stalks—separate stalks of wheat at the corner of the field; but when death goes a-mowing, he likes to go down amid the thick of the harvest. What is more to the point: a man's going out of this world is never in the way he expects—it is never at the time he expects. The moment of leaving this world is always a surprise. If you expect to go in the winter, it may be in the summer; if in summer, it may be in the winter; if in the night, it may be in the daytime; if you think to go in the daytime, it may be in the night. Suddenly the event will rush upon you, and you will be gone. Where? If a Christian—into joy. If not a Christian—into suffering.

THE GOSPEL CALL STOPS

outside of the door of the sepulchre. The sleeper within cannot hear it. If that call [illegible] sleeper could not hear it. I suppose every hour of the day, and now, while I am speaking, there are souls rushing into eternity unprepared. They slide from the pillow, or they slip from the pavement, and in an eye-twinkling they are gone. Elegant and eloquent funeral oration will not do them any good. Epitaph, cut on polished Scotch granite, will not do them any good. Wailing of beloved kindred cannot call them back.

But, says some one: "I'll keep out of peril; I will not go on the sea, I will not go into battle—I'll keep out of all danger." That is no defence. Thousands of people, last night, on their couches, with the front door locked, and no armed assassin anywhere around, surrounded by all defended circumstances, slipped out of this life into the next. If time had been on one side of the shuttle and eternity on the other side of the shuttle, they could not have shot quicker across it. A man was saying: "My father was lost at sea, and my grandfather, and my great-grandfather. Wasn't it strange?" A man talking to him, said: "You ought never to venture on the sea, lest you, yourself, be lost at sea." The man turned to the other, and said: "Where did your father die?" He replied: "In his bed." "Where did your grandfather die?" "In his bed." "Where did your great-grandfather die?" "In his bed." "Then," he said, "be careful, lest some night, while you are asleep on your couch, your time may come."

HORROR OF INSECURITY.

Death alone is sure. Suddenly, you and I will go out of life. I am not saying anything to your soul that I am not going to say to my own soul. We have got to go suddenly out of this life. If I am prepared for that change, I do not care where my body is taken from—at what point I am taken out of this life. If I am ready, all is well. If I am not ready, though I might be at home, and though my loved ones might be standing around me, and though there might be the best surgical and medical ability in the room, I tell you if I were not prepared, I would be frightened more than tongue can tell. It might seem like cowardice, but I am not ashamed to say that I should have the most indescribable horror about going out of this world if I thought I was unprepared for the next—if I had no Christ in my soul; for it would be a plunge compared with which a leap from Mount Blanc would be nothing.

FINALITY.

But this brings me to the most tremendous thought of my text. The text supposes that a man goes into ruin, and that an effort is made afterward for his rescue, and then says the thing cannot be done Is that so? After death seizes upon that soul, is there no resurrection? If a man topples of the edge of life, is there nothing to break his fall? If an impenitent man goes overboard, are there no grappling hooks to hoist him into safety? The text says distinctly:

"Then a great ransom cannot deliver thee."

I know there are people who call themselves "Restorationists," and they say a sinful man may go down in the world of the lost; he stays there until he gets reformed, and then comes up into the world of light and blessedness. It seem to me to be a most unreasonable doctrine—as though the world of darkness were a place where a man would get reformed. Is there anything in the society of the lost world—the abandoned and the wretched of God's universe—to elevate a man's character and lift him at last to heaven? Can we go into the companionship of the Neroes, and the Herods, and the Jim Fiskes, and spend a certain number of years in that lost world, and then by that society be purified and lifted up? Is that the kind of society that reforms a man and prepares him for heaven? Would you go to Shreveport or Memphis, with the yellow fever there, to get your physical health restored? Can it be that a man may go down into the diseased world—a world overwhelmed by and by that process, and in that atmosphere be lifted up to health and glory? Your common sense says: "No! no!" In such society as that, instead of being restored, you would go down worse and worse, plunging every hour into deeper depths of suffering and darkness. What your common sense says the Bible confirms when it says: "These shall go away into three months of punishment." I have quoted it wrong. "These shall go away into ten years of punishment." I have quoted it wrong. "These shall go away into a thousand years of punishment." I have quoted it wrong. "These shall go into everlasting punishment." And now I have quoted it right; or, if you prefer, in the words of my last text: "Then a great ransom cannot deliver thee."

Tabernacle Sermons.

AN EPIDEMIC OF TRANSGRESSIONS—

Now just suppose that a spirit should come down from heaven and knock at the gates of woe and say: "Let that man out! Let me come in and suffer in his stead. I will be the sacrifice. Let him come out." The grim jailor would reply: "No, you don't know what a place this is, or you would not ask to come in; beside that, this man had full warning and full opportunity of escape. He did not take the warning, and now a great 'ransom shall not deliver him.'"

Sometimes men are sentenced to imprisonment for life. There comes another judge on the bench, there comes another governor in the chair, and in three or four years you find the man who was sentenced for life in the street. "You say: "I thought you were sentenced for life." "Oh!" he says, politics are changed and I am now a free man." But it will not be so for a soul at the last. There will be no new judge or new governor. If at the end of a century a soul might come out, it would not be so bad. If at the end of a thousand years it might come out, it would not be so bad. If there were any time in all the future, in quadrillions and quadrillions of years, that the soul might come out, it would not be so bad; but if the Bible be true, it is a state of unending duration.

ETERNITY.

Far on in the ages one lost soul shall cry out to another lost soul: "How long have you been here?" and the soul will reply: "The years of my ruin are countless. I estimated the time for thousands of years; but what is the use of estimating when all these rolling cycles bring us no nearer the terminus." Ages! Ages! Ages! Eternity! Eternity! Eternity! The wrath to come! The wrath to come! The wrath to come! No medicine to cure that marasmus of the soul. No hammer to strike off the handcuff of incarceration. No burglar's key to pick the locks which the Lord hath fastened. Sir Francis Newport, in his last moment, caught just one glimpse of that world. He had lived a sinful life. Before he went into the eternal world, he looked into it. The last words he ever uttered were, as he gathered himself up on his elbows in the bed: "Oh, the insufferable pangs of hell!" The lost soul will cry out: "I cannot stand this! I cannot stand this! Is there no way out?" and the echo will answer: "No way out." And the soul will cry: "Is this forever?" and the echo will answer: "Forever!"

Is it all true? "These shall go away into everlasting punishment, while the righteous go into life eternal." Are there two destinies? and must all this audience share one or the other? Shall I give an account for what I have told you to-night? Have I held back any truth, though it were plain, though it were unpalatable? Must I meet you there, oh, you dying but immortal auditory? I wish that my text, with all its uplifted hands of warning, could come upon your souls. "Beware lest He take thee away with a stroke; then a great ransom cannot deliver thee."

RANSOM MADE.

Glory be to God, there is a ransom that can now deliver you, braver than Grace Darling putting out in a life-boat from Longstone lighthouse for the rescue of the crew of the Forfarshire steamer—Christ the Lord launched from heaven, amid the shouting of the angels. Thirty-three years afterward, Christ the Lord launched from earth for heaven, amid human and infernal execration; yet staying here long enough to save all who will believe in Him. Do you hear that? To save all who will believe in Him. Oh, that pierced side! Oh, that bleeding brow! Oh, that crushed foot! Oh, that broken heart! That is your hope, sinner. That is your ransom from sin, and death, and hell.

Why have I told you all these things to-night, plainly and frankly? It is because I know there is redemption for you, and I would have you now come and get it. Oh, men and women long prayed for, and striven with, and coaxed of the mercy of God—have you concentrated all your physical, mental, and spiritual energies in one awful determination to be lost? Is there nothing in the value of your soul, in the graciousness of Christ, in the thunders of the last day, in the blazing glories of heaven, and the surging wrath of an undone eternity to start you out of your indifference, and make you pray? Oh, must God come upon you in some other way? Must He take another darling child from your household? Must he take another instalment from your worldly estate? Must He come upon you with sorrow after sorrow, and smite you down with sickness before you will be moved, and before you will feel?

Oh, weep now, while Jesus will count the tears. Sigh now in repentance, while Jesus will hear the grief. Now clutch the cross of the Son of God before it be swept away. Beware, lest the Holy Spirit leave thy heart. Beware, lest this night thy soul be required of thee. "Beware lest He take thee away with His stroke; then a great ransom cannot deliver thee." Oh, Lord God of Israel, see these impenitent souls on the verge of death ready to topple over! See them! Is there no help? Is this plea all in vain? I cannot believe it, blessed God. Oh, thou mighty One, whose garments are red with the wine-press of thine own sufferings, in the greatness of thy strength, ride through this audience, and may all this people fall into line, the willing captives of thy grace. Men and and women immortal! I lay hold of you to-night with both hands of entreaty and of prayer, and I beg of you, prepare for death, judgment and eternity.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 22, 1885.

Use the Telephone.

Friends and patrons of the EVENING EXAMINER are requested to use the telephone in communicating items of news which may come under their notice. We should be glad to avail ourselves of any information transmitted in that way before 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Appointment.

Thomas Fraser, of Asphodel, has been appointed Clerk of the second Division Court of the County of Peterborough in place of John A. Butterfield, deceased.

Prob's Weather Premises.

The following forecast of the weather for this district for the 24 hours from 1 a. m. to-day, is received from the Toronto Meterological office :—Fresh westerly winds; fair warm weather

Market Mems.

There was not a very large attendance at the market this morning. Eggs were selling at 11c., butter at 22c., potatoes at 15c. per peck, or by the bag, 75c. There was a large supply of apples, ranging from 20c. for cooking, to 25c. per peck for table varieties.

The Way the Weather has.

Mr. G. W. Morgan, druggist, supplies the following memoranda of the variations of the thermometer and barometer :—

	Thermometer.	Barometer.
9 o'clock	64°	29.18°
1 o'clock	77°	29.22°
3 o'clock	76°	29.22°

Chiropodist and Manicure.

Prof. Davidson, Chiropodist and Manicure, of New York, is now stopping at the Grand Central Hotel, Peterborough, room 22. All persons troubled with Corns, Bunions and Ingrowing Nails, will be cured at once without pain. Postal cards answered. Outside orders promptly attended to.

A Big Thing at the Lansdowne.

Mr. Ed. Brown, the enterprising manager, is keeping up the attractions at this popular resort. On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, August 24th, 25th and 26th, the celebrated trio of Royal Russian Athletes will appear in their astonishing acrobatic and athletic feats, which are the wonder of all who see them. Skating both before and after the performance. The Fire Brigade Band in attendance.

Watermelons.

With the almost complete absence of the Ethopian element in Peterborough, it is difficult to realize the extent of the consumption of the cooling and colicky watermelon. This morning Messrs. Ostrom & Ostrom, wholesale fruit merchants, received from New York state, and distributed a car load of this mottled-skinned crimson hearted fruit. A car load contains about 500 melons, and as this firm imports during the season an average of a car load per week, the demand must be in proportion.

Excursion to Niagara.

A grand all-rail excursion to the wonderful Falls of Niagara from Millbrook, Peterborough, Omemee, Lindsay, Uxbridge and Markham will take place on Thursday, 27th August, 1885. A special train will leave Peterborough at 6 o'clock a.m., sharp, by the Grand Trunk, reaching the Falls at 11 a.m. Returning, will leave Niagara at 5 p.m., reaching Peterborough at 10 o'clock. Tickets—from Peterborough to the Falls and return—$2.50. See posters for full particulars.

First Instalment of New Goods

From Liverpool to Peterborough in 15 days. Fair, VanEvery & Co. have received the first shipment of their fall importations, per steamship Montreal, comprising Floor Oil Cloths, Scotch Winceys, French Dress Goods, French Kid Gloves to match, English Rubber Goods in great variety, Mourning Goods, Crapes, &c. Visit the Golden Lion for variety and cheapness.

Riel.

There has been a great deal of talk lately about the hanging of Riel, but this is real truth, that we will have our Feather Renovator and Mattress Establishment on Hunter street, three doors east of Aylmer, open in a few weeks, for which orders can be left there or at Parker's steam dye works, Water street, opposite the market square. Orders promptly attended to and satisfaction guaranteed or no charges made. Give us a trial. T. H. Gemmell & Co.

Lacrosse.

THE CENTRAL ONTARIO DISTRICT CHAMPIONSHIP.

Mr. Joseph Henderson received a telegram from Orillia this morning, stating that the Council of the Lacrosse Association have decided, by a vote of six to three, in favor of the Checker Lacrosse Club re protest entered by them in the recent Central Ontario District Championship.

LACROSSE PIC-NIC.

The Committee have completed all arrangements for the grand lacrosse pic-nic which takes place on Tuesday next. This will be by far the best pic-nic of the season, and all those wishing for a good days enjoyment should not fail to attend.

Baseball.

LAWYERS VS. MERCHANTS.

The much talked of match came off yesterday afternoon at Riverside Park, and contrary to previous expectations, resulted in a victory for the mercantile gentlemen. The catching was done by Sullivan and O'Neil, the battery of the Peterboroughs, the delicate palms of the legal and mercantile ball tossers not being equal to such heavy work. The following are the players and the score by innings :

Promenade Concert.

The Fire Brigade Band gave a delightful concert in Court House Park last night. The threatening weather prevented many from attending, but as the sky brightened the beautiful grounds became filled. The following programme was excellently rendered :—

Quickmarch.....“Queen of the Fete.....Smith
Waltz.....“Harvest Home”.....Birch
Fantasia....“Memories of Scotland....Newton Fantasia and Gallop..“The Relief of Ekowe,” (Round
Quickstep.....“Napoli”.....Morelli
Fantasia.....“Royal Musketeers”.....Mullett
Quadrille.....“Majestic”.....Linton
“God Save the Queen.”

The light on the band stand was not entirely satisfactory, and if a few notes were dropped, auditors must blame the wind that flared the lights, not the performers.

Buffalo Bill.

Quite a number of Peterborough people went to Belleville yesterday morning to see the noted frontiersman and crack shot, Buffalo Bill, and his prairie show. There could not have been less than 5,000 people present at the park where it took place, which was so thronged that many were quite unable to get a glimpse of the exhibition. The show was said to be a capital one. Overtures were made to bring them here, but the action of the City Council in reference to street parades frightened them. Buffalo Bill likes to do up the streets but does not care to pay $100 for the privilege. Had they come here the town would have been filled with visitors and some money put in circulation. While the city fathers are suffering from the repealing mania they might as well repeal that by-law; they can do it with less trouble than it will take to upset the Dickson exemption.

The Original Again.

Knowing that any information regarding the whereabouts and doings of our westward bound townsman, “The Original John Smith,” could not fail to prove of interest to his many friends here, THE EXAMINER has, with much difficulty and at a heavy expense, secured the services of special correspondents in all the leading cities of the west, who, upon the appearance among them of Mr. Smith's tremendous trousers and boots, will at once report to this office. The first fruits of our enterprise came to hand this morning, when a special telegram was received from our Milwaukee correspondent, Mr. Sam. Wright, championship lacrosse player of that city, announcing Mr. Smith's debut there on the 19th inst. The “Original” turned up at the Union Station there at 2.30 p.m on that day, and was met by a deputation of ragamuffins and shoeblacks, who at once took in the situation and formed themselves into a procession to conduct him up town. Owing to the unexpectedness of his arrival the magificent brass band that would otherwise have met him was conspicuous by its absence, but Smith's progress was nevertheless, as has been anticipated by the EXAMINER, a triumphant one. Our correspondent states that the managers of several dime museums are anxiously endeavoring to to secure Mr. Smith's services, but that gentleman seems to prefer making a free exhibition of himself on the streets and in the numerous saloons which he visits in quest of the creamy lager, for which Milwaukee is famous, to being immured in a museum of living curiosities. Indeed, Smith is said to have conceived such a violent affection for Milwaukee's lager, that it is extremely doubtful if any of our other numerous correspondents in the west will be able to report his appearance, present indications being that he will remain in Milwaukee as long as he can find anyone to set up the lager for him. He has been entertaining select audiences there with his graphic recitals of his ride on Belleghem's furniture waggon, and is evidently willing in return for the beers with which this town presented him, to give us the benefit of some free advertising.

What We Would Like to See.

Our pet pastor bobbing from his holidays.
The churches filled with attentive listeners.
A young lady who does not like to flirt.
And the young man who doesn't smoke—on the sly.
Half a dozen factories started.
And the value of real estate going up.
An inspection of the Peterborough Fire Department by an expert who doesn't travel for a hose factory.
And a report that we have 1000 feet of good sound hose available.
Those Court House Park postholes filled in.

What We may Expect.

The saloon-keepers to follow Toronto's example and raise the price of whiskey.
That lacrosse championship.
Capitalists to fight shy of Peterborough if the Dickson exemption is repealed.
The committee appointed to investigate the fire hose to report a good deal of it rotten.
The ministers to challenge the Salvation Army to a game of baseball.
And get “done up” badly.
Jim English to polish up that fire engine.
To hear that “John Smith” gets fired out of Milwaukee.
Sermons on the Scott Act.
Brewers to ask for exemption from taxation.
Base ball teams to do the same, because they have established a “new industry.”

What they are Saying.

We are bound to have the Dickson exemption repealed.—Councillors McNaughton and Douglas.

I never knew I was such a bad engineer till that hose agent struck town.—Engineer English.

I settled the hose man.—Councillor Cahill.

I'm afraid I've been spending my time and Tommy McIlroy's money to no purpose.—Hose Humphrey.

I never saw a man who would go into an enterprise unless it was to make money.—John Douglas.

Look at one now.—Mayor Cox.

We have some queer councillors.—Manager Hazlitt.

That lacrosse championship is settled.—Harry LeBrun.

Give us work, let the taxes take care of themselves.—The working men.

Well Worth Seeing.

The world renowned Royal Russian Athletes will appear and perform at the Lansdowne Rink on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, August 24th, 25th and 26th. They will present their great gladiatorial Roman balancing act, and champion double horizontal bar performance, introducing the great English clown, Fredericks. A magnificent performance will delight all who attend. At the rink, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings. Admission 15 cents.

WIT AND HUMOR.

“Ah, wasteful woman! she who may
On her sweet self set her own price,
Knowing he cannot choose but pay—
How she has cheapen'd Paradise!
How given for naught her priceless gift,
How spoiled the bread and spilled the wine,
Which, spent with due, respective thrift,
Had made brutes men, and men divine.”
—Ruskin.

An inn in Switzerland announces, guilelessly: “You will find herein excellent bread, meat and wine, provided you bring them with you.”

PANTS.

How often does it happen that the general comfort and happiness of man depends on a good fitting pair of pants. Nothing will ruffle a man's temper more than to find when he tries on his latest new pair of pants that they are either too long or too short; that they pinch him so bad in one place that he dare not stoop, and are so large and baggy around the waist and knees that he is afraid he might be taken for the departed “Smith.”

A SAFE THING TO DO

If you want to avoid all troubles and get a good fitti pair of pants that will feel as comfortabl s a woollen mit, leave your order at the

MONDAY, AUGUST 24, 1885.

Personal.

Mr. A. H. Clegg arrived home on the Sunday morning C. P. R. express from his European tour. During his absence he visited the chief places of importance in England, Scotland and France. We are pleased to know that his business interests, which formed part of the object of his journey, were benefitted by his tour, as well as his health.

Burglars Again.

It would be well for householders just now to exercise extra caution in fastening their doors and windows, for there seems to be a gang of thieves hanging around town ready to take advantage of any opportunities that may offer to enter residences, and carry a way plunder with them. Shortly after midnight on Saturday, the residence of Mr. Harry Hall, Barrister, on Water street, opposite the Court House Park, was entered. It seems as if the burglars must have had literary leanings, for the bulk of the plunder they carried away consisted of bound volumes of Picturesque Canada and the Life of Washington Irving. They also appropriated a small mantel clock, some napkin rings and other small articles. Mr. Hall was absent from home at the time, but Mrs. Hall who was in the house, heard nothing of the thieves' movements, and thinks they must have been alarmed by the crying of the baby upstairs, as there were many other articles of greater value they might have carried away. The thieves gained entrance by a side window into the parlor, the sash of which being very stiff, had been left open and the shutter closed over it. The most singular part of the affair is that the next door neighbours actually saw the thieves go in and out of the window, but thinking it was Mr. Hall, did not interrupt them. It seems that an attempt was also made to get into the house of Dr. Halliday, next door, but here the thieves found everything fast, and failed in their burglarious intent. Suspicious looking characters were seen hanging around the vicinity again last night, and it would be well for heads of families to prepare a warm reception for midnight visitors.

GARDEN PARTY.

The ladies of the English Church intend having a garden party on Tuesday evening on the grounds of R. C. Strickland, Esq. Lawn tennis, &c., will occupy the afternoon, while the Peterborough Band and some of our best local talent will enliven the evening. The G.T.R. have promised to run a special train, leaving Peterborough at 7 p.m. and returning at 10 p.m., so we may expect to see a large number from town take advantage of the train to pay us a visit.

PUBLIC MEETING.

A public meeting was held in the Council Chamber last Thursday evening to discuss the Water Works by-law and the renting or buying mill reserve No. 1 for a Town Hall. Owing to the short notice very few attended and it was decided to request the Reeve to call a public meeting for Thursday, Sept. 3rd at 8 p.m., when we trust all will attend and enable the Council to decide the matter.

CIVIC HOLIDAY.

The committee appointed to take charge of the Civic Holiday celebration have now all their arrangements made and the programmes will be out in a day or two. Sailing, skiff and canoe races in the morning, lacrosse and cricket matches with games in the afternoon, and grand illuminated parade on the river in the evening, fireworks and general illumination of the village. Special trains from Peterborough have been arranged for and the [illegible] engaged. List of races, prizes, etc., will be sent in my next letter.

Mobbing an Informer.

Furious Riot Over a Whiskey Case in Simcoe—Badly Used-Up Men.

Simcoe, Ont., Aug. 22.—A very serious riot occurred here on Thursday night. A man named Houck, of Houghton, has been laying complaints against hotel keepers throughout the county of Norfolk, for violating the Scott Act. He had one of the hotel keepers of Simcoe before police magistrate Matheson. He got liquor from the accused by pretending he was sick. The hotel keeper would receive no pay. After the court adjourned they left Houck in the magistrate's office. He did not like to face the crowd. Instead of dispersing it grew larger, and threw stones through the windows at Houck, who threw them back. Arming himself with an axe he awaited the foremost of the crowd, which now showed signs of forcing the building. The first to enter received an ugly wound on the leg with an axe and was rescued with difficulty. The crowd then made a general rush for Houck and captured him; as the front door was locked they fired him bodily through the front window into the street. They gave him a terrible pounding, and had not some of the citizens taken him under their protection they would have landed him in the dock. He had two ribs broken and was fearfully bruised about the face and body.

The Princess Louise Fund.

The following letter has been received from Dr. Boyd, the surgeon who was sent out by the Princess Louise to assist the sick and wounded in the Canadian rebellion:—

FIELD HOSPITAL, SASKATOON, June 22.

"I sent a despatch to Capt. Talbot on the 19th inst., concerning my movements and what I had been doing up till that date. Since then I have been through the hospital here several times, and enquired individually into each man's case concerning his welfare, and they seem, on the whole, to be fairly well provided for when they arrive at their several destinations, many of them a long distance from this. I find the most pressing want to be clothes, as many of the poor fellows have lost them, being either cut up on the field for first dressing or actually lost in transport. I have therefore ordered twenty suits, and the same quantity of underclothing, to be forwarded at once from Winnipeg, which, in all, will amount to about £80. The hospital here is in three blocks of wooden houses, and consists of about seventy beds, the nursing being entirely undertaken by trained nurses. The hospital is healthily situated, and most excellently managed for a field hospital, being over two hundred miles from any railway, the transport by road being very difficult and tedious. Dr. Roddick, the deupty surgeon-general, really deserves the greatest credit for the able manner in which he has managed and arranged everything concerning it under very trying circumstances. The wounded number about thirty at present, the others having been drafted, as they became convalescent, to the base hospitals at Winnipeg and Moose Jaw. Many of those still remaining, though serious cases, are all doing well. I might mention that they are all gun-shot injuries, no bayonet or sabre wounds having been admitted, on account of there being no hand-to-hand fighting.

"It is my intention to-morrow to proceed to the scene of the two late battles of Fish Creek and Batoche, where I understand a number of half-breeds are lying wounded, and all in destitute circumstances. Here I hope to do much good with the fund in relieving these poor creatures, and, with the assistance of Dr. Roddick, furnishing them with such advice and surgical aid as lies in our power. Hitherto they have been attended by their own 'medicine men,' so that, as you can imagine, the treatment has been very crude.

"A good number of the conquered half-breeds, with their families, are passing this place daily in a half-starving condition, and I have already assisted many of them by small donations, etc.. for which they have been very grateful. They all appear to be conscious of their great mistake in rebelling against the Government of the country, and can hardly understand the kind treatment which, through the beneficence of her Royal Highness, they are receiving. They also express a desire that their friends in distress at the front should benefit in the same way. At first many of them were approached with difficulty, owing to the dread they experienced lest I might be on some hostile mission; but I soon reassured them, and explained the motive which the Princess had in sending me here."

Lakehurst.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Mr. Wm. Renwick, sr., who was much enfeebled during the past year by old age, died on Thursday night, at the ripe age of 77 years. He leaves an aged widow and a large family of children and grandchildren, to mourn his departure. He was born in the south of Scotland, and came to this country in the year 1856, and settled in Keene, where he remained for some years. He then removed to Harvey, and has lived here for the past 12 years.

Mr. Shaw, who was taken suddenly ill a few days ago, is now doing well.

Rawdon.

Two farmers in Rawdon, Hastings county, after losing eight head of cattle very suddenly, during the last few weeks, deemed it advisable to find out the cause of their death. For this purpose M. W. Sine, V.S., was called on Monday last, and after holding a post mortem examination of the one which died on Sunday, pronounced it a case of arsenical poisoning. It seems that hard threats were made by certain neighbors against both the cattle and the owners. It is too bad that in the interests of society some means could not be devised to bring such people as make such threats to justice.

RELIANCE ROXBURY'S PROTEGEE.

How Dot and her Mother found a Home.

"It's a harum-scarum idea," said Miss Reliance Roxbury, as she stood among the currant bushes at the garden fence. "A most ridiculous idea! I wonder what this gushing American people will do next," and she gave an emphatic twitch to her purple calico sunbonnet.

There was a faint murmur of dissent from a little woman on the other side of the fence.

"No—of course you don't agree with me," continued Miss Reliance, as the clusters of ruby and pearl flew into the six-quart pail at her feet. "You're so soft-hearted that your feelings are forever running away with your common sense. You never say a word about the National debt, or the condition of our navy, but let anybody start a subscription for sending blanket shawls to Brazil, or putting up a monument to Methusaleh on the meeting-house green, and you'll give your last quarter. And now you're going to open your house to a lot of little ragamuffins from New York.

The motherly brown eyes on the other side of the fence were full of tears, and a pleasant voice replied,—

"It makes my heart ache to think how the poor things suffer, crowded together in dirty streets, with never a breath of a clover field or a glass of milk. If you'd just read about it, Reliance, you'd count it a blessed privilege to give them a bit of our sunshine."

"I'd as soon have a tribe of Zulus on the place," said Miss Reliance, "and if you'll take my advice you'll save yourself lots of trouble."

Mrs. Lane stopped her work for a moment, and said,—

"'Laikim and me are all alone now, Reliance. One by one, we've laid Kate and Sarah and baby Lizzie over there in the old burying ground; and Jack is in Colorado, and Richard in Boston, and we get hungry sometimes for the sound of little feet. When I began to read about the fresh air fund it kind of sent a thrill all over me, and 'Laikim he reads about it every day, and he wipes his glasses pretty often, too. Then, when we heard the parson say that a party would come here if places could be found for them, 'Laikim spoke right off for four, and they'll be here next Tuesday, and I'm going to make it just as much like heaven as I can."

"You'll make yourself sick, that's what you'll do, Amanda Lane," replied Miss Reliance; "but if you want your garden overrun and your silver spoons stolen, and your house full of flies, and your nerves prostrated, why it's your own fault. I must go in and get my jelly started."

Miss Roxbury went up the path between the sunflowers and hollyhocks, entered the large, sunny, airy kitchen, and set down the pail of currants for Hannah, the housemaid, to pick over. Then she hung the purple calico sunbonnet on the nail that for forty years had been devoted to that purpose, and went into the cool sitting-room to rest in her favorite chintz-covered rocker.

Miss Reliance Roxbury had been for twenty years with the exception of a gardener and housemaid, the sole occupant of this ancient stone dwelling, that had stood for more than a century beneath its elms and maples, the pride of the village of Lynford. She was a stern woman, who liked but few people, and had a horror of children, dogs and sentiment. The village boys, with a keen perception of her unsympathetic nature, called her "Old Ironsides."

She was proud of her birth and of the substantial property that had fallen to her at the death of her father, old Judge Roxbury. She was a member of the Presbyterian Church, and pain a high rental for the Roxbury pew, but with that considered that her pecuniary obligations to the cause were at an end. As a general thing, she had not allowed convictions on the subject of giving to trouble her, but somehow, ever since Sunday, when the pastor stated the work of the fresh air fund and made a fervent appeal for these "little ones that suffer," she had been subjected to numerous vague but uncomfortable sensations.

She rocked back and forth in the spacious sitting-room that no fly dared to invade, and noted the perfect order of the apartment. From the China shepherdess on the mantel, to the braided rugs at the doors, everything occupied the same position as in the days of Miss Roxbury's girlhood. There was torture in the thought of having the table cover pulled awry, of seeing the shells and prim old daguerreotypes disarranged or the what-not, of having sand tracked in by small feet over the faded Brussels carpet, and her pet verbena bed invaded by eager young fingers.

Surely, religion and humanity could not demand such sacrifices of her.

"Please, ma'am, the currants is ready to put over," said Hannah at the door.

Miss Roxbury rose at once, glad of another channel for her thoughts, but, amid her weighing and measuring of pints and pounds, the strange impression did not leave her mind.

After the rich crimson syrup had been poured into the row of shining tumblers on the table, she returned to her chintz-covered rocker, and took up the Bible to read her daily chapter. Opening it at random, her eyes fell upon these words:

"Then shall He answer them, saying: Inasmuch as ye did it not unto one of the least of these—'"

Miss Roxbury read no further on that page, but hurriedly turned back to Chronicles, which she felt was perfectly safe ground. But, mingled with the long genealogical tables, she saw other words between the lines, so that the Israelitish record read thus:—

"The son of Elkanah, the son of Joel, the son of Azariah. ('Ye did it not.')

"The son of Tahath, the son of Assir, the son of Ebiasaph, the son of Korah. ('Ye did it not.')"

Finally, the whole page seemed to resolve itself into these four monosyllables.

She closed the Bible and put it in its accustomed place on the table, bounded on the north by the lamp, on the south by the match box, on the east by Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress" and on the west by a bunch of worsted roses under a glass case. She was restless, miserable, tormented. She endeavored to read the "Life of Napoleon Bonaparte," but even the thrilling story of the Russian campaign was lacking in interest, compared with her own inward conflict a between duty and the cold selfishness of a [illegible]

She did not enjoy the dinner, although the butterbeans were from her garden, and the black raspberries were the first of the season.

She could not take her accustomed afternoon nap, and for the first time in years the daily paper was unopened. She even put it out of sight in the china closet. A wonderful new design in patch-work, known as the Rocky Mountain pattern, could not fasten her attention.

She ordered the horse and rockaway and drove four miles after wild cherry bark, for which she had no need, as her garret was already a great herbarium.

At last the dreary day came to its close, but was succeeded by an equally uncomfortable night. Amid frequent tossing and waking, Miss Roxbury dreamed of thin little hands stretched out to her in piteous appeal, and of a sad, wonderful voice that said with infinite reproach,—

"Ye did it not."

Rev. Joseph Alder was surprised soon after breakfast the next morning by the appearance of Miss Reliance Roxbury in the parsonage porch. She brought a basket of black raspberries, and said,—

"I won't come in this time, thank you. I just wanted to say that I'll take one—one of those children."

* * * * * *

"Mamma, is it morning?" and the child turned restlessly on the straw pallet in a corner of the small, hot room.

"No, Dot, go to sleep."

It was after midnight and in summer, but [illegible] a fire in the stove, for the woman at the pine table was ironing by the light of a glimmering tallow candle. There was no breeze, but in at the one window came stifling, poisonous odors.

Pale and faint, the mother bent over her work, and smoothed the dark calico dress as carefully as if it were the finest muslin and lace. She had worked from early dawn until dark at her daily task, button holes at four cents a dozen. A cup of tea and crust of bread had been her sustenance. For Dot there was a bun and an orange.

The dress was finished and hung on the only chair in the room, with several other small articles. A hat of coarse white straw, with a blue ribbon twisted around it, a pair of bright stockings, a tiny handkerchief with a bit of color in the border. All were pitifully cheap in texture, but dear in patient toil and loving sacrifice. Dot was going to the country for two long, blissful weeks, and the mother could cover the expense of the meagre outfit by some extra deprivation during the child's absence. She turned toward the pallet. Dot's violet eyes had opened. Her golden curls were tangled by the tossing of the little head on the pillow. Her thin, pinched features were flushed with feverish excitement.

"Mamma, is it morning?"

"No, darling."

The woman blew out the light and threw herself on the pallet. Tiny fingers crept eagerly into her palm.

"Mamma, tell me some more about it," pleaded Dot.

"Darling, it is years and years since mamma saw the country, but it was just as I've told you. Wide, clean streets, with big trees and blue sky and lovely flowers."

"Oh, oh!" murmured Dot. "Does you s'pose they'll give me one f'ower, mamma? I found one on the street once—a little white f'ower. A lady dropped it."

"Yes, dear, you'll have all the flowers you want. Don't talk any more to-night."

The sky was already white with the dawn. The mother did not sleep. As the light of another day of misery crept into the room, she raised herself on one elbow and looked long at her child, restraining an impulse to snatch it to her heart, then softly rose, and after bathing her face and hands and kneeling in prayer for endurance, took to her work and sat down by the narrow window.

A few hours later she stood amid the bustle of the Grand Central Depot with Dot clinging to her dress. A crowd of wondering, expectant children were being marshalled into line to take their places on the eastward bound train.

"Come," said the kind gentleman, in charge, to Dot.

Dot kissed her mother "good-by," and laughed even while the tears ran down her face, as she entered the ranks of the odd procession.

"Oh, sir," said the mother as she turned away, "take good care of my baby. I've nothing else in the world."

* * * * * *

There was an unusual stir in the village of Lynford. The railway station was thronged with people and surrounded by vehicles awaiting the afternoon train.

Rev. Joseph Alder and the ministers of sister churches conversed together on the platform.

"A glorious charity!" said the Baptist minister, raising his hat to wipe the perspiration from his brow.

"I expect that these poor children will be a great blessing to our people," said the Methodist minister, "in broadening the sympathies and warming the hearts of some who have been oblivious to all interests save their own."

"Yes," said Rev. Mr. Alder, "I have a practical illustration of that, not a stone's throw from where I am standing."

The "practical illustration" consisted of the Roxbury rockaway drawn up amid the other conveyances, with Miss Reliance on a back seat in a state of mind in which newly-fledged philanthropy struggles with a terror of ragamuffins. She had come to the conclusion that her visit to the parsonage had been made during an attack of mental aberration; but the word of a Roxbury was as immovable as the historic granite on which Jephaniah Roxbury stepped from the Mayflower in 1620, and the last representative of the race would not falter now, although seized with dire apprehension whenever her eyes rested on the verbena bed.

EAST DURHAM.

To-day the polling takes place in East Durham, and the people are deciding who shall take the place of Col. Williams as their representative in the House of Commons. There is a fair probability that Mr. Ward, the Conservative candidate, will be chosen. The riding is strongly Conservative, and the Conservatism is of the most tenacious quality. Whatever is done by the leaders of the party is right, and it would take something like a miracle to convince many of the members of that party that Sir John could do anything wrong. Mr. Preston, the Liberal candidate, is a young gentleman of good ability, well acquainted with the political questions of the day, and the platform he advocates is one to commend itself to every unprejudiced well wisher of the country. With all his qualifications, and with the justice of his cause, he is heavily handicapped in the race for parliamentary honors. Against him is arrayed all the patronage of a Government which has shown, and will show in this case, no scruple to employ the power that that patronage confers. And no nice question of honor will prevent them going to any length to accomplish the return of their candidate. The big guns of the party have visited the riding in dozens, even the senatorial morgue has been disturbed to furnish an advocate in the person of Mr. J. Burr Plumb. In addition to the orators of the party there has been an irruption of a class of advocates, who are no orators, as—Plumb is—men who, in this respect, believe with the German proverb, that "silence is golden." And they are silent, but their silence is, indeed, golden to many an elector who is debauched with the gold of the briber. When such gentlemen as Mr. Roddy Pringle, appear in a riding, when a contest is going on, their arguments are not so much hard facts as hard cash. With all these odds against him, it will be a surprise if Mr Preston redeems the riding from the misrule of the Ottawa oligarchy. Though Mr. Ward is trading on the popularity of and the relationship to his predecessor, it is not likely that his majority, if he should secure one, will equal that by which Col. Williams was returned at the previous election.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The Sultan of Zanzibar wishes England to understand that in yielding part of his dominions to Germany, he has yielded to power, against which, failing England's help, he could not cope.

The London Advertiser meets the argument of the Mail that Hon. Thomas White is an Ontario man, because he once lived in Peterborough, and has relatives there, by saying that we can hardly call Satan an angel because he once lived in heaven.

The commission appointed by the Dominion Government to inquire into the halfbreed claims have issued 1,700 certificates. This means that the Government admits 1,700 halfbreeds have for years been treated unjustly.

The rumor has been revived that Hon. James Patton, collector of customs at Toronto, is to be made Commissioner of Customs at Ottawa, vice Johnson, to be superannuated. The lucky man mentioned as successor to Patton, at Toronto, is John Small, M. P. for East Toronto.

Look at this picture! The volunteers who went through the hardships of the Northwest campaign receive a gift of land, the value of which is debatable. Mr. Caron, who remained here busily occupied in withholding information from Parliament, receives a knighthood. The two private secretaries of the Minister of Militia, who encountered all the hardships of the campaign in a comfortable office receive $500 each. Such, remarks the Ottawa Free Press, is life!

The enormous increase of the public debt of the Dominion furnishes food for serious reflection to everyone in Canada except the editors of the subsidized press. These pap fed fabricators of so-called public opinion can afford to look upon the rapidly growing debt with satisfaction, as long as a goodly share of the borrowed money falls into their coffers, but it is rather overdoing the jubilant when they ask the people to smile with them, because there are some other British Colonies that are more heavily in debt than we are. Misery is said to love company, but it is none the less miserable for all that.

Grip, in the last issue, has a leading cartoon entitled "The Government Never was Stronger." It represents Sir John Macdonald, wearing the cap of office, the band around which is marked "C. P. R." His feet are braced with posts marked "Bribery" and "Monopoly;" while his knees are supported with "Patronage." Round his thighs is a C. P. R. brace, held up by "Illicit Printing" and "Sectional R. R. Subsidies." Under his arm-pits are the props of "Gerrymander" and "Revising Barristers." His muscles are developed into money bags, his hands being held up with such sturdy supports as "Timber Land and Grants to Supporters," and "Indian Superintendent's Votes." The Premier, who is most attenuated, thus fortified, coolly asks, "Now let's see who's going to upset me?" The other illustration refers to the return of Dr. Tupper. The latter is called "The mysterious visitor, or what's his little game?" Sir Charles, to the horror of his former colleagues, appears upon the scene, with his arms folded, and Mr. McLelan inquires from the Premier, "Are you sure those are not false arms he is exhibiting?"

[illegible]

A Cardwell correspondent writes:—At the nomination here to-day the Hon. Mr. White complained bitterly of receiving opposition from the local Conservatives, and endeavoured to make it appear that he had not now or heretofore forced himself upon this riding. Now, he must know that if he did not have to overcome hostility from local Conservatives himself, others have had to do it for him. He must be aware that his nomination in 1879 was brought about by outside influence, and was considered at the time an insult to the local men, who felt that they were entitled to it. Mr. White knows that Mr. John Allen, of Mono Mills, and many others, gave his nomination determined opposition, and the means adopted to buy off opposition must be remembered by Mr. White. Then, with reference to the election of 1882, Mr. White cannot fail to remember that the local Conservatives favoured Dr. Lawrence, and in fact the doctor had an address printed and circulated, and would have gone to the polls in opposition to Mr. White if the Liberal nominee, Mr. McLaughlin, had retired, which it was supposed he would do. The Conservatives of Cardwell have felt that they have been hewers of wood and drawers of water long enough for a few party heelers whom Mr. White delights to favor, and who in return—as in duty bound—worship Mr. White. It is beside the mark to say that Mr. Allison is brought out by Reformers, for that is not the case. The local Conservatives who have brought out Dr. Allison feel that they should be represented by one of themselves, and not by one who has not a stake in the county, and does not even live in the Province. The Conservatives of Cardwell can well afford to give their votes to a man supported by such prominent Conservatives as Geo. McManus, of Mono; Dr. Hamilton, of Adjala, Mr. McCort, of Albion, and many others, who never have been mere party hirelings and party hacks, but upright, straightforward men, anxious always to serve the country to the best of their ability. The Liberal Conservative electors and others having the interests of the country at heart, are very much more likely to follow such men as I have named than to suffer themselves to be drawn to the polls as an unthinking herd of cattle by Mr. White's political cowboy and pap-sucker from Bolton village. This gentleman dictates to Mr. White whom he shall appoint to office in the county. Not long ago on the recommendation of some local men, a competent and efficient gentleman was appointed as postmaster at one of the post offices in the county, but the Bolton village magnate directed Mr. White to cancel the appointment, which he forthwith did, and a grossly incompetent man has been appointed, and the post office is now in a tavern.

CARDWELL CONSERVATIVE.

Sault Ste Marie.

The Centre of a Fine Agricultural Country—A Twelve Days' Boat Journey.

Mr. H. C. Hamilton, of Sault Ste. Marie, is now on a visit to Toronto. He made the trip from Sault Ste. Marie, skirting along the north and east shores of Georgian Bay, to Penetanguishene, with two companions in an 18 foot boat. Strong head winds and an occasional rough weather delayed the little craft, and the trip occupied 12 days.

When interviewed by a reporter, Mr. Hamilton described Sault St. Marie as a growing place of from 800 to 1,000 inhabitants. The building trade has been more active during the past spring and summer than for several years past,

ALGOMA AS A FARMING COUNTRY.

Mr. Hamilton's name may be added to the list of witnesses who are fast dispelling the notion that Algoma is a barren and rocky wilderness. This idea is very easily formed by one who derives his impression of the country from a view of the deck of a steamer. The north shore of Lake Huron is lined with rock, which extends back a quarter or half a mile, and occasionally as much as five miles back. When the ridge is passed the traveller arrives at a belt of good farming land, with a stiff clay soil, on which cereals, vegetables, and small fruits grow well. There is a steady influx of settlers, and what is more important, the settlers stay and are apparently satisfied with the country. Of course there is land and land in Algoma as well as anywhere else; but the foregoing remarks as to the quality of the land will apply generally to the country lying between Sault Ste. Marie and Spanish River. The townships of Laird, Tarbutt, Macdonald, and Galbraith were mentioned by Mr. Hamilton as containing excellent farming land. So far there has been very little agricultural produce exported, but it all finds a home market among those engaged in the timber trade and among the newly arriving settlers.

THE TIMBER TRADE.

There are large saw mills at Thessalon, Spanish River, Blind River, and other places. Pine timber is plentiful, and in the township of Tarbutt there is found black birch which makes excellent furniture. Summer comes a little later than in Eastern Ontario, and the fall is a week or two shorter. The pleasant Indian summer lasts for about a month from the middle of October. The weather in winter is colder than in this part of Ontario, but bracing and invigorating.

There is ready and constant communication with the outside world through American territory, and a daily mail throughout the winter. The people, however, are anxiously awaiting the building of the "Algoma branch," and of the great International bridge, for which a charter has been obtained, and which is to cross the River Ste. Marie, and connect the Canadian and American towns.

Loss of a German Warship.

BERLIN, Aug. 22.—The reported wreck of the German corvette Augusta is confirmed. Her crew of 238 officers and sailors were lost and her value was $1,750,000. She was lost in a cyclone in the Red Sea.

A Military Riot.

DUBLIN, Aug. 22.—There was a riot in the city of Londonderry yesterday. Forty soldiers beat a crowd of civilians. The latter turned upon the soldiers and the picket guard had to be called out. The guard was obliged to carry fixed bayonets for self-defence. Order was finally restored.

Universal Catholic Union.

BERLIN, Aug. 22.—Dr. Windthorst will take a leading part in the meeting of German Catholics at Munster in September. He proposes a union of the Catholics of the world for the defence of the church. The scheme is approved by the Vatican.

LONDON, Aug. 22.—Russia is rapidly pushing her railway extension in the direction of India.

Lord Salisbury and M. DeGiers have reached a definite agreement with regard to the Afghan frontier question. A protocol embodying its settlement has been drafted and sent to St. Peterburg and it is expected that the signatures will be exchanged next week.

ST. PETERSBURG, Aug. 22.—The Herald, of this city, says: Russia, after a topographic survey of the Afghan frontier, has decided to abandon her claim to the Zulficar Pass.

Cross and Chalice

Seen on the White Cloth Covering a Dead Child.

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 22.—Considerable excitement has been caused in Cohoes, N.Y., by a strange sight at the residence of Mrs. Thomas Wood, whose infant child died on Wednesday. When the undertaker was preparing the body one of the party suddenly exclaimed that the figure of a cross and chalice could be seen on the white cloth that covered the child's face. The others looked and saw it. The word went out and people began to flock to the house until it was necessary to call a policeman to keep back the throng. The cloth was frequently wet but the mysterious figures would not go out. The spots where the cross and chalice were bore a glistening whiter shade than the remainder of the cloth when it was wet. About noon yesterday the shadow disappeared.

Tress and Telegraph Men.

People in Ontario who have taken the trouble to plant trees on the road side complain that the trees have been injured in many instances by the men who construct or have the care of the telegraph and telephone wires. When the foliage of the trees comes in contact with the wires a leak is produced which interferes seriously with the working of the lines. The telegraph companies have the right under the general act to cut down and remove all trees that may interfere with the working of the lines. The superintendent of the principal Canadian lines states, however, that it is the earnest desire of the company to avoid injuring shade or fruit trees, and that regulations are laid down for the guidance of their employees which, if broken through carelessness, entail severe penalties. Mr. R. W. Phipps, who has done much for the cause of forestry in Canada, suggests that farmers planting shelter trees would do well to plant them on the north and west sides of the farms from which direction shelter is needed, and then telegraph lines might be confined to the opposite sides of the roads. The officials of the telegraph companies have fallen in with the suggestion, and will carry it out as far as possible.

Dominion Doings.

There is strong belief in Toronto that Dr. Macdonald's death was not due to natural causes, but to the action of some drug intended to produce sleep.

During the thunderstorm Friday morning the barn of Alpheus Scrach, of Gosfield, Essex County, was struck by lightning and burned with all its contents.

Nothing New.

"E. R." writes from Rochester to the New York Sun:—A school atlas in my possession, published in Dublin, Ireland, in 1830, contains a map of North of America, on which there is a lake shown corresponding to Lake Mistassini, said to have been recently discovered. On the Irish map it is situate between 70° and 80° west from London, and the fifty-first parallel runs a little south of its north shore. Its diameter north and south is about half of that east and west, and from the eastern and western shores two long promontories extend into the lake, which is spelled Mistassins, and appears to be about as large in area as Lake Ontario.

Chapter XI—Continued.

We passed many gangs of convicts plodding along to their fate. Ivan told me that most of them were in chains. This I should not have noticed, as the irons are only on the legs and worn under the trousers. Poor wretched beings, my heart ached for them! Felons though they were, I could never refuse the charity they invariably prayed for. So far as I could see they were not unkindly treated by the soldiers and officers, but terrible tales were told me about their sufferings at the hands of inhuman jailers and commandants of prisons. There, for the slightest infraction of rules, the rod, the dark cell and a variety of other punishments were called into play.

I always felt relieved when we had passed out of sight of a gang like this. The contrast between my own position and that of such a number of my fellowmen was too painful to contemplate—and yet if Ceneri did not clear away every shadow of doubt from my mind I might retrace my steps a more miserable wretch than either of those footsore convicts.

Some week or ten days after leaving Tobolsk I began to make inquiries at every ostrog as to when Captain Varlamoff's gang passed, and when I might expect to overtake it. The answers I received to the latter question corresponded with that given me by the governor—all agreed at Irkutsk, or just beyond. Day after day I found we were gaining rapidly upon the party, and when at last we reached the large handsome town of Irkutsk I rightly reckoned that I had reached the end, or nearly the end of my journey.

On inquiry I found Captain Varlamoff had not yet arrived. At the place where I had last inquired I had been told he had passed through a day before, so it was evident we had overlooked and outstripped them. The best thing to be done was to wait in Irkutsk the arrival of the party.

I was not at all sorry to take a couple of days' rest after my fatigues. I was not sorry to indulge once more in the comforts of comparative civilization; yet nearly every hour I was sending down to inquire if the convicts had arrived. More ardently than I had longed to reached Irkutsk, I longed to turn the horses' heads westward and start on the return journey.

I had heard no news from home since I left St. Petersburg. Indeed, I could not expect a letter, as, after my departure from Nijni Novgorod, I had positively outstripped the post. On the road home I hoped to find letters waiting me.

After I had kicked my heels in Irkutsk for two days I received the welcome news that Captain Varlamoff had marched his prisoners to the ostrog at four o'clock that afternoon. I rose from my dinner and went with all speed to the prison.

A man in plain clothes—a civilian—demanding to be conducted to the presence of a Russian captain who had just arrived from a long march, seemed almost too great a joke for the sentries to bear in a soldier-like manner. Their stolid faces broke into scornful smiles as they asked Ivan if "the little father" had gone quite mad. It required much firmness, much persuasion and a gratuity, which to the simple military mind represented an unlimited quantity of "vodka," and consequently many happy drinking bouts, before I was allowed to pass through the gates of the high palisade, and, with many misgivings on the part of my guide, was conducted to the presence of the captain. A fine fierce-looking young soldier, who glared at me for disturbing him; for having, by advice, adopted the Russian costume, which by now was stained and frayed by travel, there was nothing to show him I was not a civilian whom any soldier might kick at his pleasure.

It was delightful to see the change the perusal of the Tobolsk governor's letter made in the captain's appearance. He rose, and with the greatest courtesy offered me a chair, and asked me in French if I spoke that language.

I assured him on that point, and finding I could dispense with Ivan's services sent him outside to wait for me.

Varlamoff would not hear of commencing business until wine and cigarettes made their appearance—then he was at my service in anything and everything.

I told him what I desired.

"To speak in private with one of my convicts. Certainly—this letter places me at your commands. But which convict?"

I gave him the true name. He shook his head.

"I know none of them by that name. Most of the names the political prisoners pass under are false ones. When they leave me they will become numbers, so it doesn't matter."

I suggested Ceneri. He shook his head again.

"I know the man I want is with you," I said. "How shall I find him?"

"You know him well by sight?"

"Yes—well."

"Then you had better come with me and try and pick him out among my unfortunates. Light another cigarette—you will want it," he added, with meaning.

He led the way, and soon we stood before a heavy door. At his command a jailer, armed with mighty keys, appeared. The grinding locks were turned, and the door was opened.

"Follow me," said Varlamoff, with a long pull at his cigarette. I obeyed, and standing on the threshold had much ado to keep from fainting.

From the stench which rushed through it, that open door might have been entrance to some pestilential cavern at the bottom of which all the impurities of the world were rotting and putrefying. As it passed you, you felt that the thick air was poisonous with disease and death.

I recovered myself as best I could, and followed my guide into the grim interior. The door closed behind us.

Had I the power to describe the sight I saw when my eyes grew accustomed to the gloom, I should not be believed. The prison was spacious, but, when the number of the prisoners was considered, it should have been three times the size. It was thronged with wretched beings. They were standing, sitting and lying about. Men of all ages, and, features of the lowest human type. They were huddled in groups—many were quarreling, cursing and swearing. Moved by curiosity they pressed around us as closely as they dared, laughing and jabbering in their barbarous dialects. I was in a hell, an obscene, unclean hell! a hell made by men for their fellow-men.

Filth! the place was one mass of it. Filth under foot—filth on the walls, the rafters and beams—filth floating about in the hot, heavy, pestiferous air. Each man seemed to be a moving mass of filth. Zola would revel in a minute description of the horrors of that place, but I must leave them to the imagination, although I know and even trust that no one's imagination can come near the reality.

The only thing I could think of was this. Why did not these men rush out, overpower the guards, and escape from this reeking den? I put the question to Varlamoff.

"They never attempt to escape whilst on march," he said. "It is a point of honor among them. If one escapes those left are treated with much greater severity."

"Do none ever get away?"

"Yes, many do when they are sent to the works. But it does them no good. They must pass through the towns on their flight or they would starve. Then they are always caught and sent back."

I was peering into all the faces about, trying to find the one I sought. My inspection was received with looks sullen, suspicious, defiant or careless. Remarks were made in undertones, but Varlamoff's dreaded presence kept me from insult. I examined many groups without success, then I made a tour of the prison.

All along the wall was a slanting platform upon which men lay in various attitudes. Being the most comfortable station every inch of it was covered by recumbent forms. In the angle formed by the prison walls I saw a man reclining, as if utterly worn out. His head sank down upon his breast, his eyes were closed. There was something in his figure which struck me as familiar. I walked to him and laid my hand upon his shoulder. He opened his weary eyes and raised his sad face. It was Manuel Ceneri!

CHAPTER XII.

THE NAME OF THE MAN.

He looked at me with an expression in his eyes which passed at once from hopelessness to bewilderment. He seemed to be uncertain whether it was a phantom or a man he was looking at. He rose to his feet in a dazed, stupefied way, and stood face to face with me, whilst his wretched fellow-prisoners crowded curiously around us.

"Mr. Vaughan! Here! In Siberia!" he said, as one not believing his own senses.

"I came from England to see you. This is the prisoner I am looking for," I said, turning to the officer who stood at my side, mitigating to some extent the noxiousness of the atmosphere by the cigarette he puffed vigorously.

"I am glad you have found him," he said politely. "Now the sooner we get outside the better; the air here is unhealthy."

Unhealthy! It was fetid! I was filled with wonder, as I looked at the bland French-speaking captain at my side, at the state of mind to which a man must bring himself before he could calmly stand in the midst of his fellow-creatures and see such misery unconcernedly—could even think he was but doing his duty. Perhaps he was. It may be the crimes of the prisoners forbade sympathy. But, oh! to stand there in the midst of those poor wretches, turned for the time into little more than animals! I may be wrong, but it seems to me that the jailer must have a harder heart than the worst of his captives!

"I can see him—talk to him alone?" I asked.

"Certainly; so you are authorized to do. I am a soldier; you in this matter are my superior officer."

"May I take him to the inn?"

"I think not. I will find you a room here. Please follow me. Phew! that is a relief."

We were now outside the prison door and breathing fresh air once more. The captain led me to a kind of office, dirty and furnished barely enough, but a paradise compared to the scene we had just quitted.

"Wait here; I will send the prisoner to you."

As he turned to leave me, I thought of the miserable, dejected appearance Ceneri had presented. Let him be the greatest villain in the world, I could not keep from wishing to do some little thing to benefit him.

"I may give him food and drink?" I asked.

The captain shrugged his shoulders and laughed good-temperedly.

"He ought not to be hungry, He has the rations which the government says are sufficient. But then you may be hungry and thirsty. If so, I do not see how I can stop you sending for wine and food—of course for yourself."

I thanked him and forthwith dispatched my guide in quest of the best wine and meat he could get. Wine, when ordered by a gentleman, means in Russia but one thing—champagne. At an inn of any standing champagne, or at least its substitute, wine of the Don, may be procured. My messenger soon returned with a bottle of the real beverage and a good supply of cold meat and white bread. As soon as it was placed on the rough table, a tall soldier led in my expected guest.

The Daily Examiner.

MONDAY, AUGUST 24, 1885.

Use the Telephone.

Friends and patrons of the EVENING EXAMINER are requested to use the telephone in communicating items of news which may come under their notice. We should be glad to avail ourselves of any information transmitted in that way before 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Prob'a Weather Promises.

The following forecast of the weather for this district for the 24 hours from 1 a. m. to-day, is received from the Toronto Meterological office :—Fresh winds; fair to cloudy warm weather with local showers and thunder storms.

Chiropodist and Manicure.

Prof. Davidson, Chiropodist and Manicure, of New York, is now stopping at the Grand Central Hotel, Peterborough, room 22. All persons troubled with Corns, Bunions and Ingrowing Nails, will be cured at once without pain. Postal cards answered. Outside orders promptly attended to.

Scott Act.

We are requested to announce that all temperance workers willing to help in the organizing for the vote to be taken on Sept. 24th are reminded of the meeting to be held to-night at 8 o'clock in the Y. M. C. A. Hall. The meeting for organizing Ashburnham will be held in the town hall there to-morrow (Tuesday) night. Mr. Feesy, the organizer from Toronto, will be present at both meetings.

United States Champions.

A grand lacrosse match will take place on the Athletic grounds, Ashburnham, on Wednesday afternoon, August 26, between the St. Paul Lacrosse Club (champions of the United States) and the Peterboroughs. This will be one of the finest matches played this season and the public should not fail to attend. Ball to be faced at 3 o'clock sharp.

Range and Rifle.

The following marksmen left town by the C. P. R. this morning to take part in the annual matches of the Ontario Rifle Association, which are being held at the garrison common ranges, at Toronto :—Messrs Max. Denniston, Geo. Fitzgerald, D. Cameron, W. H. Hill, Fred Hall and Robert Smith. These gentlemen have been assiduous in rifle practice, and their names are likely to appear among those making top scores.

Sabbath Breaking.

The cows of the north part of the town are wise in their generation. They seem to know when Sunday comes, for yesterday they were out in force and were promenading about with a proud sense of "exemption" from impounding, which shows they keep trace of the burning questions before the Council. At the same time they kept a sharp lookout for a chance of doing damage, and if they failed to find it, it was due to the vigilance of householders, who had to stay at home from church to protect their premises. While pounding away at the exemption question, our councillors might spare an odd moment or two to discuss the question of the protection of ratepayers' premises from the raids of vagabond cows.

Rink Lane Fight.

The lane in rear of the Lansdowne Rink has acquired a reputation as a "tough" place. Frequent fights occur there, and up to late hours of the night brawls, disturb the neighborhood On Saturday evening about ten o'clock a special ruction took place. One Lavery had his pugnacity aroused to such an extent that he appeared in the lane in full ring costume—a sort of tipsy John L. Sullivan—stripped to the buff above the belt, his pantaloons being his only covering. He approached another tough who was lounging in the lane and, with a foul epithet, invited him to repeat what he said a night or two before. The reply was a blow that tumbled Lavery to grass, and the fight became general. P. C. McGinty was promptly on the spot, but at his approach the party took refuge in one of the houses in the lane. Though McGinty followed them inside at considerable risk, he was unable to make any arrest. A little extra attention should be paid by the police to this neighborhood and an example made of some of the brawlers.

THE VULCANS' CHALLENGE.

The blacksmiths employed in Fitzgerald & Stanger's carriage works desire to challenge the blacksmiths of Porter Bros. carriage works to a friendly—if there is such a thing—game of baseball. Or they will play with the blacksmith employes of any other two establishments. The EXAMINER is willing to give publicity to the reply of the challenged artizans.

PETERBOROUGH VS. COBOURG.

Arrangements are being made for a match between these clubs and it is likely that it will take place on Friday at Riverside Park. The Cobourgs made a good stand against the Hamilton Clippers, and a game between them and the home nine should prove interesting.

"BARKIS IS WILLIN'."

The employes of THE EXAMINER composing room wish to signify their willingness to accept the challenge to a baseball match issued by the Review boys, provided a day can be selected which may be mutually convenient.

THE EXAMINER printers, like others of the craft, are always ready to take advantage of a "pick-up." It is expressly stipulated, however, that the pitcher of either side shall not be allowed to yell, "Yah! you! what yer givin' us?" to the umpire, whose decision may be disapproved of.

Lacrosse.

UNITED STATES CHAMPIONS V. MONTREALERS.

The St. Paul lacrosse players, who were victorious in Detroit and New York, met with a defeat at the hands of the Montrealers on Saturday afternoon on the grounds of the latter, where a large concourse had assembled to witness the game. The following are the names of the gentlemen composing the U. S. champion team :—L. Martin, J. Burns, H. Larkin, W. Hughes, W. E. Orr, J. Stark, C. Sherwood, J. Hughes, G. Warwick, D. Mahoney, J. Costello, W. Paton and J. Smith, captain. Martin is a New Yorker. The first game was of short duration and was taken by the Montrealers in one minute. The second was more prolonged, lasting fourteen minutes, but resulted in another goal for the Canadians. The Yankees managed to win the third in two and a-half minutes, but had to succumb to the Montrealers in the fourth after fourteen minutes' play. It was evident throughout that the Montrealers were giving the visitors every chance to win.

TORONTOS VS. SHAMROCKS.

These clubs played an exhibition game at the Rosedale, Toronto, grounds on Saturday afternoon, which resulted in the Shamrocks defeating the Torontonians in three straight games. Both teams had a number of new men on the field, and although the play was at times good on both sides the Shamrocks seemed to have had altogether the best of it. During the second game Tart Stowe of the Torontos, and Tom Trihey of the Shamrocks, had a little misunderstanding about some tripping done by the latter, and engaged in a little game at single stick which might have resulted in broken heads but for timely interference.

U. S. CHAMPIONS VS. PETERBOROUGH.

Mr. G. H. Giroux, Secretary of the Peterboroughs, received a letter this morning from Mr. F. Smith, manager of the St. Paul team, announcing that the latter will play here on Wednesday. The grounds of the Peterborough Athletic Association have been engaged for the occasion, so that every one will be able to see this match. From the way in which the U. S. champions have been playing it seems as if a match between them and the Peterboroughs would be a pretty close thing, and a highly exciting game may be anticipated. The St. Paul men travel in a special parlor car, hired from the Worcester Excursion Car Company, and do things up in right regal style.

NIAGARA VS. NEW YORK.

The Americans appear to be in hard luck so far as lacrosse in concerned. The Niagaras, who are not regarded as a particularly strong team in Western Ontario, defeated the New Yorkers on Saturday on Staten Island cricket ground, winning the first, fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh games in twelve, eight, nineteen, two and eleven minutes respectively. The Gothamites won the second and third games. Mr. Erastus Wiman officiated as referee.

Needs Attention.

The sidewalk on the west side of George street in the neighborhood of Antrim and Edinburgh streets is in a dangerously dilapidated condition. In one of the holes that abound two or three ladies were seen to step and perform painfully undignified and painfully abrasive falls. A patch in time is more economical than a verdict for damages with costs.

Riel.

There has been a great deal of talk lately about the hanging of Riel, but this is real truth that we will have our Feather Renovating and Mattress Establishment on Hunter street, three doors east of Aylmer, open for a few weeks, for which orders can be left there or at Parker's steam dye works, Water street, opposite the market square. Orders promptly attended to and satisfaction guaranteed or no charges made. Give us a trial. T. H. Gemmell & Co.

His Credentials.

The Lindsay Post says :—Mr. J. Nugent, who for some years carried on a drug store at Fenelon Falls and who for the last year has been living at Lindsay, has decided to go into business again. Mr. Nugent is making preparations to open out in Peterborough, in a handsome shop on Hunter street. The premises are now being altered and fitted up under the direction of Mr. Nugent, and a very fine plate-glass front will be put in. Mr. Nugent is a druggist and chemist of long experience and is in every way well qualified to carry on a city trade, while personally his social qualities and affable manner will make him a popular citizen and cannot fail to help in materially extending his trade.

The Way the Weather Ines.

Mr. G. W. Morgan, druggist, supplies the following memoranda of the variations of the thermometer and barometer :—

	Thermometer.	Barometer.
9 o'clock	80°	29.71°
1 o'clock	89°	29.62°
3 o'clock	71°	29.60°

Gas Expansion.

The increased demand for gas has induced the company to lay down large mains on Water and Aylmer streets. The work on the former street is pretty well on to completion, and that on Aylmer street will be pushed as rapidly as possible.

Annual Retreat.

The Roman Catholic clergy of the Diocese of Peterborough begin their annual retreat to day at the episcopal residence. The number is about twenty-five and the coming week will be spent by them in the most rigid seclusion—in devotional offices, in prayer and meditation. His Lordship Bishop Carbery, of the Diocese of Hamilton, preached the sermon at the 10 o'clock Mass yesterday and Rev. Father Flick at vespers.

Their First Appearance.

There should be a large attendance at the Lansdowne Rink this evening to witness the wonderful ladder performance and superb balancing feats of the Royal Russian Athletes, who will then make their appearance for the first time. They also give an unparalelled exhibition on the horizontal bar, a feature of which is the imitable funny doings of the great English clown, Fredericks, who is a side-splitter. There will be skating both before and after the performance. Admission 15c.

An Addition to Church Hymnology.

At the evening service at St. John's Church yesterday, hymn No. 198 of the ancient and modern collection, "Oh Jesu, Thou art Standing," was sung by the choir to a tune composed by Mr. C. C. Hampshire, organist of the church. The music which is in happy keeping with the spirit of the hymn, was most effectively rendered by the choir, who, under Mr. Hampshire's careful tuition, are making great progress.

Who Preached Yesterday.?

Charlotte Street Methodist.—Morning, Rev. G. H. Davis; evening, Rev. Mr. Bailey, Midland.

Baptist.—Morning, Rev. E. Duff; evening Rev. G. H. Davis.

St. John's.—Morning, Rev. T. B. Angell, curate; evening, Rev. J. W. R. Beck, rector.

St. Andrew's.—Morning and evening, Rev. A. Bell, pastor.

St. Peter's Cathedral.—At matins, Bishop Carberry, of Hamilton; at vespers, Rev. Father Flick.

St. Paul's.—Morning and evening, Rev. Mr. Torrance, pastor.

George Street Methodist.—Morning, Rev. Mr. Bailey, Midland; evening, Rev. E. Duff.

The Royal Russians.

The three Royal Russian Athletes will make their first appearance in Peterborough at the Lansdowne Rink this evening. They have drawn large audiences in every place in which they have appeared and earned for themselves the title of the premier athletes of the world. Their ladder performance is a most astounding athletic feat, and their champion double horisontal bar performance, in which is introduced the great English clown, Fredericks is of unequalled merit. They will remain here till Wednesday, giving nightly performances. Admission 15cts Skating before and after the performance.

PANTS.

How often does it happen that the general comfort and happiness of man depends on a good fitting pair of pants. Nothing will ruffle a man's temper more than to find when he tries on his latest new pair of pants that they are either too long or too short; that they pinch him so bad in one place that he dare not stoop, and are so large and baggy around the waist and knees that he is afraid he might be taken for the departed "Smith."

A SAFE THING TO DO

If you want to avoid all troubles and get a good fitting pair of pants that will feel as comfortable as a woollen mit, leave your order at the

EAST DURHAM.

As we predicted yesterday the polling in East Durham resulted in the election of Mr. Ward, the Ottawa candidate. This result is not a surprise. From the influences employed it was fatuous for the Liberal candidate to hope to be successful. The manner in which the Conservative victory was won is sufficiently indicated when it is remembered that characters like Messrs. Macintosh, Boultbee and Roddy Pringle engineered the private movements of the campaign. The riding is a strongly Conservative one, and it speaks strongly for the loyalty of the members of the party to the party, that they were able, contrary to the honest convictions (of many of them), to maintain the habit of voting the straight Tory ticket. Mr. Preston made an excellent fight, and his defeat need not dishearten him. Sir John had decided that the riding must be carried, and all who know him and his methods, will understand what that involves and implies.

The Lacrosse Picnic.

In spite of the coolness of the weather about 250 ladies and gentlemen, the latter being in the minority, left by the lacrosse excursion on the Golden-Eye this morning. The weather fortunately turned out warmer during the day, and there is no doubt they will be rewarded for their pluck by a first-rate day's fun.

Arrangements Complete.

Please bear in mind that the great all-rail excursion to the wonderful Falls of Niagara takes place on Thursday next, August 27th, and all arrangements have been completed for the same. The committee, who have just returned from the Falls, have arranged an excellent dinner at greatly reduced prices, and will also be prepared to furnish a lunch on board the train at trifling cost. This excursion will be the best of the season. All tickets good to stop off at Toronto and are valid for three days. Round trip only $2.50, children half-price. See posters and small bills.

The Russians at the Rink.

Last night, owing to heavy counter attractions, including a Hallelujah wedding and a free open air concert, there was not a very large attendance of spectators at the Lansdowne rink to witness the wonderful performances of the trio of Russian Athletes. The first part of the performance consisted of the ladder act, performed on two ladders about 15 feet in height, and some of the feats performed were marvels of strength and nerve. One performer would hold the ladders in position, another arched his body across the space the tops were separated, while a third stood on his body and waved aloft amid cheers, the Canadian and American flags. The second part consisted of feats on the horizontal bars, and these were marked by, not only marvellous agility, but marvellous strength. Clown Fredericks' antics kept the youngsters in in a roar, while some of his bona fide bar acts were splendidly done. The performance throughout could not be better of its kind. All who wish to enjoy a view of a first-class athletic performance should, and will, no doubt, be on hand to-night, when the performance will be repeated. The Fire Brigade Band will again be in attendance. There will also be a free outside exhibition previous to the regular performance. Admission, 15 cents.

Smokers will further their own interest by insisting upon having the "Cable," or "El Padre" brands of cigars which have stood the test for a quarter of a century, and yet allow greedy and unscrupulous dealers to persuade them to take other brands which pays them a larger profit, the consumer being a loser thereby. 13d-25w

A HALLELUJAH WEDDING.

Marriage of Capt. Wm. Eadie to Capt. Sarah Shaplin.

An Interesting Ceremony.

Hallelujah weddings in all parts of the world have always been the means of drawing together large audiences, and that of Captains William Eadie and Sarah Shaplin, which took place last evening in Bradburn's Hall, was no exception to the rule. Long before the doors were thrown open by the red-jerseyed door-keeper the hall and stairways leading to the room were crowded by impatient spectators of all ranks and ages and of both sexes, and in ten minutes from the time of their opening the hall was filled by one of the largest audiences that ever assembled within it, every seat, both on the floor and in the gallery, being occupied, while many unable to obtain seats stood in various parts of the building and crowded around the stage. They had not long to wait before the sounds of the salvationists were heard in the street below, and in a few seconds more the salvation soldiers, clad in their flaming scarlet jerseys, and in their more sober blue uniforms and poke bonnets, and carrying their noisy tambourines, wherewith they are wont to make, to them, gladsome, albeit to others discordant music, trooped into the room and took up their stations upon the platform. In the centre of this was placed a small table, upon which reposed several bouquets of flowers sent by friends of the happy pair, who had, at an earlier period of the day, been united in matrimony by Rev. G. H. Davis, and who were now to perform the ritual of the Army. Major Coombes, with his cornet, took up covering in the centre of the platform, the male warriors falling in on his right, and the female fighters of the world, the flesh and the devil, on his left.

THE HALLELUJAH LASSES

Among the officers present, were Major Coombs, Toronto; Capt. Macdonald, of Trenton; Capt. McGee, Bracebridge; Capt. Wiggins, Cobourg; Capt. Cape, Lieut. McDonald, Capt. Scott, Happy Nancy, Glory Tom and many others. The bridegroom and bride were seated in the centre of the platform, upon which Rev. Mr. Davis and Councillor John Douglas were also prominent figures.

For some few minutes while they were getting into their places, the vast audience kept up a hum of conversation, and jokes were bandied from one to the other, but when Major Coombs advanced to the front of the platform and solemnly raising his right hand, commended the meeting every tongue was hushed, and from that time to the end of the ceremony the best of order was preserved. At the conclusion of Major Coombs' prayer the bridgroom announced a hymn, in the singing of which the audience joined with a heartiness that told of many camp followers of the army hanging on to the skirts of the throng. After a short address by Major Coombes the Salvation song, "Trim your lamps and be ready for the midnight cry," was sung. Captain Eadie then led in prayer, after which Captain Burrill, sang a song, "I am trusting dear Jesus in Thee," to the tune of "Waiting," being accompanied by Captain and Professor Wiggins, of Cobourg, on a diminutive organ, no larger than a good-sized accordeon, but upon which the martial music master succeeded in producing capital music. Major Coombs then introduced to the audience "Captain Scott from Lindsay gaol," remarking "that his hair had'nt grown long yet," and that during his sojourn in gaol he had

TO GOD'S CARE,

"SHAVED A MURDERER

with a pair of scissors," and been put on a jury that brought in a verdict of "died of heart disease" in the case of a man that died of dropsy. Captain Scott, notwithstanding his recent incarceration, seemed quite happy, and in relating his experience, which he did in a voice husky with excitement, expressed a perfect willingness to undergo the same punishment again rather than forego the privilege of spreading the Gospel in the way that seemed best to him, the imprisonment having, he said, done his body no harm, and his soul lots of good. Captain Eadie next sang an impromptu song touching on current Salvation topics, to a well known English music hall comic air, the chorus, "We are marching along," being joined in with huge enthusiasm by the entire Army. Happy Nancy, a lass from Bracebridge, whose face in nowise belied her name, next gave a short address, and then the Professor from Cobourg favoured the meeting with a song "There's work for us to do," to an air of his own composition, and accompanying himself on his little organ. An address by Capt. Macdonald, a Trenton lass, was followed by a chorus. Capt. McGee, a somewhat delicate looking girl from Bracebridge, but whose whole frame quivered with excitement, related how she had been converted, and how by the power of prayer she had been restored from a sick bed to continue in God's work. After another song by Capt. Wiggins, who has a capital baritone voice and is a good pianist, Major Coombes announced Rev. G. H. Davis.

"GOD BLESS HIM,"

the army responding with a fervent and unanimous amen. The Rev. gentleman expressed the pleasure he felt at being present at what was termed a "Hallelujah Wedding," for he felt no doubt that Christ was among them.

They would remember how Christ had delighted to honor a wedding by making the first display of his miraculous power at it. And he felt glad to know that he had himself united so many couples in marriage in Canada during the last 30 years, that he met them wherever he went, and met them, too, with smiling faces, and he was thankful to have had the honor of uniting the friends here to-night in marriage. It was a holy and rightful ordinance, and he trusted that all along the journey of life the blessed Saviour, who was with them to-night, would be constantly with them, filling their homes by day and night with His holy love. He had read not long ago a statement of Cardinal Manning's, to the effect that religion was love, that all who loved God would be saved. And he believed the desire of this couple was to live in the love of God, and he wished them every blessing, that God might be with them and that His Holy Spirit might guide them; and that He might be with them in which they were engaged.

Major Coombes then explained the marriage rules of the Salvation Army, which bind the husband and wife to mutually support and help each other in the work of the Army. The bride and groom then stood forward amid shouts of "fire a volley" and applause from the audience. Councillor John Douglass acted the part of best man, and Capt. Macdonald, of Bracebridge, was bridesmaid. The bridegroom was in high feather, and made the responses after Major Coombes in a manner that caused some amusement. When the Major asked would he take her for better or for worse, he burst out laughing and said there would be no worse about it. The bride, who is a modest and comely, not to say handsome young woman, responded with much earnestness, and after the ring had been placed on her finger, and in the name of God and the Salvation Army, they had been declared man and wife, amid shouts of "fire a volley," "God bless them," etc., she and her husband both addressed the meeting, affirming their determination to live up to the promises they had made. Major Coombes again addressed the audience, and the meeting was then brought to a close by the singing of the hymn "Rock of Ages Cleft for Me." After this the audience dispersed, only a few friends of the newly made husband and wife remaining behind to tender their congratulations.

The Scott Act.

Mobilizing the Forces.

Pursuant to yesterday's announcement, a well-attended meeting of Scott Act adherents was held last night in the Y.M.C.A. Hall. Dr. Fife, vice-President of the county Association presided. Mr. Sawyer, of the Business College, was elected secretary. Mr. Courtney Fessey, of Toronto, described the methods of organization used by Mr. W. G. Fee, who has charge of that branch of the Peterborough campaign. Efficient war committees were formed. The secretary was instructed to call a special meeting of the committees, for Thursday evening, at the Scott Act headquarters, in the Business College block, Hunter street, placed at the disposal of the Association, by the county President, Mr. Geo. A. Cox. All Scott Act supporters will be welcome.

A convention of those in favor of the Scott Act will be held at Ashburnham Town Hall to-night at 8 o'clock for the purpose of organization.

The following are the members of the committees in the various wards:—

Scott Act and "Tradesman."

To the Editor of THE EXAMINER:

SIR,—Through your columns I would like to notice the letter signed "Tradesman," in one of your dailies of last week. I have heard the same arguments against the Scott Act, used on the street, of which the letter is the echo. Not long since I heard one, in his clear ringing voice say "If I had a hundred votes I would give them all against the Act, for it will destroy the business of our town completely." I did not wait to hear him 'explain how' it would do so but the letter referred to gives us a clew to the thoughts passing in the speaker's mind.

The way in which our business is to be destroyed is by driving it to those places—Toronto for instance—where the Scott Act is not in force. The driving would be done, apparently, by the closing of taverns here and, therefore, the closing of places of accommodation for man and horse from a distance. These would go to Toronto—there seems to be no nearer port for them now—because hotel accommodation can still be had there. It is further alleged that the Toronto "merchants, butchers, and tavern-keepers" know this and that they are paying men and women to come here and lecture in favor of the Scott Act. I find that there are a few of the farmers who hold the same absurd views and who use the same ridiculous arguments against the Act. Only for this I would not think it worth while to write on the subject.

I never heard so much nonsense in such small compass before as there is in that short letter of "Tradesman's." His trading is done, I imagine, very largely, with those who frequent the taverns. If this is so, then the Scott Act being passed, his business will, of course pass away too; but surely he cannot think that all the business of the town depends on the success of his little business.

Business driven away, indeed! driven away from where? From taverns only.

The meaning of the writer is, of course, that tavern sheds and perhaps tavern dining rooms will be closed against men and horses from the country districts and so for want of these business will be upset completely for the farmers against whom these doors are closed will every one in disgust, pass on to Toronto to sell their wheat and buy their sugars and teas. Perhaps the meaning is that they will do business by telephone.

Will the farmers of Otonabee, and Smith, and Dummer, drive all the way to Toronto, or will they board the trains in large bodies day after day, at Norwood and Peterborough and compel the conductor by sheer terror, to carry them as regular dead-heads to the Union station, Toronto, and back again in the same way to the place of beginning? If they don't resort to something of this kind they will find it rather expensive to do business in Toronto. What does "Tradesman" himself mean to do, I wonder?

"Tradesman" would make it out that the Toronto merchants are as thick headed as he is himself, to think of increasing their business by the passing of the Scott Act in a county distant from them from fifty to one hundred miles.

I wonder if "Tradesman" could mention the names of these Toronto "merchants, butchers and hotel keepers" who have subscribed towards the expenses of the men and women who are coming to lecture in favor of the Scott Act. I think it is more likely that some of the parties mentioned are subscribing towards the expenses of those who are coming to lecture on the other side of the question.

"Tradesman" is mistaken in the idea that there will be no "accommodation for man and horse," after the passing of the Scott Act. Tavern keepers are not such fools as to close their doors and gates because they cannot, legally, sell liquor. They may threaten to do so, but it will be an empty boast. They are too fond of money to pay rent and taxes for buildings from which they can have no returns.

Whatever "Tradesman" may think or speak or write or do the Scott Act will be passed, accommodation for visitors to our town will be provided and Peterborough will not become a desolation.

Yours truly,
PROPERTY OWNER.

Fatal Cyclone in Muskoka.

Two Children Killed—An Immense Amount of Property Destroyed.

BRACEBRIDGE, Aug. 25.—A cyclone passed over the north end of Muskoka district on Friday evening last, which literally swept everything out of its path, mowing down the trees, unroofing houses, barns, etc. Its course was from west to east. Several narrow escapes have been heard of, and two deaths, children of Mr. Crowder, who resides on Skeleton lake, in the township of Stephenson. The bodies of the children were discovered under a fallen tree.

A Compromise Probable.

BERLIN, Aug. 24.—It is thought a compromise will be arranged between Spain and Germany with regard to the Carolines affair. It is said Prince Bismarck prefers to abandon Germany's claim rather than offend Spain.

LONDON, Aug. 24.—The Standard's Berlin special says:—In consequence of the furore in Spain, Prince Bismarck has ordered the German Ministers at foreign courts to hold over their notes intimating Germany's occupation of the Carolines.

MISDIRECTED SYMPATHY.

A supersensitive and supersympathetic crank, whose tender soul is touched by the revelations in the Central prison inquiry, showing that prisoners have to work and don't have dinners, a la carte, writes to the Toronto World on behalf of the rogues confined in this institution. He seems to feel greatly grieved that this prison is a place of punishment for criminals and thinks it a shame that they do not enjoy the comfort and luxuries that fall to the lot of well-to-do and well-behaved citizens. He thinks broom making is a terribly monotonous and trying kind of toil and pleads that the reprobates and criminals be not worked too hard and that a billiard parlour be opened out in the institution for their enjoyment. We give more attention to this correspondent's maunderings than they deserve, because, unfortunately, he is but a type of a class of crotchety humanitarians who regard a convicted criminal, of no matter how degraded a stamp, as a special object of commiseration. Such sympathy is plainly misdirected. The object of incarcerating criminals is to punish them for their misdeeds to society, which render them unfit to remain unrestrained members thereof. The work they have to do is a part of their punishment. They won't work when at liberty, but prey on the toil of others, and it is only fitting that they should suffer literally the sentence of imprisonment with "hard labour" that has been pronounced upon them. It may be considered a hardship to put them at broom making, but this is an honest, cleanly employment, which, in these hard times, thousands of unemployed honest laborers would be glad to work at, and they wouldn't demand a billiard parlour to be added to their wages, either. When an honest labouring man completes a day of toil, he does not long for billiard parlors and recreating amusements, but seeks his humble bed, and depends for recreation upon "tired nature's sweet restorer, balmy sleep." The inmates of prisons are better fed, better lodged, and have more leisure time than thousands of honest and respectable labourers, who have hard toil to keep the wolf of starvation from the doors of their homes. Why, then, should a criminal be so particularly favoured? The toil he has to perform is a consequence of his crimes. The confinement he is subjected to is imposed because he is too great a rascal to be allowed his liberty. If he is placed in a dark cell and fed on bread and water it is his own fault; his presence there is the consequence of his misdoings. A prison is a place of punishment for criminals who have broken the laws of the land and the object of their incarceration is defeated if the prison is made a pleasant retreat instead of a penal institution. The mistaken sympathy that rogues receive has a bad effect. They are made to believe that they are martyrs and not miscreants, who deserve the punishment meted out to them. The sympathy evoked for an imprisoned rascal is suspiciously suggestive of a moral constitution, which verifies the expression. "A fellow-feeling makes one wondrous kind."

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The Pacific Railway Syndicate announce that they will not require the five millions of Treasury bills granted them under the Act of last session. They have been able to float fifteen millions of bonds, investors being well aware that if the company did not pay the interest and principal of these securities the Canadian public would have to do so.

It is charged that one of the conditions upon which Martin J. Griffin was appointed to the library was that he should continue to supply "Bull Pup" and "Slugger" editorials for the Mail. At all events he makes no attempt at concealing the fact that he still writes editorials for that paper. Already there are signs that he and Mr. De Celles will not work together harmoniously, so that instead of a joint librarianship we have a librarianship out of joint.

The Irish Nationalists.

DUBLIN, Aug. 24.—The Nationalist electoral campaign opens to-day with a banquet to Mr. Parnell. Several conferences will be held during the week. Mr. Parnell will preside over the meeting of the National League immediately after the conferences, and will make important statements. Several of Mr. Parnell's followers will not seek re-election next November, namely: Messrs. Lalor, O'Sullivan, Dawson and Meagher.

Mr. Blake and His Assailants.

In all Parliamentary history there is nothing more remarkable than the fact that no serious attempt was made to disprove any one of the charges made in those terrible indictments which Mr. Blake, last session, brought against Sir John Macdonald and his associates. The dreadful facts were marshalled with such consummate skill, the evidence by which they were sustained was so conclusive, so overwhelming, the presentation of the case was so able, that Sir John's feeble effort to reply to the speech on the affairs of the North West, appeared to the House of Commons and to the country, little else than a plea of guilty and an appeal for mercy. His supporters in the House felt that discussion would only make his guilt more manifest, and they remained silent. The Government organs feared to direct the attention of their readers to Mr. Blake's speeches, and having but not often, they also lapsed into silence. But if they dare not deal with the facts which damn their leader, they always revel in fiction, and the more monstrously improbable it is the more useful do they think it is.

ABUSED HIM BITTERLY AND VENOMOUSLY,

They have frequently pretended to believe that Mr. Mowat desires to supplant Mr. [illegible] in the House of Commons, and that many Liberals desire that Mr. Mowat should become the leader. Anything more absurd, more preposterous cannot be imagined. Mr. Mowat has never once conceived the slightest wish of becoming leader of the Liberal party in the Dominion, and neither the Liberal party nor any Liberals have entertained an idea of making a change either in the Dominion or in this Province. Both leaders are and between them, as in the ranks of the Liberal party, there is perfect harmony.

ADMIRABLY FITTED FOR THE POSITIONS THEY HOLD,

Only the Tory organs, which sometimes try to pretend that they are much concerned about the welfare of the Liberal party, and some papers which, professing to be independent, work constantly in the Tory interest, ever say a word about such a change. They imagine that they can raise the courage of their own party, or cause uneasiness in the Liberal ranks by asserting that such a change is contemplated somewhere. Having determined to propagate this idea, they pretend that the magnificent reception given to Mr. Mowat last summer in acknowledgment of the services he rendered the Province was a declaration that the Liberals desired Mr. Mowat to lead them in the Dominion, but it is infinitely more absurd to pretend that what some papers have said of the increased indemnity or that Mr. Preston's becoming a candidate for East Durham proves that Mr. Mowat desires to supplant Mr. Blake. Pretending to pay compliments to Mr. Mowat's ability which, to their sorrow,

THEY HAVE FOUND TO BE SO GREAT,

they deliberately insult him by charging him with hypocrisy and treachery of which he is incapable.

Mr. Blake never stood so high in the confidence and esteem of the Liberal party in the House of Commons and in the country as he does to-day. Engaged in a great constitutional struggle in which many circumstances are adverse and discouraging he has ever shown an honesty of purpose, a purity of motive, a keen sense of honour, and a disinterestedness which have endeared him to his friends and extorted the respect of his opponents. It is well known that he makes, not occasionally, but continually,

HEAVY PECUNIARY SACRIFICES

in order to discharge more fully the duties he has undertaken, and that power and place would bring him to not honor or emolument, but responsibility and toil. His transcendent ability, which is of incalculable value to the country, even while he sits on the Opposition side of the House, will be of much greater value when he is called upon to guide, the course, and shape the policy of the country. Such Tories as Mr. Mackenzie Bowell say that some of Mr. Blake's speeches are too long, and that they consist too much of attacks upon the Government. Such speeches as that on the affairs of the North-west, those critics no doubt think much too long. They would prefer vapid declamation to such and evidence and argument. But those who hear and those who read Mr. Blake's speeches know that he never uses an idle word, and that if he omitted anything of what he says, the case against the Government would be by so much less complete. It is because Sir John Macdonald commits so many monstrous crimes against the people's rights, the people's interests, and the people's conscience, that some of Mr. Blake's speeches are so long. But he never utters a word in Parliament to which even those on the Government side, who are in the slightest degree intelligent or respectable, do not listen with profound attention.

CRUSHING MASSES OF FACTS

The leader of the Liberal party in the Dominion holds a very different position from that of the leader of the Ontario section of that party. Sir John Macdonald, a wily, able, unscrupulous man, has at his back in the House of Commons a large majority, many of whom are as

UNSCRUPULOUS AND UNPRINCIPLED AS HIMSELF, and in the country he has the support of a great secret society of all those who desire to share in the public plunder and of all who hope to become wealthy as monopolists. He has also the support of many well-meaning men, who imagine that because they have always been Conservatives they are bound to support him, even when they disapprove of his policy. Sir John Macdonald uses the people's money and the power of Parliament and of the Crown to consolidate that body. Against such influence Mr. Blake and his friends can appeal only to the patriotism and the honesty of the people. No man in Canada can appeal to patriotism and principle so ably and successfully as Mr. Blake can. His calumniators say that he is feeble and ill-fitted to lead, but it is because he so often strikes terror into their miserable souls, because they know that he will soon

DRIVE THEM AWAY FROM THE FLESH POTS,

that they abuse and vilify him as they do. It is sometimes said that he makes no impression on the House or on the country. It is true that he seldom succeeds in persuading even one Tory to vote against any enormity proposed by the Tory Chief, but he often convinces them and often terrifies them. The fact that, notwithstanding the lavish use of money and of bribes in all other conceivable shapes, and all the promises of prosperity, and all the acts and devices of men long practiced in the arts of corruption and deceit, those who voted on the Tory side at the last general election exceeded those who voted on the Liberal side only by two or three thousand, proves conclusively that Mr. Blake's eloquence and ability, his disinterestedness and purity and honesty produced a powerful effect on public opinion. And those who note properly the signs of the times know that when a general election takes place again a vast majority of the people will declare that because Mr. Blake is honest and able above comparison with any or all of those opposed to him they desire that the interests of Canada be entrusted to his keeping.

The Zulfikar Pass.

Zulfikar, or Zulfigar, is on the right bank of the Heri Rud, and close to the river. From Sarakhs southward on the left or western bank, is Persian territory, a distance of about 70 miles, thus giving Russia a wider clasp in her embrace of Khorassan, a province expected to be absorbed, or at least utilized, when the advance on Herat and Ipdia takes place. The Pass of Zulfikar is a long, narrow defile, which at the northern end divides into two roads, one turning to the Garmab Pass on the west, and the one on the right tends toward Kungruelli and the salt lakes, which have been much talked of in relation to the frontier. The road comes out at the south, and very little above the level of Heri Rud, and the ground, although with some elevations upon it, is somewhat level. About ten or twelve miles to the south are the Chahar Dowli, four prominent peaks; these are on the banks of the Heri Rud, where the Stoi range comes down from Persian side, and among them is the Tengri Dari or gorge of the river, at which place the roads on both sides leave the stream. On the east of the Chahar Dowli, the elevations are not so high, and the usual road runs south to the Nialshemi Pass, and the great plain leading to Herat is reached. From Zulfikar the branch of the Paropamisian range trends to the south-east. It ought to be remembered that the ground between Pul-i-Khatum and the south entrance of the Zulfikar Pass contains within its space the most important strategical position between Sarakhs and Herat. This fact will explain the desire of the Russians for its possession.

The Court Had Informed Itself.

A Boston Judge upset a whole courtroom of lawyers the other day by an unprecedented ruling. He was listening one morning for an unending time to testimony, good, bad and unreliable, in regard to the width of a certain street. In the midst of the matter a recess was taken, and the Judge disappeared. When the court reopened he took his seat and prepared to listen. More witnesses were called to testify to the feet and inches; but the Judge waved his hand. "You needn't say anything more about the width of that street. I know all about it. I've been out in the recess and measured it myself!" "There's another old Judge over in East Boston who invariably follows the same plan. "You needn't tell me anything about East Boston," he said the other day. "I've lived here all my life, and I know as much about every inch of it as anybody, I guess."

CALLED BACK.

BY HUGH CONWAY.

Chapter XII—Continued.

I placed a chair for Ceneri, into which he sank wearily. As he did so, I heard the jingle of the irons on his legs. Then I told my interpreter to leave us. The soldier, who no doubt had received his orders, saluted me gravely and followed his example. The door closed behind him, and Ceneri and I were alone.

He had somewhat recovered from his stupefaction, and as he looked at me, I saw an eager, wistful expression on his face. Drowning as he was, no doubt he caught at the straw of my unexpected appearance, thinking it might assist him to freedom. Perhaps it was to enjoy a moment or two brightened by the faintest or wildest gleam of hope, made him pause before he spoke to me.

"I have come a long, long way to see you, Dr. Ceneri," I began.

"If the way seemed long to you, what has it been to me? You at least can return when you like to freedom and happiness."

He spoke in the quiet tone of despair. I had been unable to prevent my words sounding cold and my voice being stern. If my coming had raised any hope in his heart, my manner now dispelled it. He knew I had not made the journey for his sake.

"Whether I can go back to happiness or not depends on what you tell me. You may imagine it is no light matter which has brought me so far to see you for a few minutes."

He looked at me curiously, but not suspiciously. I could do him no harm—for him the outer world was at an end. If I accused him of fifty murders, and brought each one home to him, his fate would be no worse. He was blotted out, erased; nothing now could matter to him, except more or less bodily discomfort. I shuddered as I realized what his sentence meant, and, in spite of myself, a compassionate feeling stole over me.

"I have much of importance to say, but first let me give you some wine and food."

"Thank you," he said, almost humbly. "You would scarcely believe, Mr. Vaughan, that a man may be reduced to such a state that he can hardly restrain himself at the sight of decent meat and drink."

I could believe anything after the interior of the ostrog. I opened the wine and placed it before him. As he ate and drank, I had leisure to observe him attentively.

His sufferings had wrought a great change in him. Every feature was sharpened, every limb seemed lighter—he looked at least ten years older. He wore the Russian peasant's ordinary garments, and these hung in rags about him. His feet, swathed in fragments of some woolen material, showed in places through his boots. The long, weary marches were telling their tale upon his frame. He had never given me the idea of being a robust man, and as I looked at him thought that whatever work he might be put to, it would not pay the Russian Government for his sorry keep. But the probabilities were, they would not have to keep him long.

He ate, not voraciously, but with keen appetite. The wine he used sparingly. His meal being finished, he glanced around as if in quest of something. I guessed what he wanted and passed him my cigar-case and a light. He thanked me and began to smoke with an air of enjoyment.

For a while I had not the heart to interrupt the poor wretch. When he left me it must be to return to that hell peopled by human beings. But time was slipping by. Outside the door I could hear the monotonous step of the sentry, and I did not know what period of grace the polite captain might allow to his prisoner.

Ceneri was leaning back in his chair with a kind of dreamy look on his face, smoking slowly and placidly, taking as it were, everything he could out of the luxury of a good cigar. I asked him to drink some more wine. He shook his head, then turned and looked at me.

"Mr. Vaughan," he said; "yes it is Mr. Vaughan. But who and what am I? Where are we? Is it in London, Geneva, or elsewhere? Shall I awake and find I have dreamed of what I have suffered?"

"I am afraid it is no dream. We are in Siberia."

"And you are not come to bear me good news? You are not one of us—a friend trying at the peril of your life to set me free?"

I shook my head. "I would do all I could to make your lot easier, but I come with a selfish motive to ask some questions which you alone can answer."

"Ask them. You have given me an hour's relief from misery, I am grateful."

"You will answer truly?"

"Why not? I have nothing to fear, nothing to gain, nothing to hope. Falsehood is forced on people by circumstances; a man in my state has no need of it."

"The first question I have to ask is—who and what is that man Macari?"

Ceneri sprang to his feet. The name of Macari seemed to bring him back to the world. He looked no longer a decrepit man. His voice was fierce and stern.

"A traitor! a traitor!" he cried. "But for him I should have succeeded and escaped. If he were only standing in your place! Weak as I am, I could find strength enough to cling to his throat till the vile breath was out of his accursed body!"

He walked up and down the room, clinching and unclinching his hands.

"Try and be calm, Dr. Ceneri," I said. "I have nothing to do with his plots and political treasons. Who is he? What is his parentage? Is Macari his name?"

"The only name I ever knew him by. His father was a renegade Italian who sent his son to live in England for fear his precious blood should be spilt in freeing his country. I found him a young man and made him one of us. His perfect knowledge of your tongue was of great service; and he fought—yes, once he fought like a man. Why did he turn traitor now? Why do you ask these questions?"

"He has been to me and asserts that he is Pauline's brother."

Ceneri's face, as he heard this intelligence, was enough to banish lie number one from my mind. My heart leaped as I guessed that number two would be disposed of as easily. But there was a terrible revelation to be made when I came to ask about that.

"Pauline's brother!" stammered Ceneri. "Her brother! She has none."

RELIANCE ROXBURY'S PROTEGEE.

How Dot and her Mother Found a Home.

It was with a grim determination to brave the worst that she awaited the train that afternoon, but when the locomotive appeared on the bridge below the village, the thoughts of the dreadful boy who was coming to invade her peaceful domain nearly overcame her, and her impulse was to order the hired man to drive home as quickly as possible. She could appreciate the emotions of a Roman dame at the approach of the Vandals.

As the train stopped at the station the people crowded forward to welcome their guests. Miss Roxbury peered anxiously from the rockaway. It was not a very appalling sight. A group of pale little children, tired, dusty and bewildered. Many eyes overflowed as the train moved on and left these wistful faces, pinched by want and misfortune, in the midst of the kindly villagers.

"Here, Miss Roxbury, is a wee lamb for you," said Mr. Alder.

Miss Roxbury had not observed his approach in the crowd, and gave a start of surprise as he stood before her. As she looked there was a curious sensation under the left side of her crape shawl, and her cold gray eyes grew misty.

The "dreadful boy" had changed into a tiny girl of six years, as frail as a snowdrop, whose coarse attire could not mar the loveliness of her eyes and hair of tangled sunbeams. The little creature stretched out her arms to Miss Roxbury, who reached forward and took her into the rockaway, the ancient springs of which creaked with astonishment.

"What is your name?" said Miss Roxbury, feeling strangely awkward, as they drove along.

"Dot," said the child. "You hasn't kissed me yet, has you?"

Miss Roxbury bent and kissed the child. The rockaway creaked louder than before. The touch of the child's mouth thrilled through the iron nerves of the woman with a sensation inexpressibly delightful.

Miss Roxbury had imagined her life to be a happy one. She now discovered that she had mistaken selfish isolation for happiness. She was beginning to be happy for the first time in fifty years. Dot was too tired to be very talkative, but she leaned against Miss Roxbury with a look of quiet wonder and content in her eyes.

"Is I going to stay here?" she asked, as the rockaway stopped at the Roxbury gate, and she surveyed the old stone house with the woodbine clambering over its gray walls.

"Yes, child."

Dot's face grew luminous. A bath, a bountiful supper of bread and milk and a walk in the garden kept her joyful until twilight, but with bedtime came the longing for her mother.

"I wants my mamma—my own mamma," she said.

Then Miss Roxbury gave vent to the instinct that can never be utterly destroyed in a woman. Taking the child in her lap she caressed the white face and sunny curls in a restful, soothing way, and talked so cheerfully that the shadows fell from the violet eyes, and Dot, nestling close, said,—

"I love you."

Miss Roxbury had not only begun to be happy; she had begun to live. With the coming of this sweet child Heaven was changing the dull prose of her existence into celestial rhythm. Her cold, loveless nature in the presence of this tiny girl was already becoming Christ-like in its tender ministry.

Dot offered her evening prayer and was put in Miss Roxbury's own stately bed.

"Good-night, dear," said Miss Roxbury, with a kiss.

"Good-night," said Dot, burying her face in the great bunch of lovely white roses she had brought to bed with her; "I feel zif I'd died and gone to Heaven."

Miss Roxbury passed a wakeful night but not a restless one. Her mind was filled with plans, and then it was such a pleasure to lie and listen to the soft breathing at her side, and occasionally to touch the little hand on the counterpane, still holding the treasured roses.

The next day Dot ran nearly wild with delight. She revelled among the daisies in the deep, soft grass, and it was pitiful to see how small an object could charm her hungry mind. God's commonest gifts were unknown to her in their bounty and purity. Sunshine, sweet air, flowers and bird songs were enough to make her happy, and when she found the brook that danced across the meadow her delight was unbounded.

After a day or two Miss Roxbury took the morning train down to Bradleyville to do some shopping. She was gone until night, and all the way home she thought of the glad voice that would welcome her, and her face grew so radiant with the new joy in her soul that when she alighted, laden with parcels, at the Lynford station, old Deacon Bennett failed to recognize her until she had passed him.

"Wall, I declare," he said, "Reliance looked as if she'd diskivered a gold mine."

Miss Roxbury reached home and soon had the "gold mine" in her arms.

After tea the parcels had to be opened. There were paper patterns, rolls of muslin, embroidery and blue flannel, a pair of child's slippers, dainty hose, bright ribbons and a large doll.

"Oh, oh, oh!" was all that Dot could say, but her tone expressed more than the most extensive volume on philanthropy that ever was written.

The village dressmaker was installed in the house for a week. The Rocky Mountain patchwork was consigned to the seclusion of the spare room closet, and Miss Roxbury developed a taste in Mother Hubbard dresses and ruffled aprons that was truly marvellous.

In the meantime she wrote a letter to Dot's mother, to which Dot added a picture of the cat, which, although not absolutely true to nature, resembling in fact the plan for a house, was a great satisfaction to the young artist. There came no reply to this letter.

Dot's cheeks were getting plump and rosy and her step buoyant.

"If it wasn't for my mamma," she said, "I would not want to go back forever's ever."

When Mr. Knox, the gentleman in charge of the party, called to see that Dot would be ready to return at the appointed time, Miss Roxbury exclaimed, almost fiercely,—

"I can't let her go. I need her. Why may I not keep her?"

TUESDAY, AUGUST 25, 1885.

Use the Telephone.

Friends and patrons of the EVENING EXAMINER are requested to use the telephone in communicating items of news which may come under their notice. We should be glad to avail ourselves of any information transmitted in that way before 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

100 Boys Wanted

At the Post Office corner at 7.45 this evening to take part in torch light parade, with Fire Brigade Band. Free admission to Rink to those carrying torches.

Not Riel.

It was not real truth as appeared in an item in yesterday's issue that Messrs Gemmel & Co's. feather renovator and mattress establishment will be open in a few weeks, since it should read for a few weeks. Now is the time to leave orders at the establishment, three doors west of Aylmer street on Hunter, or at Parker's Steam Dye Works, Market Square.

Palaces on Wheels.

Two handsome first-class passenger cars for the C. P. R. arrived in town yesterday from the Cobourg car works, having been brought here over the Midland Division of the G. T. R. Like all of the Company's rolling stock they are handsome and commodious, the decorating in them being particularly chaste on design and beautiful in finish, while no device to secure the comfort of the traveller has been neglected.

New Journalistic Enterprise.

The first number of the Hastings Observer, the second journalistic representative of that ambitious village, is to hand. Mr. H. Morton is editor and proprietor, and from the exceedingly creditable appearance of the first number, he is well qualified for the former position, and will make the Observer not only a paying institution, but a credit to its locality. The opening number contains a liberal share of advertisements, excellent selections, and an abundance of well edited, readable local reading matter. The Observer is an eight-page journal. It is to be hoped that many days of prosperity are before it.

To-night.

And every night this week the Wizard Oil concert Co. will discourse sweet sounds on Market Square commencing at 7.30 o'clock. We advise all lovers of good music, rendered in an acceptable and refined manner by a company of people who are endorsed by the press of the larger towns of Ontario as gentlemen, to attend these entertainments. Ladies are especially invited to favor the company with their presence and they may rest assured they will neither see nor hear anything that could possibly offend the most fastidious. Gentlemen bring your wives and daughters and the Wizard Oil Company promise you an enjoyable evening's entertainment.

The Faucher's Point Shooting.

Mr. J. W. Wedlock, of Beaufort, called at the EXAMINER office on Monday to explain the shooting of Odette, an account of which appeared in this paper a week ago. Mr. Wedlock says that he has never had any illfeeling against Odette, and that the story regarding a net is, so far as he is concerned, quite untrue, as he never owned or set a net in the river, and had no cause for any quarrel with Odette. His version of the matter is that he was out shooting and fired at a snipe, which he missed, and that a few stray shot struck Odette, who was fully 90 yards distant, and of whose presence he was quite unaware until he heard him calling out when hit. He says further, that instead of then going away, as was said, he went ashore and helped to wash Odette and apologised to him for the accident, and that all the latter said was that he should be more careful which way he shot. Wedlock claims to have plenty of evidence to prove that the affair was purely accidental, and it certainly does seem that if he had, as Odette stated, fired deliberately at him, Odette must have been killed, or at all events, received serious injury. The fact that Odette has taken no proceedings, too, seems to confirm the truth of Wedlock's story.

ATHLETICS.

Lacrosse.

THE UNITED STATES CHAMPIONS VS. PETERBOROUGH.

Mr. G. H. Giroux, Secretary of the Peterborough Lacrosse Club, received a telegram from the St Paul team last evening asking if the match here could be deferred till Thursday. As the Association grounds, on which the game is to be played, are engaged for the bankers' and operators' base ball match on that day the request could not be entertained and the U. S. champions were wired to that effect. They replied stating that they wished to play Ottawa on Wednesday, but as arrangements here could not be altered they would forego that match. They will accordingly be here to-morrow, when a rattling game may be expected.

THE CHECKER-ORILLIA DISPUTE.

The Secretary of the National Amateur Lacrosse Association has made public the evidence in the dispute between the Checker Club, of Beaverton, and the Orillia Club, of Orillia, which was submitted to the Council [illegible] ion favourable to the Checker club has been given, and the disqualification of G. H. Armstrong and H. McCall, under rule 9, section 1. The charges against W. J. Edmonson and W. York were dismissed. The vote was as follows:—In favour of Checker Club's complaint—J. C. Smart, Brockville; Dan Rose, F. W. Garvin, T. P. Phelan, Toronto; E. Nesbitt, Woodstock; T. G. Ballantyne, Brampton. Total 6. In favour of Orillia Club—Dr. Guerin, D. Kieley, Montreal.—Total 3. The following members did not vote:—H. LeBrun, H. J. McGlashan, D. E. Bowie, T. R. Curran, and T. H. Reddiit.—Total 5.

Baseball.

THE COBOURG-PETERBOROUGH GAME.

The Secretary of the home club received a despatch this morning from Secretary Hosey, of the Cobourgs, stating that they would be here on Friday.

LONDON V. CLIPPERS.

LONDON, Aug. 24.—About 1,200 persons assembled on the grounds of the London Baseball Club this afternoon to witness a championship match between the Londons and Clippers, of Hamilton, which the home team won by a score of 7 to 2. The play on both sides was very fine. Following is the score:—

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
Londons	0	0	0	0	4	0	2	0	1	7
Clippers	0	0	1	0	0	0	1	0	0	2

THE GAUNTLET LIFTED.

To the Sporting Editor of THE EXAMINER:

DEAR SIR,—On looking through your paper last evening I noticed a challenge from Messrs. Fitzgerald & Stanger's employees to Porter Bros'., or any other two shops, to a game of baseball, and we, the employees of Lockhart & Chowen, will accept the challenge.

Yours, etc.,
SLEDGE-HAMMER.

Range and Rifle.

A PETERBOROUGH PRIZE WINNER AT THE PROVINCIAL.

Lieut. Max. Dennistoun, of the 57th Battalion, was successful yesterday in winning prizes in the Canada Co's match and the Macdonald match of the Ontario Rifle Association series at Toronto. The day was wet and unfavorable for shooting. Lieut. Dennistoun's score in the Canada Co's match was 25, in the Macdonald competition 27, the highest score being 33.

Toronto.

All tickets used on the great all-rail excursion to the wonderfull Falls of Niagara, which takes place on Thursday next, Aug. 27th, are good to stop off at Toronto, and are valid for three days. If you don't want to see the wonders of Niagara, visit our Provincial Capital.

Riel.

There has been a great deal of talk lately about the hanging of Riel, but this is real truth that we will have our Feather Renovating and Mattress Establishment on Hunter street, three doors east of Aylmer, open for a few weeks, for which orders can be left there or at Parker's steam dye works, Water street, opposite the market square. Orders promptly attended to and satisfaction guaranteed or no charges made. Give us a trial. T. H. Gemmell & Co.

A Deserved Triumph.

The Toronto Mail thus highly compliments the singing of Miss Marie Strong, who will delight a Peterborough audience at Bradburn's Opera House, on Tuesday evening, Sept. 1st.

"Miss Marie Strong achieved a marked success. She has a remarkably rich voice and in the cavitina 'Ah Quel Giorno,' from Semiramide surprised the audience by the extent of her capabilities in the way of vocalisation. She received an enthusiastic encore and her triumph was certainly well deserved."

The Hose Question.

The members of the Committee on Fire, Water and Light are to meet at the Town Hall this evening, for the purpose of making an examination into the state of the town fire hose, which, at the last council meeting, was represented to be in such a deplorable condition. It is to be hoped that their investigation will be searching and thorough, and that the citizens will not be kept any longer in ignorance as to the condition of the fire extinguishing appliances, for which so much of their money has been expended.

Personal.

Yesterday Mr. E. C. Hill, Peterborough's "boss bill poster," was covering Toronto's dead walls and hoardings with the posters of the Central Exhibition.

Mr. J. W. Bennett left this morning for Toronto to attend the examinations in law, which commence on the 27th inst. Mr. J. P. Eastwood will start for Toronto, with the same object in view, to-morrow morning.

What We may Expect.

Arrangements Complete.

Please bear in mind that the great all-rail excursion to the wonderful Falls of Niagara takes place on Thursday next, August 27th, and all arrangements have been completed for the same. The committee, who have just returned from the Falls, have arranged an excellent dinner at greatly reduced prices, and will also be prepared to furnish a lunch on board the train at trifling cost. This excursion will be the best of the season. All tickets good to stop off at Toronto and are valid for three days. Round trip only $2.50, children half-price. See posters and small bills. Parties wishing to remain over Sunday at the Falls, can return on Monday, by paying one dollar extra.

A "Dry" Story.

A well-known resident of Peterborough, who is seeking a brief rest from the carking cares of business life, by camping out for a few day's holiday, in the vicinity of Wallace Point, yesterday met with a sad misadventure. While "paddling his own canoe" on the river, he by some means got mixed up with the water, but the water not being deep, he managed to wade ashore, none the worse above the waist, but with his unmentionables clinging to his legs in a most uncomfortable manner. He at once proceeded to remedy matters by building a rousing fire and taking off the dripping trousers, hung them up to dry at it. The process being some what slow, and time being heavy on his hands, he was struck by the brilliant idea that while the trousers were drying, he might occupy the time in catching a string of fish for supper, so, hanging the unmentionables up before the fire, he at once repaired in his Highland costume to the river bank, where he plied his bait with such success as to soon become quite absorbed in the sport, and entirely forgetful of the trousers left to dry. At length, however, the cool zephyrs of the evening playing sportively around his naked nether extremeties, awoke him to consciousness of his semi-nudity and he returned to the camp-fire, expecting to find his pantaloons nicely dried and warm, and ready to put on. On approaching it, however, no pantaloons were to be seen, and the first thought was that they had been stolen. A closer investigation, however, revealed a few charred remains that told how the fire had done its work all too well and dried the garments into nothingness. A kindly disposed native came to the gentlemen's rescue after a while with a pair of overalls, and a friend from town who happened to be spending the day in the vicinity returned last night bearing with him a commission to send down a pair of trousers by special messenger.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The publisher of THE EXAMINER does not hold himself responsible for the facts asserted, nor the opinions expressed by correspondents.]

A Noted Lecturer.

To the Editor of THE EXAMINER:

SIR,—The Scott Act mass meeting announced for next Monday evening promises to be of more than usual interest. It will be held in the Opera House. Mr. John A. Nichols, of Lowell, Mass., will be the speaker of the occasion. He is said to be the strongest lay platform worker in the Dominion. Mr. Nicholls addressed the notable mass meeting at Milton, Halton county, after the important convention there on Monday, June 23rd. Although a young man, 32 years of age, he has been engaged in aggressive temperance work, both on this continent and in Great Britain, since 1868—a record of seventeen years continuous public speaking. Mr. Nicholls was the first to introduce the Gospel Temperance Reform Club movement in Canada. During the past seven months he has been prominently connected with the Scott Act campaigns. Mr. Nicholls made thirty addresses in Lincoln county. He spoke sixteen times in Victoria county last month. His speeches created great enthusiasm at each place visited. As a debater at the Opposition meetings held by the W.L.T.U. he vindicated the supporters of the Scott Act with great success. Friends and opponents are assured by those who have many times heard Mr. Nicholls of a treat in store in listening to this brilliant young speaker.

PHILANTHROPIST.

Peterborough, Aug. 26th.

Range and Rifle.

At the second day's competition of the Ottawa Rifle Association yesterday in Toronto the Peterborough marksmen kept up the reputation of the town. In the Gordon match—100 yards—Quarter-Master Sergt. Hill, of the Cavalry, captured a $4 prize, securing 24 — top score 30. Mr. R. H. Smith, of the Association, also took a $4 prize in the same class, with a score of 23. In the Walker match, 500 and 600 yards, Lieut. Dennistoun secured a $4 prize, with a score of 50—highest 63—and Mr. F. Hall also won a $4 note, with a tally of 49. Four representatives to the fore with four four dollar prizes, is not so bad.

Kingston's Scarlet Fever.

According to the Whig, on Monday evening Ald. Thompson questioned the expediency of opening the schools after vacation, because of the prevalence of scarlet fever in the city. He said the disease had been spreading since February last, and it was high time the people awoke to the necessity of throttling the disease ere winter came. If they didn't do this Kingston would get a bad name. Mayor Smythe said the Board of Health would be called together shortly and action taken. He said he had encountered two classes of citizens. One endeavored to rid the city of the epidemic; the other viewed the action of the Board of Health with alarm, declaring that it hurt trade, and that the disease would soon die out. He would at once consult with the school authorities, and the Board of Health would be convened. The medical health officers thought the disease was on the wane. He said the doctors were woefully negligent in sending in reports of contagious diseases. The Health Act should be strictly enforced in this regard.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

BASEBALL CLUB.

The young men and boys of the village and vicinity have organized a baseball club and met for first practice on Saturday evening. The batting of most of the players was very good, and some of the youthful players achieved success in this line which would do credit to men. In fielding they are a little behind but with steady practice will improve. It is probable that a friendly game will be played with the "Clippers" of Bridgenorth, from whom an invitation has been received, in the beginning of September.

PICNIC.

The members of St. Mary's R. C. Church have decided to hold a grand picnic on or about Thursday, Sept. 22nd. A splendid programme of athletic and aquatic sports will be provided and every effort will be made to make it a grand success.

THE CROPS.

Fall wheat that has been thrashed has yielded very well. Barley, which was a good crop, was considerably colored by the wet weather, after being cut. Spring wheat is a splendid crop on high land, but on low land, it is badly rusted, and will not yield more than eight or nine bushels to the acre. Oats and peas are a good crop, but the grasshoppers are doing considerable damage to the late oats.

Keene.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

O, for some cows in a dairy!
O, for a pig in a pen!
O, for some sheep and a pony,
And a mate for my Plymouth hen!

And O, for some items of news! for truly this week, in that line, is sadly wanting.

The rice crop in Rice Lake promises to be very abundant. It extends out into the Lake for nearly a mile from the mouth of the Indian River, and is as dense and nearly as tall as a heavy crop of rye—not "old rye," it stands up better than that. And the steamers, etc., passing up and down have made a channel through it like a canal—a clear waterway. It is impossible for your correspondent to say what extent of surface the rice fields cover, for it is disposed here and there around and throughout the lake in vast fields, close, extensive green and beautiful. There must be in all thousands of acres. Strangers might imagine the lake must be very shallow where the rice grows, but such is not always the case, for in many places it grows where the water must be at least from 6 to 9 feet deep.

We learn that the Foresters from Norwood, before long, intend having a trip up the river and lake from Hastings, and a pic-nic at Idyl Wild.

Mr. Wm. Stark, of Otonabee, has had a cargo of brick from Peterborough, delivered at our wharf. He intends building, we understand.

John Lang, Esq., reeve of Otonabee, met with a serious accident last Friday. He was reaping when something went wrong with the reaper, and in order to mend or put it right, he was looking through between the spokes of the big driving wheel. At this juncture the horses started, bringing the iron spoke of the wheel into contact with his head which then came into contact with another and fixed part of the machine, thereby making a large scalp wound of some three or four inches in length, and at the same time lifting the scalp up from the skull for about two and a-half inches in width. Mr. Lang had a most fortuitous escape; if his head had been one inch further forward so that it would have been caught upon the side instead of the round of the head, the consequences would have been fearful to think about. Except the wound on the head, Mr. Lang is not hurt and is around and doing well.

We are sorry to state that Elizabeth, wife of Mr. James Dickson, of Otonabee, died last Sunday about 9 p.m. The funeral, which was a very large one, took place last Monday afternoon, when her remains were conveyed to the Keene cemetery. She leaves three little helpless ones, the youngest being about two months old.

Rev. Mr. Andrews conducted divine service last Sabbath for the first time since his sad bereavement. He took for his text, Job 40th chapter and 4th verse, first clause of the verse, "Behold, I am vile." And from this he delivered a sermon that for clearness of arrangement, breadth of reasoning, deep feeling and earnest and masterly eloquence, could scarcely be excelled. We will not attempt to transcribe or analyze it, as such is simply beyond our reach. We are satisfied that not one of the large congregation who listened to the powerful appeals of the preacher, but left the sanctuary deeply impressed—wiser and better.

Dulness in the Coal Trade.

DURHAM, Aug. 25.—Two large collieries are about to close owing to depression in the coal trade.

Great Loss of Life.

BOMBAY, Aug. 25.—The steamer Ranglee was wrecked yesterday in the Gulf of Aden, and 100 persons were drowned.

A Queer Funeral.

DUBLIN, Aug. 25.—The Nationalists of Cork and Waterford assembled at Knockamore to-day and interred a coffin containing a document representing the Crimes Act.

The Punjaub Frontier.

SIMLA, Aug. 25.—Gen. McGregor has been appointed commandant of the Punjab frontier force. This force favors the formation of a separate military command on the whole Afghan frontier.

France Apologizes.

PARIS, Aug. 25.—The French Cabinet officially apologized to the English Embassy, on Saturday, for the insult to Lord Lyons and the Pain incident. The secretary of Lord Lyons returned the visit yesterday.

Chamberlain Condemned.

LONDON, Aug. 25.—The Attorney-General in a speech last evening denounced Mr. Chamberlain as a Socialist, and warned Moderates to prepare for thievish attacks on the Church and other vested interests.

The Irish Question.

The Standard sums up the Irish question thus:—Home rule means exclusive policy in Ireland to the extent of refusal to receive English products, with Mr. Parnell still at Westminster.

Socialistic Riot.

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 25.—There was a Socialist row here on Saturday. The police dispersed the mob with swords. The trouble was renewed yesterday and the mob stoned the police, who charged, wounding many.

Incendiary Placards.

BERNE, Aug. 25.—The walls of Lausanne have been placarded with bills, signed, "The Swiss Secret Anarchist Committe," urging the burning of the foreign embassies here.

Mobbing General Booth.

General Booth, of the Salvation Army, was mobbed at Hull, last night. An unknown person threw a stick at the General and struck him but he was not hurt. The girl Armstrong, who, it is said, was abducted by Gen. Booth for the purpose of making false evidence, has been restored to her parents.

Churchill's Charges.

LONDON, August 25.—The Marquis of Ripon, late Viceroy of India, at a meeting at Bolton, last evening, answered the charges of Lord Randolph Churchill. He said he was content to appeal from Lord R. Churchill's party rhetoric to the people of India for approval of his policy.

Attack on Hostile Arabs.

SUAKIM, Aug. 25.—Two hundred and forty friendly natives in one of their own steamboats accompanied an English steamer 140 miles north of here on the Red Sea to the village of Shinat, which was attacked and destroyed. The British and allies in battle killed a large number of hostile Arabs, who inhabited Shinat, and captured enough grain and cloth to make a large cargo.

No Frost in Manitoba.

Contradiction of the Speculation Reports from St. Paul.

TORONTO, August 25.—[Special.]—J. M. Egan, General Superintendent of the C.P.R., has sent a despatch fully and flatly contradicting reports which he says are being manufactured in St. Paul and Chicago, to the effect that frost has injured the crops in Manitoba and the Northwest. He says a large part of the crop is harvested, and the quantity and quality surpass anything ever seen before. Harvesting is in full blast.

Carnival of the Cholera.

Fifteen Hundred Deaths in Two Day.

MADRID, Aug. 25.—There were 4,071 new cases of cholera, and 1,433 deaths in Spain yesterday. The total number of deaths from cholera in Spain since the outbreak were 72,340 out of a total of 187,565 cases.

MARSEILLES, Aug. 25.—There were 67 deaths from cholera here yesterday.

TOULON, Aug. 25.—One hundred and thirty-four persons died of cholera here yesterday.

Antwerp Exhibition.

Number of Awards to Come to Canadian Exhibitors.

A special cable despatch to the Globe states that, although the details of the awards to the Canadian exhibits at the Antwerp Exhibition are not published till September, it is understood that it has been decided, subject possibly to final revision, to give the following awards: Three diplomas, honor—highest honor, thirteen gold medals, thirty-one silver, thirty-three bronze, and thirty honorable mentions.

Parnell's Policy.

DUBLIN, Aug. 25.—At a banquet to Mr. Parnell, last evening, thirty-eight Parnellites were present. Loyal toasts were omitted. Mr. Parnell said there was only one the programme, to restore Irish Parliament. When Parliament assembled in Dublin it would develop the Healy clauses of the land act, make tenants owners of their holdings, and secure laborers a share in the land. He sketched his ideas of Dublin Parliament, which, he said, would consist of a single chamber. He hoped the coming national party after the election would be strong enough to restore the independence of Ireland. Mr. Justin McCarthy presided, and an enormous crowd collected and cheered incessantly during the banquet.

HON. MR. MACKENZIE'S HEALTH.

It is with deep regret, which we are sure will be also felt by the country at large, irrespective of political learnings, that we announce that the health of Hon. Alex. Mackenzie is in a most unsatisfactory condition. A despatch states that "paralysis is slowly but surely obtaining the mastery of one side of his body, and his friends have watched with alarm for many months past the outward indications of this disease." So serious is the forecast that the opinion is freely expressed that this high-minded gentlemen and honest politician, par excellence, will not again be able to resume his connection with Parliamentary or political affairs. This sad state of things, his thousands of friends will naturally deeply regret, and we are certain that his political opponents, such is the honorable record which his upright private life, his commanding abilities, and his political purity and patriotism have made, will also sincerely deplore the infirmity that removes from political circles the influence of such an exemplary life as Hon. Mr. Mackenzie has been wont to live.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The excellent article entitled "Mr. Blake and His Assailants," published in yesterday's issue, should have been credited to the Globe

The people will vote on the adoption of the Scott Act in this county on Thursday, September 24th.

Hon. Mr. Chapleau, Secretary of State, who went to France for his health, is in a fair way to recovery and is expected home soon with re-established health.

Mr. Fred. Dore, the chief agent of Canada at the Antwerp exhibition, will shortly visit the Dominion to assist in the arrangement of the various provincial exhibits which will represent Canada at the Colonial exhibition in London next year.

Some time ago the Montreal Star addressed a circular of enquiry to the country newspapers of the Dominion asking their opinion on the justice of executing Riel's sentence Fifty-four replies have been received. Forty-one consider that the sentence of death should be executed, seven question the prisoner's sanity, two question the right of hanging a political offender, three claim prejudice and unfairness in the trial, and one wishes the Government "to deal with the case free from suggestion."

Under the rule of the Government of the Conservative party, Canada's manufactures and industries are going back. In July, 1884, Canada exported to Great Britain goods and products to the value of eight and one-half million dollars. This year the value of our exports during the corresponding month amounted to only six and one-half millions. A decrease of trade amounting to two million dollars on one month's trade alone shows a serious condition of things. The total falling off for the past seven months of the present year in our exports amounts to nearly three million dollars. Yet the N. P. was to confer perennial prosperity.

According to the Dominion Railway statistics, the cost of the Intercolonial Railway was $42,582,231, which has never paid one cent of interest towards its cost, as the following figures show:

	Receipts.	Working Expenses.
1878-9	$1,294,699	$2,010,183
1879-80	1,696,228	1,803,439
1880-1	1,709,308	1,759,851
1881-82	2,073,288	2,089,857
1882-3	2,370 921	2,390,373
1883-4	2,368,647	2,344,579

The apparent trifling balances for the last four years are said to have been caused by charging a number of items of revenue to capital account. Conservative financiers can, it would appear, generally manage, by working up the figures to defer the evil day of showing how matters really stand.

We can expect neither fair play for Canadians nor reciprocity with the United States. Sir John has shown himself determined to have his own way, no matter how much loss the people suffer. He is perfectly indifferent. Though reminded frequently of the coming lapse of the fishery clauses of the Washington Treaty, he neglected this important matter; and when, at the last moment, he took action, it resulted in injury to the Maritime Provinces. The brilliant arrangement was made that the Yankees should have free access to our Maritime fisheries all this year, while Canadian fishermen are excluded from the American markets, except on payment of a good round duty. Americans are allowed to invade Canadian fishing grounds and rob Canadian fishermen, while the latter are not allowed to sell what few fish they may catch after the Yank, without paying exorbitant duties.

Shameful favoritism and extravagance! It is understood that Gen. Middleton has decided that Surgeon-General Bergin, M.P., shall receive the pay of a Major-General. That is about $13 per day. This will entitle the M. P. to about $2,000 for alleged services to date, besides possible commissions, etc., on hospital stores purchased. Mr. Bergin knew what he was about when preferring boodle to glory. He abstained from offering to lead his regiment to the front, but abandoned his Colonelcy and made the Government appoint him Surgeon-General over the heads of every other surgeon in the active militia of Canada. Again, a bonus of $500 has been granted by Mr. Caron to each of his private secretaries. Thus the money goes—$2,000 for a Surgeon-General who never left his place in Parliament; bonuses of $500 each to the departmental flunkies, and $25 worth of scrip to each Volunteer who risked his life in battle or in an ardous march through the snows of the Lake Superior region. How do the lads like the contrast?

Dominion Doings.

Two Montreal saloon keepers have been fined $50 each for selling liquor to Caughnawaga Indians last week.

The inquest on the body of Dr. Macdonald, of Toronto, has been postponed till September 4th, when an analysis of the stomach will be made by Prof. Ellis.

A lad named De Tonancour was playing with a loaded carbine in a yard in Montreal. He fired at a target, and the bullet glancing off lodged in his sister's lung. She may recover.

Celestine Montminy, of Orleans Island, P. Q., lost his barns and crops, which were fired by lightning.

The Central Prison investigation committee finished the taking of evidence at midnight Tuesday night.

Admiral Lacombe is in charge of the French warships Laflore and Le Bouvet, at present in Quebec. The latter is an armor-plated ram.

An Orange Lodge in Montreal recently passed a vote of thanks to the Protestant members of the 65th Battalion who refused to attend the Roman Catholic church parade at Prince Albert.

A committee of Montreal citizens has in hand the drafting of an address of condolence to the family of the late Sir Francis Hincks. A monument to his memory will likely be erected in Montreal.

Constable Beatty, who was recently mobbed by roughs in Griffintown, Montreal, is dying.

The loss by the fire in H. R. Ives & Co's. premises, Montreal, Thursday, is $10,000.

A farmer named Roberts, of St. Laurent, Que., became despondent about a mortgage on his farm, and is believed to have drowned himself in a well.

Several men of "A" Battery who have returned from the Northwest have sold their land script for $35.

A man named Rousseau was run over and fatally injured by a street car in Montreal.

The barn of farmer Summer, of London, Ont., was struck by lightning Friday morning and destroyed with all its contents.

The banquet to Lieut. Col. Stranbenzie in Montreal has been fixed for September 9.

Advice to a Young Woman.

My daughter, when you note that the man who wants to marry you is just too awfully anxious to learn whether you can bake a loaf of bread or wash a shirt with Chinese dexterity, before you close the negotiations, do you just fly around and ascertain if that man is either willing or able to earn enough flour to make a biscuit, and if he has paid for the shirt he wants you to wash. Nine times out of ten, daughter, the man who only wants to marry a housekeeper can be kept more economically in the workhouse than he can in your father's house.—Burdette.

A Timely Interruption.

"Has any one ever proposed to you before?" he asked tenderly, after the important question had been put and satisfactorily answered.

"George Simpson came very near it, only last night," she replied shyly. "He was just on the point of asking me to be his wife when mamma came into the parlor. But I am very glad she did," went on the girl, earnestly. "I don't think I would have been happy with George."

Had Lots of Fun.

Little Jimmy Jones, aged seven years, came running home crying and spitting blood and teeth out of his mouth, while his lips were all black and burned and swollen.

"Oh, mercy! is my boy killed?" shrieked the agonized mother.

A hasty examination revealed the fact that most of her boy was at home, and that his life and health were also in the vicinity.

"Stop your noise!" she commanded; "you are not much hurt. Tell me all about it, and mind that you tell me the truth."

"Me and Tommy Toodles," said the boy between sobs, "was playin' in the stable, when my holler tooth commenced to achin', and Tommy said he could cure it. He put some black powder in my mouth and touched it off with a match."

"Didn't you have any more sense than to let him blow your tooth out with gun-powder?" asked Mrs. Jones, severely.

"Tommy said it wouldn't hurt, and we'd have lots of fun," said Jimmy, brightening up and attempting to laugh.

"It was awful funny, wasn't it, to have your mouth burned and your teeth blown out," said his mother, ironically. "Tommy had all the fun."

"No, he didn't, mamma. I lost all my teeth, I guess; but you orter see Tommy! Two of my teeth is stickin' in his nose, and one of his ears is clean gone!"

You must not expect to catch a big fish by simply dropping your tackle into the water and pulling it up again. You have to offer genuine inducements that will impress the fish as to your good faith—sort of worm yourself into his confidence, as it were.

The Midlanders at Batoche.

(From the Post.)

On to the fight they ran,
Three miles across the plain,
Man charging fellow man—
Noble Midlanders!
"Charge!" was their captain's cry;
They never reasoned why;
They went to do or die—
Noble Midlanders!

"Stand by each other, men,"
Was their captain's word again,
As they charged across the plain
Noble Midlanders!
Nearer Batoche they come;
Not yet their work is done;
They must make rebels run—
Noble Midlanders!

Nor did their courage fail,
As they ran o'er hill and dale,
Over all they must prevail—
Noble Midlanders!
First men on the field were they;
First to clear a "right of way;"
Where the rebels lay that day—
Noble Midlanders!

First to strike decisive blows
Against our fair Dominion's foes
And first to share a comrade's woes—
Noble Midlanders!
First to cry the work is done;
First to find that battle won;
And last to think of coming home—
Noble Midlanders!

First to mourn a brave commander,
And thus by death be torn asunder,
From him who never did surrender—
Noble Midlanders!
Last to violate his name,
Or bring his glory down to shame,
Or sully Colonel Williams' fame—
That Noble Midlander.

And still they are ready, just the same,
To guard our country's sp'endid name,
'Gainst ignominy, loss and shame—
Noble Midlanders!
And when our heads are bow'd and hoary,
We'll not forget to tell the story,
How they fought and won their glory—
Noble Midlanders!

Think of the charge they made;
Think of their cannonade;
Think of the cheers they gave—
Noble Midlanders!
And when our babes are old
Oft shall the tale be told:
How the Midlands brave and bold,
Made the world wonder.

Poor Dog.

"I met with a misfortune last week."

"How was that?"

"A book agent came out to my ranche, and that big dog of mine bit about a pound of flesh out of his right leg."

"That was, indeed, quite a serious affair. The book agent didn't die, did he?"

"No, but the dog did."—Auburnian.

A Hint to the Boys.

I stood in the store the other day when a boy came in and applied for a situation.

"Can you write a good hand?" was asked.

"Yaas."

"Good at figures?"

"Yaas."

"That will do—I don't want you," said the merchant.

"But," I said, when the boy had gone, "I know that lad to be an honest, industrious boy. Why don't you give him a chance?"

"Because he hasn't learned to say 'Yes sir,' and 'No, sir.' If he answers me as he did when applying for a situation how will he answer customers after being here a month?"

What could I say to that? He had fallen into a habit, young as he was, which turned him away from the first situation he had ever applied for.—New London Day.

Never Cross-Examine a Woman.

Mr. Edward B. Gillette, of the Massachusetts bar, tells an amusing bit of advice given him by Mr. Choate. "Let me give you my dying advice," said the great lawyer, "Never cross-examine a woman. It is of no use. They can not disintegrate the story they have once told; they can not eliminate the part that is for you from that which is against you. They can neither combine nor shade nor qualify. They go for the whole thing, and the moment you begin to cross-examine one of them, instead of being bitten by a single rattlesnake you are bitten by a whole barrelful. I never, excepting in a case absolutely desperate, dared to cross-examine a woman."

Three Fish on One Hook.

A correspondent tells the following story of fishing on the St. Lawrence:

"About two years ago," said the guide—"and it makes me laugh every time I think of it—I had a young gentleman from Philadelphia up a-fishin'. He'd never fished in fresh water afore, and to say he was green was a-puttin' it low. Howsoever, he hired me for a week, and at it we went. We had tol'ble luck at bass, but he was wild for a muskalonge, and he says: 'Bill, if I catch one of them fellers you'll find a $10 note for yourself right inside the gill-cover.' Well, he was a bass-fishin' down along Chimbly Island one evenin', and started home with three spoons out, and jest a-gittin' over the pickerel grounds above here, when there came a yank on the off pickerel line that made him howl.

"He had the line wound round his finger. Howsoever, he hooked him and yanked away, stood up and got the pickerel half in, when there came a haul on the line that sent him head over heels, and if it wasn't for the chair he'd a gone overboard sure. 'I've got a sherk, Bill,' says he, a-gittin' his feet. 'It's a fresh water sherk,' says I, and so it was a muskalonge what almost raised the hair on my head. Fust he was out, now in; a-jerkin the boat this way and that, now under, then a-streakin' it down stream, then up, a haulin and tuggin, one minute two feet in the air, and then down deep, makin' that feller's arms go like windmills, and he a-dancin', talkin', and yellin', and so wound up in the line you'd a-thought he was in a gill net. But Lord bless you! he wouldn't let me lend a hand, and, after wrastlin' for fifteen minutes or more, he led him alongside, got the gaff into him, and hauled him aboard, and then the young feller jest set down and looked at him for about ten minutes without sayin' a word. It was a pictur', there ain't no denyin' that; and then he says: 'Bill, I've allus laughed at this 'ere fresh-water fishin', but that takes the cake. I wouldn't a lost that fish for $500.

"Find the ten under the gill-cover? I reckon I did, and he raised it ten. But what I was tryin' to get at," continued the speaker "was that when we came to unhook him there was a reg'lar string. Fust there was the spoon, jest as in this case a half-pound yaller perch that had grabbed it and been towed along without our knowin' it; then a pickerel; he'd grabbed the perch, and as the young man was pullin' the pickerel in the muskalonge had grabbed him—what it might call a chain of events. Three fish on the same hook; beats the record as sure you're born." — Philadelphia Times.

CALLED BACK.

BY HUGH CONWAY.

Chapter XII—Continued.

A sickly look crept over his features as he spoke—a look the meaning of which I could not read.

"He says he is Anthony March, her brother."

"Anthony March!" gasped Ceneri. "There is no such person. What did he want—his object?" he continued feverishly.

"That I should join him in a memorial to the Italian Government, asking for a return of some portion of the fortune you spent."

Ceneri laughed a bitter laugh. "All grows clear," he said. "He betrayed a plot which might have changed a government for the sake of getting me out of the way. Coward! Why not have killed me and only me? Why have made others suffer with me? Anthony March! My God! that man is a villain!"

"You are sure that Macari betrayed you?"

"Sure! yes. I was sure when the man in the cell next to mine rapped it on the wall. He had means of knowing."

"I don't understand you."

"Prisoners can sometimes talk to each other by taps on the wall which divides their cells! The man next me was one of us. Long before he went raving mad from the months of solitary confinement, he rapped out, over and over again, 'Betrayed by Macari.' I believed him. He was too true a man to make the accusation without proof. But until now I could not see the object of the treason."

The easiest part of my task was over. Macari's assumed relationship to Pauline was disposed of. Now, if Ceneri would tell me, I must learn who was the victim of that crime committed years ago, and what was the reason for the foul deed. I must learn that Macari's explanation was an utter falsehood, prompted by malice, or else my journey would have benefited me nothing. Is it any wonder that my lips trembled as I endeavored to approach the subject?

"Now, Dr. Ceneri," I said, "I have a question of weightier import to ask. Had Pauline a lover before I married her?"

He raised his eyebrows. "Surely you have not come here to ask that question—to have a fit of jealousy cured?"

"No," I said; "you will hear my meaning later on. Meanwhile answer me."

"She had a lover, for Macari professed to love her, and swore she should be his wife. But I can most certainly say she never returned his love."

"Nor loved any one else?"

"Not to my knowledge. But your manner, your words are strange. Why do you ask? I may have wronged you, Mr. Vaughan, but save for the one thing, her mind, Pauline was fit to be your wife."

"You did wrong me—you know it. What right had you to let me marry a woman whose senses were disarranged? It was cruel to both."

I felt stern and spoke sternly. Ceneri shifted in his chair uneasily. If I had wished revenge it was here. Gazing on this wretched, ragged, broken-down man, and knowing what awaited him when he left me, would have filled the measure desired by the most vengeful heart.

I wanted no revenge on the man. His manner told me he spoke the truth when he denied that Pauline had ever been in love. As, when last I gazed on her fair face, I knew it would, Macari's black lie had been scouted. Pauline, was innocent as an angel. But I must know who was the man whose death had for awhile deprived her of reason.

Ceneri was glancing at me nervously. Did he guess what I had to ask him?

"Tell me," I said, "the name of the young man murdered by Macari in London, in the presence of Pauline; tell me why he was killed?"

His face grew ashen. He seemed to collapse—to sink back into his chair a helpless heap, without the power of speech or movement, without the power of turning his eyes from my face.

"Tell me," I repeated—"Stay, I will recall the scene to you, and you will know I am well informed. Here is the table; here is Macari, standing over the man he has stabbed; here are you, and behind you is another man with a scar on his cheek. In the back room, at the piano, is Pauline. She is singing, but her song stops as the murdered man falls dead. Do I describe the scene truly?"

I had spoken excitedly. I had used tures and words. Ceneri's ears had nk in every syllable; his eyes had fol- ed every gesture. As I pointed to the supposed position of Pauline, he had looked there with a quick, startled glance, as if expecting to see her enter the door. He made no attempt to deny the accuracy of my representation.

I waited for him to recover. He was looking ghastly. His breath came in spasmodic gasps. For a moment I feared he was about to die then and there. I poured out a glass of wine; he took it in his trembling hand and gulped it down.

"Tell me his name?" I repeated. "Tell me what he had to do with Pauline?"

Then he found his voice. "Why do you come here to ask me? Pauline could have told you. She must be well, or you could not have learned this."

"She has told me nothing."

"You are wrong. She must have told you. No one else saw the crime—the murder; for a murder it was."

"There was another present beside the actors I have named."

Ceneri started and looked at me.

"Yes, there was another there by an accident. A man who could hear but not see. A man whose life I pleaded for as for my own."

"I thank you for having saved it."

"You thank me. Why should you thank me?"

"If you"

RELIANCE ROXBURY'S PROTEGE.

How Dot and her Mother Found a Home.

"I do not believe her mother would part with her," said Mr. Knox.

Miss Roxbury was silent for a few moments, and looked out on the lawn where Dot was swinging in a hammock with the doll and cat.

"It will be a dull house without the child," she said, "but I will bring her to the station."

* * * * * *

When the morning of Dot's departure came, Miss Roxbury arrayed herself in her second best black silk, put a few articles in a satchel, filled a small basket with fresh eggs, new biscuits, a pat of butter and a bottle of currant wine, and said to Hannah,—

"I may be gone two or three days. Have the east chamber thoroughly aired and dusted before I get back, tell Hiram to take a peck of peas down to Mrs. Alder, don't forget to see if those canned strawberries have worked or not, and be sure and keep the front door bolted, and put that last brood of chickens in the other coop, and keep a newspaper over the geranium slips in the afternoon."

"Yes, ma'am."

"And Hannah, be very careful to keep out the flies, and tell Hiram to fix the well curb.

[illegible]

Dot was bathed in tears as she mounted to her place in the rockaway.

"Isn't I coming back?" she said.

"I hope so, dear," replied Miss Roxbury, who appeared preoccupied and anxious and scarcely heard Dot's chatter on the way to the station.

"Why, Miss Roxbury," said Mr. Alder as he assisted her to the platform, "you are a veritable fairy godmother. This rosy, dainty maiden cannot be the same bit of humanity that I held in my arm a fortnight ago. You will miss her, will you not?"

"I shall go with her to New York, any way," said Miss Roxbury, "and I don't mean to come back alone, either. Mr. Alder, I hope God will forgive me for the empty house I have had all these long years."

"An empty house means a lonely heart," he replied. "I'm glad you're going with the child."

That afternoon Miss Roxbury and Dot, attended by Mr. Knox, wended their way through a dark alley in one of the most squalid districts of New York City, and climbed flight after flight of rickety stairs in a rear tenement. The heat, the filth, the scenes of misery were indescribable. Miss Roxbury felt as if she were on the confines of the bottomless pit.

Dot darted down a long passage and disappeared in a room beyond. The friends followed and beheld her clasped tightly in the arms of a wan figure that lay on the couch. The woman had fainted.

"Mamma, mamma, look at me!" pleaded Dot, beginning to cry.

There was no water in the room, and Mr. Knox took a cracked pitcher from the shelf and went with Dot in search of some. Miss Roxbury knelt beside the woman, who was only about thirty years of age and had been very attractive as a young girl. There was a gleam of gold on her left hand. Her hair was sunny like Dot's and her features delicately shaped. The letter that Miss Roxbury had written lay crumpled and tear-stained on the pillow.

While Miss Roxbury gazed the woman opened her eyes. They were beautiful eyes, but sad with want and a struggle against despair. She tried to sit up and moaned,—

"My baby—please give me my baby."

Just then Dot returned and carried the pitcher of water to her mother, who drank long and eagerly; then holding out her arms to Dot, said feebly to Miss Roxbury,—

"Oh, madam, will you take care of my little girl? I think I'm going to die."

"You're not going to die—not a bit of it," said Miss Roxbury, pouring out some wine into a teacup, "but I'll take care of you both. There, drink this, and you'll feel better right away. How long since you've had anything to eat?"

"Day before yesterday," was the faint reply. "I had to stop work four days ago."

"Now, Mr. Knox," said Miss Roxbury, slipping her purse into his hand, "just step out to the nearest grocery and order some kindling wood and tea and sugar. I'll poach a nice, fresh egg for this poor soul, and then we'll see about getting her out of this place."

The woman's face brightened, but she said,—

"I'm giving you much trouble."

"Trouble!" said Miss Roxbury. "I'm all alone in the world, and I've a house with twenty-four rooms in it, and plenty to do with, and what I've been thinking of all these years I can't say. I've been a crusty, cold, disagreeable old fossil, Mrs. Winthrop, and when I come down here and find folks starving to death and crowded like cattle, I wonder the good Lord's had any mercy on me. Don't you worry another mite. Here's the fire stuff already."

Miss Roxbury rolled up her sleeves, put an apron over her silk skirt, and while Mr. Knox built a fire and brought water to heat, she bathed Mrs. Winthrop's face and hands, and brushed out her lovely hair.

"Thank God! why, I'm better already," said Mrs. Winthrop, with a rare smile.

"Of course you are, child," said Miss Roxbury. "We'll see what good food and mountain air will do for you."

A few days later found an occupant in the great east chamber of the Roxbury house.

Mrs. Winthrop sat in an easy chair before the open window inhaling the fragrance of the blossoming honeysuckle that nodded to her through the casement. The morning sunlight fell across her bright hair and peaceful face. Dot hung over her shoulder and threw daisies in her lap.

Down by the garden fence stood Miss Roxbury, talking with her neighbor, Mrs. Lane. Mrs. Winthrop smiled from her window, and there came an answering smile from the depths of the purple calico sunbonnet.

"So you're really going to keep them?" said Mrs. Lane.

"Yes, I've adopted them both," replied Miss Roxbury, with a Te Deum in her voice, "and I've sent for half a dozen little girls to stay until cold weather comes."

"Well, it does beat all," said Mrs. Lane, wiping her eyes on the corner of her checked gingham apron. "I s'pose I needn't ask you now, Reliance, what you think of the Fresh-Air Fund?"

"What do I think of it?" said Miss Roxbury, gravely; "I believe it's been the means of saving my soul. I should have gone into the next world holding my head pretty high, and considering myself better than most folks, and the Judge would have said, 'Reliance Roxbury, I gave you a big house and a long bank account; what have you done with them?' Then how my empty rooms and Grandfather Roxbury's gold pieces would have stood up against me! And He would have said, 'Ye did it not unto Me. Depart from me,' and what answer could I have made Him? It is very true," she continued, as Dot came flitting down the path like a fairy, "of such is the Kingdom of Heaven."

Don't be Duped.

Smokers will further their own interest by insisting upon having the "Cable", or "El Padre" brands of cigars which have stood the [illegible] for a quarter of a century, and not allow greedy and unscrupulous dealers to persuade them to take other brands which pays them a larger profit, the consumer being a loser thereby. 13d-25w

The Daily Examiner.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 26, 1885.

Use the Telephone.

Friends and patrons of the EVENING EXAMINER are requested to use the telephone in communicating items of news which may come under their notice. We should be glad to avail ourselves of any information transmitted in that way before 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

A Great Treat.

Do not miss the opportunity of hearing Miss Churchill, the great elocutionist, and Miss Strong, Canada's finest singer, at Bradburn's Opera House, on Tuesday evening, Sept. 1st. Plan of Hall at Hartley's music store.

Prob's Weather Promises.

The following forecast of the weather for this district for the 24 hours from 1 a. m. to-day, is received from the Toronto Meterological office :—Winds mostly north ; fine weather ; stationary or slightly higher temperature.

Organ Recital.

The attention of the public is directed to the fact that Prof. J. S. Parker, organist and choirmaster of St. Paul's Presbyterian Church, will give an organ recital in that church on Thursday evening, August 27th. A good programme has been prepared, in whose rendition Prof. Parker will be assisted by the choir.

Toronto.

All tickets used on the great all-rail excursion to the wonderfull Falls of Niagara, which takes place on Thursday next, Aug. 27th, are good to stop off at Toronto, and are valid for three days. If you don't want to see the wonders of Niagara, visit our Provincial Capital.

Furs.

As orders of new furs are coming in already I wish to remind my customers and the public in general not to delay the opportunity to bring their furs in early for repairing, as the fur business of a manufacturer differs so very materially from any other trade, the months of November and December are only devoted for making up ordered goods. W. LECH.

Painful Accident.

On Monday evening Mr. Richard Coe met with an unfortunate accident which will lay him on the shelf for some time. He is engaged in keeping the books at Mr. J. Mervin's butcher shop, Hunter street. Being lame of one leg he uses a crutch and a cane to assist his locomotion. As he was crossing the floor, which is rendered slippery from the fat of the meats, his crutch slipped and he fell with great force on his lame leg which became doubled under him and the bone below the knee was broken. Under proper surgical treatment he is getting on as well as could be expected.

The Lacrosse Pic-Nic.

The lacrosse pic-nic yesterday, although the weather at starting did not look favorable, was a thorough success. About 250 ladies and gentlemen embarked on the steamer Golden-Eye at eight o'clock in the morning and started for a trip to Campbelltown. The City Band and orchestra accompanied the party, who amused themselves on the way down by tripping the light fantastic, the coolness of the morning making the exercise most agreeable. By the time the party reached their destination the sun had burst out, dispelling the cool air of the early morning, and a most delightful day was spent. Canoeing, fishing and rowing were indulged in by some, the energetically inclined played baseball and other games, while those who enjoy quieter amusement passed the time by strolling in the groves, gathering flowers and ferns, or exchanging sweet banter and nonsense with the fair sex, who had showed their appreciation of Canada's national game by turning out in large numbers, indeed, there were far more ladies than gentlemen in the party. When the shades of evening began to gather the party re-embarked on the Golden Eye, and after a pleasant trip up the river, during which dancing was again entered into with great zest, they arrived in town shortly after ten o'clock. The arrangements were exellently made, and the committee are to be congratulated on the successful manner in which they were carried out.

Lacrosse.

BRAMPTONS, BRAMPTON, V. YOUNG CANADIANS, RICHMOND HILL.

The Brampton Excelsiors and the Young Canadians of Richmond Hill played a game of lacrosse yesterday afternoon on the Rosedale lacrosse grounds, Toronto. There seems to have been keen rivalry between the two clubs, both of which were accompanied to Toronto by large numbers of admirers, who were willing to stake large amounts of lucre on the superiority of their own team, and quite an amount in small sums was wagered on the event, the betting, although at first slightly in favor of the Brampton men, being even at the time the first game was started. Brampton won the first game, Tom Peaker, who distinguished himself by winning two of the three goals in the recent match with the Peterboroughs, putting the rubber through in 4 minutes. The Young Canadians got their work in during the second and third games, which they won in one and six minutes. The Excelsiors appear to have got rattled in the fourth game, which was also won by the Young [illegible]. The play on both sides was good.

Baseball.

METROPOLITANS, TORONTO, VS, LINDSAYS.

The Metropolitans of Toronto met and defeated the home team at Lindsay yesterday by a score of 8 to 3. The people of Lindsay backed their team heavily, to their cost, as the Mets walked away from them. The Lindsays could not get on to Sheppard's puzzling delivery, and Reid's activity behind the bat completely paralyzed them. In the field the Metropolitans acquitted themselves admirably, and well sustained the reputation of the club, but one error being scored against them. The umpiring of Denison was very unsatisfactory, his decision being strongly in favor of the Lindsays. Score by innings :—

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
Metropolitans	3	0	0	1	1	0	0	0	3	—8
Lindsays	1	0	0	1	0	0	0	1	0	—3

THE COBOURG-PETERBOROUGH MATCH.

Arrangements are being made to run an excursion from Cobourg to Peterborough on Friday, when the baseball match takes place here. The excursion will be run per C., P. & M. R. and Calcutt's steamers.

THE CARRIAGE-SMITHS' GAME.

The match game of baseball between nines representing respectively the blacksmith department of the carriage establishments of Messrs. Lockhart & Chowen and Fitzgerald & Stanger has been fixed for Tuesday next on the Riverside Park diamond.

STRIKES.

The printers had a good practice on the Riverside Park last evening. Both the typographical teams were out in full force.

Each of the blacksmith nines is blowing the bellows pretty strong, but both can't win. They rate even in the pools.

TELLERS AND TELLER-GRAPHERS.

To-morrow afternoon the bankers and telegraph operaters will meet on the diamond in the grounds of the P. A. A., Ashburnham. The telegraphers are many of them no strangers to the game and the name of T. O'Neil among them gives warning that the B. C.'s will have to be hurried in their progress between the bases. On the other hand the bankers are noted for their hard hitting, and may be expected to give the lightning jerkers plenty of work to do in the field. That an interesting game will result is a certainty. The following are the nines :

Bankers,	Telegraphers.
R. M. Hamilton,	W. H. Dayman,
A. E. Ames,	T. O'Neil,
C. McGill,	J. Henderson,
A. St. A. Smith,	T. Spencer,
C. H. Geale,	W. Casey,
P. E. S. Cooper,	D. M. Sim,
E. Fortte,	E. Wood,
W. Gray,	T. B. Tate,
G. F. Ordo,	Wm. A. Dixon.

Garden Party.

A garden party will be given this evening in the grounds of Mr. Geo. Dunsford, Water street, next south of the Bank of Montreal. Refreshments will be served. Under the auspices of the ladies of St. John's, south ward Sunday School.

Collegiate Institute.

Classes will be resumed in the Peterboro' Collegiate Institute on Monday morning, August 31st. A full staff of first-rate teachers, and excellent equipment, present good facilities for students securing instruction in the higher branches of education.

Thoroughly Equipped for Business.

The new pottery of Mr. Richard Kingdon, whose progress has been noted from time to time in the EXAMINER, is now in full running operation, and is turning out fine samples of double-glazed flint, stone-enamelled and Rockingham ware. The energy and enterprise of Mr. Kingdon deserve the success they promise to bring.

Change of Date.

The date of the annual exhibition of the Smith, Ennismore and Lakefield Agricultural Society was originally fixed for Tuesday and Wednesday, Oct. 6th and 7th. Owing, however, to those days conflicting with the exhibition days of two other societies—the date of the Smith, Ennismore and Lakefield Society's exhibition has been changed to Thursday and Friday, Oct. 8th and 9th. Those interested will please note the change.

Personal.

Mr. Datcher, American Consul at Port Hope, accompanied by his son, was in town this morning.

Messrs. Alex. Elliott, A. McNeil, R. H. Fortye, and G. Rubidge left town for the back lakes this morning. They intend to spend a few days camping and fishing, and will probably be joined to-morrow by others.

Smokers will further their own interest by insisting upon having the "Cable," or "El Padre" brands of cigars which have stood the test for a quarter of a century, and yet allow greedy and unscrupulous dealers to persuade them to take other brands which pays them a larger profit, the consumer being a loser thereby. 13d-25w

What We may Expect.

A kid glove game of baseball at the Association grounds to-morrow.

And the umpire to have a soft snap.

Professor Parker's organ recital to be followed by one by C. C. Hampshire.

And both to be well attended.

People to hunt out their overcoats.

The garden party on Mr. Dunsford's grounds this evening to be well attended.

What We Would Like to See.

A crowd accompanying the Cobourg ball players on Friday.

A good audience at Professor Parker's organ recital.

The thermometer on a climbing expedition.

A revival—in business.

The Peterboroughs to do up the Cobourgs on Friday.

A prettier little church than St. Andrew's gives promise of being.

What they are Saying.

We are going to Professor Parker's organ recital.—Lovers of music.

And I'll be there too.—C. C. Hampshire.

[illegible] The St. Paul lacrosse players.

We see nothing wrong with the boys.—The Fire, Water and Light Committee.

What's the matter with our industry, that we can't have exemption.—The carriage builders.

What did you think of my procession.—Ed. Brown.

Peterborough people are talking of forming an Eastern league. In towns like Peterborough, Lindsay, Brockville and Kingston, there is not sufficient popul tion to support a lengthened series of games.—The Toronto World.

Toronto has material enough to sustain a lengthened series of threshings, anyway—Secretary Choate.

A Crowd Wanted.

Admirers of base ball, bankers and telegraphers, will remember that to-morrow afternoon the much talked of "ball game" between those gentlemen, takes place at the P. A. A. A. grounds in Ashburnham, and that a large attendance of spectators is needed to stimulate them to their best efforts. Play will be commenced at 3.30. Admission 15 cts.

The Russians at the Rink.

The Russian Athletes had a large audience at the rink last evening, Ed. Brown's torchlight procession being quite a card in getting a crowd together. Their marvellous balancing and splendid performance on the bar were much admired, while the antics of the clown Fredericks raised roars of laughter and applause. To-night will be the last appearance of the famous trio, and those who have not yet seen them should not miss the opportunity. Admission 15c.

Baillieboro' Union Show.

The Union Fall Show, will be held at Baillieboro' on the 6th and 7th of October. It is composed of the townships of Hope, Cavan, Hamilton and North and South Monaghan. One dollar paid to the Secretary, Mr. Alfred A. Dawson, Baillieboro', on or before the 15th of September, constitutes a member. After that date $2 will be required. All residents of the above townships are invited to join. A large and varied list of prizes is offered.—Messenger.

Smokers!

Beware of cigars artificially flavored for the purpose of hiding the poor quality of tobacco used in flavored cigars. Insist upon having the old reliable brands—"CABLE" and "EL PADRE." 13d-25w-1y

Luxurious Locomotion.

The Worcester Car Company's excursion car, J. W. Pratt, containing the slumbering members of the St. Paul, U. S. champion lacrosse team, came in on the Montreal express this morning, and was switched off on to a side track near the O. & Q. station. When visited by a representative of the EXAMINER about ten o'clock, the boys were just at breakfast, but the reporter was, nevertheless, cordially welcomed. The lines of the U. S. champions seem to have fallen in pleasant places, for the car in which they travel is a model of comfort and convenience, indeed its occupants could not be better provided for in any hotel in the country. One half of the car is divided into sleeping berths, while the other, separated by a partition is the sitting and lining room. They are accompanied by a first-class cook and attendants, whose quarters are in the rear of the car, where in spite of the limited space they manage to turn out a bill of fare that would be a credit to any hotel in the country. The St. Pauls have not played anywhere since they left Montreal, as arrangements with the Brockville and Ottawa clubs could not be carried out.

PANTS.

How often does it happen that the general comfort and happiness of man depends on a good fitting pair of pants. Nothing will ruffle a man's temper more than to find when he tries on his latest new pair of pants that they are either too long or too short ; that they pinch him so bad in one place that he dare not stoop, and are so larke and bazzy around the waist and knees that he is afraid he might be taken for the departed "Smith."

Furs.

As orders of new furs are coming in already I wish to remind my customers and the public in general not to delay the opportunity to bring their furs in early for repairing, as the fur business of a manufacturer differs so very materially from any other trade, the months of November and December are only devoted for making up ordered goods. A Topic for Teachers.

Rev. John McEwan, Secretary of the Provincial Sunday School Association, will address teachers and friends of Sunday School work on Friday evening, in St. Paul's Presbyterian S. S. room. Mr. McEwan is widely known as a master of method in Sunday School work, and his address cannot fail to be interesting and instructive to those engaged in it. The chair will be taken at 8 o'clock.

Frost.

There was a heavy frost last night, and the result will be, probably, considerable injury to late oats, and a premature ripening of tardy potatoes. Tomatoes will be injuriously affected, but this will not matter so much, as the tomato crop was pretty thoroughly destroyed by the operations of an insect pest, which attacked the bud end of the forming fruit, which speedily decayed, and came to naught.

A Successful Garden Party.

The ladies of St. John's, south ward, Sunday School are to be congratulated upon the great success of the garden party held last evening in the grounds of Mr. Geo. Dunsford. Though the chilly weather was unfavorable to the enjoyment of an out-door gathering, a large number assembled in the beautiful grounds, which were well arranged, with seating, etc. The trees surrounding them were starred at frequent intervals with colored lights, and the thick growth pretty thoroughly protected the visitors for the chilling winds that came out of the north. Tables, presided over by young ladies, were disposed in different parts of the grounds, and flowers and refreshments, including most acceptable hot tea and coffee were in liberal demand, and equally liberal supply. Mr. and Mrs. Dunsford, who had volunteered the use of the gardens, were exceedingly kind, and opened their house throughout to the guests of the evening. The cool air made the shelter of the parlours and drawing rooms exceedingly welcome, and the latter part of the evening was very pleasantly spent in social enjoyment, music, etc., the company separating at ten o'clock. In spite of the unseasonable coolness of the evening, all who attended the garden party were rewarded with a delightful two-hours' enjoyment, while the chief result, the financial one, was gratifying beyond anticipation. Over $35 was realised, as the nucleus of a fund for the erection of a chapel and school room in the South Ward. With the object of further adding to this fund a sale of fancy and useful articles will be held in the latter part of September. It is hoped that the friends and well-wishers of St. John's will heartily co-operate in the work of securing the erection of these buildings, of which the want has long been experienced.

The "Ten Cent" Store has removed one block south, opposite Alexander's Dry Goods store.

Smallpox and Vaccination!

To the Editor of the DAILY EXAMINER:

SIR,—Permit me through your paper to call the attention of the public to the necessity for a more thorough system of vaccination than at present exists. One has only to make limited enquiries to ascertain the looseness with which this important preventive measure has been carried out. It is no uncommon thing in Peterborough or Ashburnham to find whole families, of which not a single member has been vaccinated, while the number of old unprotected and unsuccessful cases is very large. Thus, if smallpox found its way to this town it would light upon a congenial soil, and the probability of its spreading would be great. In Montreal the poison may lurk in unsuspected places long after the disease is under control. Cases have been known where it has lain concealed in the wall of a room even after whitewashing and disinfection, and been developed years after by the plaster falling off. In these days of travel and interchange of commodities, no one can tell how or where an epidemic may break out. Smallpox being the result of a specific germ, is not altogether dependent upon the sanitary condition of a place. Vaccination is the only preventive, but to be effectual, it must be thorough. Adult vaccination is also advisable. To say nothing of running out, the virus used years ago, was often weakened by passing through several constitutions, each remove decreasing the protective power. The occurrence of smallpox after vaccination is thus accounted for. At present, animal virus is principally used, which not only gives protection, but avoids the dangers of human taint.

Yours,
J. CLARKE,
Medical Health Officer.

North Monaghan.

The local Scott Act committee and friends of the measure in North Monaghan are urgently requested to attend a special convention to perfect the organization of the township, which will be held at the Scott Act headquarters, Business College block, Hunter street, Peterborough, on Saturday afternoon, Aug. 29th, at 2 o'clock.

Norwood.

The shooting gallery lately established here by Mr. Henderson, of Cobourg, is "booming." Prizes are offered for competition weekly, and some of the "boys" are becoming expert marksmen. Three "bulls-eyes" and an "inner" out of four shots is considered only ordinary shooting.

The partnership heretofore existing between Messrs. H. Spence and S. Girven, proprietors of the Norwood cheese factory, has been dissolved. Mr. Spence will conduct the business in future. This factory is one of the best in the county of Peterborough, and averages from 24 to 28 cheese per day.—Register.

Cobourg.

Mr. H. Hough, who has formed a connection with the Grip Printing and Publishing Co., of Toronto, as manager of the publishing department, will begin his duties on Sept. 1st. Mr. Hough was the founder and for 21 years editor and publisher of that excellent journal, the Cobourg World, and by voice and pen rendered faithful service to the Liberal party in West Northumberland. In Mr. Hough Toronto gains a good citizen.

Grand Trunk Manager.

The London correspondent to the Montreal Herald mentions as a rumor that John Bell, Esq., Q. C., of Belleville, is likely to succeed Mr. Jos. Hickson as General Manager of the Grand Trunk Railway. Mr. Bell is at present the well-known solicitor of the company.

Indian Test for a Mad Dog.

An amusing and at the same time instructive commentary on the new local self-government policy in India is afforded by the following resolution, recently issued by a municipal committee in the northwest provinces. The subject is the destruction of mad dogs. "It is no doubt impossible to ascertain the degree of madness of a dog killed, and the only possible way of determining the question is that whenever the sweepers notice any dog of serial madness, such as has begun to bite and assault persons, they should report it to the munrarim, who will issue proper orders for killing the dog; and after it has been examined by the native doctor, the person who will kill it shall be rewarded annas eight for each of such dogs. The symptoms of usual madness in a dog are—first, attacks on people; second, not recognizing his master; third senselessness in general. When these symptoms be proved to have been truly shown by a dog, such a dog will be taken as mad and unscupulously killed on the spot, and the person entitled will be awarded annas four for each of such dogs." This almost rivals Mr. Grant Duffy's story of the country station-master who telegraphed up to headquarters: "Tiger jumping about platform. Please telegraph orders."—St. James's Gazette.

An old tract says: "The jury of twelve was adopted because the prophets were twelve, the apostles numbered twelve, there were twelve Jewish Judges, twelve pillars of the temple, twelve patriarchs, twelve tribes of Israel, twelve stones in Aaron's breastplate, twelve gates of Jerusalem, twelve months in the year and twelve signs in the zodiac. When juries were first established, the Judge took the jurors about with him in a cart until they agreed. If they didn't agree, they were fined and imprisoned."

There is a diversity of opinion as to whether young George Gould will keep the Gould possessions together or not. Thus far he has not fulfilled all the fond desires of his distinguished parent. He has not much of a head for finance or a surplus of aptitude for speculation. To be a good speculator requires much sagacity. He enjoys the theaters very much, and likes to slip in behind the scenes among the pretty chorus of ballet girls, and his head aches quite frequently next day during business hours. Nevertheless, Mr. Gould is making every effort to make a business man of him, and he ought to succeed.

The Cholera.

MADRID, Aug. 26.—There were 4,267 new cases of cholera and 1,547 deaths in Spain yesterday.

Parnell to be Banquetted.

The Lord Mayor of Dublin will give a banquet at the Mansion House next Tuesday to Mr. Parnell and his colleagues in the House of Commons.

Maiming Dumb Animals.

TORONTO, Aug. 26.—Last night a policeman found three cows on River street wandering about with their entrails protruding from wounds six to eight inches in length, the work having evidently been done to spite the owner, a dairyman named Kane.

Germany Objects to Arbitration.

LONDON, Aug. 26.—The German Government declines to either propose or support arbitration of the differences between it and Spain concerning the Caroline Islands.

The Funeral of Admiral Courbet.

PARIS, Aug. 26.—The remains of Admiral Courbet were landed at Hyeres to-day. Mass had previously been celebrated on board the man-of-war "Bayard." The casket was covered with wreaths, and salvos of artillery were fired during the disembarkation of the body. The weather was brilliant and the scene was very impressive.

Parnell's Demand.

LONDON, Aug. 26.—Mr. Parnell's Dublin speech of yesterday has thoroughly aroused the Conservative press. The Times says no prudent politician can underrate the importance of the action taken by the Nationalists at their conference in Dublin. Mr. Parnell's programme May meet with a fate similar to that which befell O'Connell at a time when the Irish were as confident as they are now. Mr. Parnell demands a repeal of the Union. So the Irish question is no longer a question of self-government. This might be acceded to by England, which will never listen to the plan for separation of Ireland.

Russia's Resources.

Speaking of Russia's resources a financial authority recently said:—When it comes to the matter of money England is better able than Russia to go to war, which is the most expensive of all amusements. In its trifling difficulties in the years 1876-80 Russia's war outlay was $537,696,325, every dollar of which she owes to-day. And a great deal more, for on January 1st, 1884, the entire public debt of Russia, internal and foreign, was $2,890,000,000, besides a special railway debt of $750,000,000. This last enormous sum has been borrowed at different times since 1880 to construct railways throughout the Empire. Very few of these roads—some of which extend enormous distances over sparsely settled country—cover their annual running expenses. The revenue of Russia, the bulk of which is derived by indirect taxation, viz., customs and exercise duties, and the rest from direct taxes or imposts on peasants, land taxes and house taxes in cities, is largely devoted to paying interest from 4 to 6 per cent. on the public debt. This interest, with army and navy expenditures, absorbs two-thirds of the entire revenue, and from the beginning of this century the finances of the Empire have shown large annual deficits.

Canon Farrar.

Archdeacon Farrar, the eminent English divine, will arrive in Quebec on or about Sept. 11th. From this he goes to Montreal, Niagara and Chicago. Returning eastward, he will visit Washington, Baltimore and Philadelphia, at the latter place delivering lectures in the course known as the Griswold Lectures. He will be in New York on Saturday, October 17, and will go to Riverdale-on-Hudson, the guest of the Rev. George D. Wildes, D. D. On Oct. 20, Archdeacon Farrar will be one of the speakers in the Church Congress on the topic "The Christian Doctrine of the Atonement." Should he remain till the close of the session on Friday, Oct. 23, he will then return to New York the guest of Cyrus W. Field, until the 30th, when he goes to Boston by invitation of Rev. Dr. Brooks. The hope is expressed that the venerable divine will be made the recipient of some public testmonial while in New York, as a mark of public respect notably for his recent eloquent utterance on the occasion of the Grant memorial service.

Storms in the States.

Terrible Destruction Wrought by Cyclones and Waterspouts.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Aug. 26.—Charleston was struck by a cyclone yesterday morning. One-fourth of the houses in the city were unroofed. Parts of the spires of two churches were blown down, and another spire demolished. Wharves and warehouses were badly damaged, four vessels were wrecked, telegraph wires are down, and no cars are running. The loss is estimated at $1,000,000.

SULLIVAN ISLAND, S. C., Aug. 26.—The hurricane Monday night and yesterday morning was terrific and destructive. A number of houses on Sullivan Island were blown away.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Aug. 26.—A severe rain storm passed over this city and vicinity Monday afternoon. At the mouth of John's River the gale was terrific. The Atlantic House was blown from its foundations, and Mrs. Dexter Hunt, a guest, had her leg broken by a falling porch. Several vessels were sunk, and wharves, etc., badly damaged.

FREDERICK, Md., Aug. 26.—For the first time this summer a heavy storm swept over Frederick county yesterday. The Catoctin river, running through the Middletown valley, overflowed its banks and carried away everything that offered obstruction. Barns, bridges, and dwellings were demolished; several bridges have twice been swept away within the past three months, and much loss falls on poor farmers. Considerable damage was done to growing corn.

PITTSBURG, Pa., Aug. 26.—A freshet in Evergreen, Pa., last night, caused by a cloud-burst, flooded twenty-two houses, washed away three railroad and township bridges and drowned a large lot of live stock. The damage will reach many thousand dollars. No lives were lost.

INSULTING INDIFFERENCE.

"Plans for deepening the Welland canal from 22 to 14 feet are being drawn and it is probable that work my be commenced before the season for navigation closes. The canal is the great connecting point between the lakes and the west, and puts a healthy check on the exactions of railway corporations." We are not aware that the deepening of this great water way is in any manner a more urgent matter than the construction of the Trent Valley Canal. The opening of the latter would give a directer route to the seaboard for the grain of the Northwest by many miles than the Welland Canal. It is, besides, a much safer route. The dangerous stretch of hundreds of miles over the length of the shallow and stormy Lake Erie is avoided. The Trent Valley route is of as much national importance as the Welland Canal, and of infinitely more importance to this district. And the people of this district have been specifically promised a speedy construction of this great waterway. But the scheme has been made the tool of party politicians. On the strength of it the Government has secured the support of a dozen representatives from this district. Yet nothing of any importance has been done to indicate the honest intention of the Government's pushing the work. Two seasons ago a paltry sum was voted for a tinkering job on the internal portion of the line, where the work done can have little beneficial effect, and that only of local importance. Other supporters of the Government, especially in Quebec, can wring from them almost any amount of public improvements in the interest of their constituents; but the representatives of this district seem to be perfectly indifferent to the interests, not to say rights, of the people they represent. Last session they sat dumb in the House while the Government submitted, and the House voted, half a million dollars for deepening the Welland Canal. Not a voice was raised in favor of a grant towards the completion of the Trent Valley Canal. The Government is to blame primarily, of course, for this state of things. The people's representatives in this district must, however, shoulder a large share of the blame. If they would insist on their rights manfully—if they would for once place the good of the district before the demands of the party, justice would be done. But so long as they choose to be made the media of a snub direct to this district, so long will the Government of the day play fast and loose with the great scheme of Trent Valley navigation.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The Provincial nominations for La Verandyre, in the Manitoba Legislature, took place Tuesday. Mr. Prudhomme, Ministerial, and Mr. Holmes, Opposition, were nominated.

Mr. Schrieber will go out to British Columbia to visit the Onderdonk section, as soon as he gets finished inspecting the Intercolonial Railway.

The Mohawk Indians have voted Sir John A. Macdonald a birch bark canoe. Do they think, asks the Ottawa Free Press, he will need to paddle his own canoe after the result of the next general elections is known?

The Department of Railways and Canals have sent out two surveying parties in connection with the Short Line Railway through the state of Maine. One party is in charge of Mr. E. Foss, C. E., for location purposes, and the other under the direction of Mr. Middleton, who does preliminary work. The party under Mr. Donkin is at similar work in Cape Breton.

Mr. Chapleau, Secretary of State and his constituents do not appear to be in accord on the question as to what should be done with Riel. The Secretary of State published a letter some time ago in which he declared that Riel was entitled to no sympathy or consideration, but the County Council of Terrebonne, in Mr. Chapleau's constituency, called a special meeting last Tuesday, and voted $200 in aid of the rebel chief.

It is fortunate for the Northwest farmers that no harm was done by the recent frost in the territories. Prices of produce will be low enough as it is. At Portage la Prairie wheat sells for 48c. and 50c. a bushel; oats for 25c., because of a temporary scarcity; butter at 10c. per pound; and eggs 15c. per dozen. The hog market is glutted, and prices are not expected to be remunerative until the winter demand sets in.

The Result in East Durham.

The Guide thus discourses concerning the contest:—"East Durham has repeated its approval of the policy of the Dominion Government. How that expression was secured is only too well known to the Conservative party, and to almost every observing elector in the riding. At no election that has taken place within twenty years in Canada was such open and flagrant bribery practised as was witnessed in this county Saturday, Sunday and election day. Preparations commenced with the arrival of Macintosh, Boultbee and Pringle in the beginning of the week immediately after nomination day. The disposal of funds was given, among others, to parties whom the Guide specially names, in Millbrook, Hope and Port Hope. Various sums were given to these gentlemen named, of from four to six hundred dollars each. The sum of two thousand dollars alone was placed in the hands of Port Hope Tories to manipulate the purchaseable element in this town. It is no wonder in the face of such a lavish expenditure that the riding was carried and a Conservative majority secured in Port Hope for the first time in a political contest. Although the verdict was secured in that way we are disposed to accept the decision, leaving the result to bring about its own cure. Sir John's Government must indeed be in desperate straits to need such unheard of corruption in East Durham, a supposed impregnable Tory stronghold. The Liberals, led by Mr. Preston, made a gallant fight. The contest will long be remembered in this county. The public meetings held in the interest of Mr. Preston were addressed by many of the leaders of the Reform party, and that the exposition of public affairs by them will be seriously considered in the future cannot be questioned. The Reformers were wise in entering upon the contest, and they can certainly wait for the disapproval that is certain to come, even from East Durham, of the policy of the Dominion Government.

Whither are We Drifting?

Thus petinently queries the Montreal Times, and proceeds to remark, that in 1879 Sir John's Government gave us a tariff which was intended to close our business relations with Great Britain and the United States. We know what the result of their policy has been. It has simply dragged out of the people's pockets millions, which have been needlessly squandered by a corrupt Government.

Our commerce has been shattered by the action of the Ottawa Cabinet, backed by a slavish Parliament, which has extracted from $60,000,000 to $70,000,000 more of the people's money in the past seven years, compared with the previous, and without anything to show for its expenditure. On entering Confederation we had a debt of $78,000,000. Now we have $275,000,000 to face. A ruinous fiscal policy, paralyzed commerce, and we have an hourly increasing financial responsibility. Whither are we drifting?

Pure Patriotism.

"No, gentlemen," said a patriotic citizen, "I am not personally ambitious. I am only ambitious for my country's good. I want to see her occupy that position among the nations of the world to which her greatness entitles her. "And," he added, rather weakly, "if I am fortunate enough to obtain what I seek, I pledge myself to do all I can in that direction."

"Do you understand," he was asked a little later, "that there is no salary attached to the office to which you aspire?"

"No what!"

"No salary; not a cent."

"Then the office can go to thunder!" said the patriot.

"Because it is the fall's profit, you know," replied the doctor, as he smilingly showed the patient out.—Boston Courier.

TO SMOKE CIGARETTES.

A Tobacconist Instructs a Customer in the Art—Inhaling the Smoke.

"I always prefer to make my own cigarettes, and then I know they contain no opium or other poisonous ingredients," said a gentleman yesterday as he stood in a cigar-store door and delicately twirled some tobacco and a small piece of rice paper between his fingers.

"That's where you and I differ," said the dealer, taking up the thread of conversation. "A man can get all the cigarettes he wants and there won't be a particle of opium in them. Opium is too expensive a drug to allow of its being used in a cigarette, a package of which will cost 15 cents, and the public generally seem to be appreciating this fact. Opium is put in cigarettes, but it isn't every dealer who will handle them. They are higher priced, and are only called for by those who desire that kind of a smoke. You ask how it is put in. Well, it is pulverized, and scattered in that way. As far as my custom goes, cigarettes are more popular now than they were two years ago."

"I don't see how people can smoke the things. There is no strength to them, and it is like puffing that much vapor," said a listener who was engaged in vigorously coaxing the smoke through a big 5-cent cigar.

"That is because you don't know how to smoke a cigarette," answered the dealer, as he drew forth one and proceeded to light it. "Now, if you was to smoke a cigarette you would put it in your mouth and allow the saliva to moisten the end of it before you had taken two puffs, and then you would be compelled to bite off little cuts of tobacco, which makes it very annoying. Well, in the first place you must learn to overcome that and hold it between your lips. Then, to add to the unpleasantness you would get out of it, you would proceed to smoke it as if you were smoking a pipe—that is, take a draw and blow it out of your mouth. A cigarette is not worth the smoking that way. But if you should persevere and learn to smoke this way you would find out that a cigarette is as good as a cigar."

Then the dealer took a draw and allowed the smoke to pass out through the nostrils in two gossamer streaks, and followed this by inhaling the smoke and allowing it to fill his lungs and then pass out with the regular respiration. Then he took other inhalations and caused the smoke to pass out of his mouth and be drawn through the nostrils into the lungs, only to pass out again through the mouth. He followed this by sending wreaths of smoke floating across the room, and then by blowing rings through each other, until the man with the cigar was amazed.

"Won't that injure the lungs?" he asked, in an excited way.

"I suppose the doctors would say so; but he they would say that it would kill a man to smoke cigars or chew tobacco, or do anything that there is any pleasure in. For my part, I don't care what they say. I believe it will injure the lungs no more than it does to inhale the stench from the Chicago river, or the coal smoke from the thousand and one buildings, or the dust and dirt that floats in the atmosphere, or the poison which arises from filthy streets, or numerous other things which the doctors say nothing about."

"That's so," answered the man as he threw his cigar-stump into the street and walked away.

Experiments on an extensive scale have been made by the Dutch Government to ascertain the relative strength of iron and steel girders. The soft steel girders proved to be 22 per cent. and the hard steel girders 66 per cent. stronger than the iron girders. It was pretty well established that the strength of steel girders is about the same for the two flanges if they are made alike in section.

One of Mexico's crudities is its Post-office. Having entered the Postal Union, letters pass between it and other countries in the union for 5 cents a half-ounce; but between towns within its own border the rates are a great deal higher. Chapter XII—Continued.

"You saved any one's life it was mine. I was that man."

"You that man!" He looked at me more attentively—"yes; now the features come back to me. I always wondered that your face seemed so familiar. Yes. I can understand—I am a doctor—your eyes were operated upon?"

"Yes—most successfully."

"You can see well now—but then! I could not be mistaken, you were blind—you saw nothing."

"I saw nothing, but I heard everything."

"And now Pauline has told you what happened?"

"Pauline has not spoken."

Ceneri rose, and in great agitation walked up and down the room, his chains rattling as he moved. "I knew it," he muttered, in Italian. "I knew it—such a crime cannot be hidden."

Then he turned to me. "Tell me how you have learned this? Teresa would die before she spoke. Petroff is dead—died, as I told you, raving mad."

From his last words I presumed that Petroff was the third man I had seen, and also the fellow-prisoner who had denounced Macari.

"Was it Macari—that double-dyed traitor? No—he was the murderer—such an avowal would defeat his ends. Tell me how you know?"

"I would tell you, but I suspect you would not believe me."

"Believe you!" he cried, excitedly. "I would believe anything connected with that night—it has never left my thoughts—Mr. Vaughan, the truth has come to me in my captivity. I am not condemned to this life for a political crime. My sentence is God's indirect vengeance for the deed you witnessed."

It was clear that Ceneri was not such a hardened ruffian as Macari. He, at least, had a conscience. Moreover, as he appeared to be superstitious, he would perhaps believe me when I told him how my accurate knowledge had been obtained.

"I will tell you," I said, "provided you pledge your honor to give me the full history of that fearful crime and answer my questions fully and truthfully."

He smiled bitterly. "You forget my position, Mr. Vaughan, when you speak of 'honor.' Yet I promise all you ask."

So I told him, as shortly and simply as I could, all that had occurred; all I had seen. He shuddered as I again described the terrible vision.

"Spare me," he said, "I know it all. Thousands of times I have seen it or have dreamed it—it will never leave me. But why come to me? Pauline, you say, is recovering her senses—she would have told you all."

"I would not ask her until I saw you. She is herself again, but I am a stranger to her—and unless your answer is the one I hope for, we shall never meet again."

"If anything I can do to atone——" he began, eagerly.

"You can only speak the truth. Listen. I taxed the murderer, your accomplice, with the crime. Like you he could not deny it, but he justified it."

"How—tell me," panted Ceneri.

For a moment I paused. I fixed my eyes upon him to catch every change of feature—to read the truth in more than words.

"He vowed to me that the young man was killed by your instructions—that he was—oh, God, how can I repeat it!—the lover of Pauline, who, having dishonored her, refused to repair his fault. The truth! Tell me the truth!"

I almost shouted the last words—my calmness vanished as I thought of the villain who had, with a mocking smile, coupled Pauline's name with shame.

Ceneri, on the other hand, grew calmer as he grasped the purport of my question. Bad as the man might be, even stained with innocent blood, I could have clasped him in my arms as I read in his wondering eyes the baselessness of the foul accusation.

"That young man—the boy struck down by Macari's dagger—was Pauline's brother—my sister's child—Anthony March!"

CHAPTER XIII.

A TERRIBLE CONFESSION.

Ceneri, having made this astounding announcement, threw his wasted arms across the rough table and laid his head upon them with a gesture of despair. I sat like one stupefied, repeating mechanically, "Pauline's brother—Anthony March!" Every vestige of the black lie was swept away from my mind; but the crime in which Ceneri had been concerned assumed more fearful proportions. It was more dreadful than I had suspected. The victim a near blood relation—his own sister's child! Nothing, I felt, could be urged to excuse or palliate the crime. Even had he not ordered and planned it, he had been present; had assisted in hiding all traces of it; had been, until recently, on terms of friendship with the man who had struck the blow. I could scarcely control the loathing and contempt I felt for the abject wretch before me. My burning indignation would scarcely allow me to ask him, in intelligible speech, the object of the cruel deed. But for once and all I must have everything made clear to me.

I was spared the necessity of asking the question I was trying to force to my lips. The convict raised his head and looked at me with miserable eyes.

"You shrink from me: No wonder. Yet I am not so guilty as you think."

"Tell me all, first; the excuses may come afterward, if anything can be urged in excuse of the crime."

I spoke as I felt—sternly and contemptuously.

"None can be urged for the murderer. For me, God knows I would willingly have let that bright boy live. He forsook and forgot his country, but that I forgave."

"His country! his father's country was England!"

"His mother's was Italy," replied Ceneri, almost fiercely.

"He had our blood in his veins. His mother was a true Italian. She would have given fortune, life—ay, even honor, for Italy."

"No matter. Tell me the whole terrible story."

He told me. In justice to a penitent man, I do not use his own words in retelling it. Without his accent and stress they would sound cold and unemotional. Criminal he had been, but not so utterly black as my fancy had painted him. His great fault was that in the cause of liberty any weapons were allowable, any crimes were pardonable. We Englishmen, whose idea of tyranny and oppression is being debarred from the exercise of the franchise, can neither understand nor sympathize with a man of his type. We may call the governments right or wrong, we may call ourselves Whigs or Tories, and one side happens to be in or out; but, at least, we are ruled by our countrymen, elected by some of us for that purpose. Let us be for years and years at the mercy of a foreigner, and we may understand what patriotism in Ceneri's sense means.

He and his sister were the children of respectable middle-class people—not noble as Macari asserted. He had been given a liberal education, and adopted the profession of a doctor. His sister, from whom Pauline inherited her great beauty, lived the life of an ordinary Italian girl—a duller life, perhaps, than many of them led, as, following her brother's example, she refused to share in gayeties whilst the white-coated foe ruled the land. No doubt she would have been faithful to her mourning for her country had not love come upon the scene. An Englishman named March saw the fair Italian girl, won her heart, wedded her and carried her away in triumph to his native land. Ceneri never quite forgave his sister for her desertion and defection; but the prospects opened before her by the marriage were so great that he made but little opposition to it. March was a very rich man. He was the only son of an only son, which fact accounts for Pauline having, so far as Ceneri knew, no near relatives on her father's side. For several years the young husband and his beautiful dark-eyed wife lived in great happiness. Two children, a son and daughter, were born to them. When the son was twelve and the daughter ten years old the father died. The widow, who had made few close friends in England, and only loved the country for her husband's sake, flew back to her native land. She was cordially welcomed back by her old friends. She was considered fabulously wealthy. Her husband, in the first flush of his passion, had made a will bequeathing everything he possessed to her absolutely. Although children had since come, so perfectly did he trust her that no change had been made as to the disposition of his property. So with such a fortune at her command, Mrs. March was honored and courted by all.

She had, until she met her future husband, loved her brother above every one in the world. She had echoed his patriotism, sympathized with him in his schemes, and listened to the wild plots he was always planning. He was some years older than she was, and upon her return to Italy she found him, outwardly, nothing more than a quiet, hard-working, ill-paid doctor. She marveled at the change from the headstrong, visionary, daring young man she had left. It was not until he was certain her heart had not forsaken her country that Ceneri allowed her to see that under his prosaic exterior lurked one of the subtlest and ablest minds of all those engaged in working out the liberation of Italy. Then all his old sway came back. She admired, almost worshiped him. She, too, was ready to make any sacrifice when the time should come.

What she would have done had she been called upon, it is impossible to say; but there is little doubt but her fortune and her children's fortune would have been freely spent in the good cause. As it was she died long before the pear was ripe, and when she died, such was her faith in her brother, everything was left in his hands as sole trustee for her children. In her last moments the thought of her husband's decided English proclivities made her exact a promise that both the boy and the girl should be given an English education. Then she closed her eyes, and the orphans were left entirely to the trustee's mercy.

He obeyed her spoken commands to the letter. Anthony and Pauline were sent to English schools; but having no friends in their father's native land, or all old friends having been lost sight of during their mother's widowhood, the holidays were spent in Italy. They grew up almost as much Italian as English. Ceneri husbanded, invested and managed their fortune with care and in a business-like way. I have no doubt, so far as it went, his honesty was unimpeachable.

Then the longed-for moment came! The great blow was to be struck. Ceneri, who had kept himself out of little abortive plots, felt that now or never he must do all he could do for his country. He hailed the coming man. He knew that Garibaldi was to be the savior of his oppressed land. The first rash step had been taken and led to success. The time and the man were at hand. Recruits were flocking by thousands to the scene of war, but the cry was "money, money, money!" Money for arms and ammunition—money for stores, food and clothing—money for bribes—money for everything! Those who furnished the sinews of war would be the real liberators of the country!

Why should he hesitate? Had his sister lived she would have given all the fortune she possessed as freely as she would have given her life! Were not her children half Italian? Liberty laughed at such a small thing as breach of trust.

Except a few thousand pounds, he ruthlessly realized and sacrificed the whole of the children's inheritance. He poured their thousands and thousands into the hands held out for them. The large sum was spent where it was most wanted, and Ceneri averred that he freed Italy by the opportune aid. Perhaps he did—who can tell?

Titles and honors were afterward offered him for this great though secret service. It makes me think better of the man that he refused all reward. His conscience may have told him he had not robbed himself. Any way, he remained plain Dr. Ceneri, and broke with his old leaders and friends when he found that Italy was to be a kingdom, not a republic.

The Russian Athletes gave their third and last performance last evening at the Lansdowne rink. A fair audience was present, and the clever ladder balancing and grand horizontal bar performance given by the athletes was much admired and applauded.

A Great Treat.

Do not miss the opportunity of hearing Miss Churchill, the great elocutionist, and Miss Strong, Canada's finest singer, at Bradburn's Opera House, on Tuesday evening, Sept. 1st. Plan of Hall at Hartley's music store.

Attained Great Success.

Miss Strong, who sings at the Opera House on Tuesday evening, Sept. 1st, sang at Government House, Toronto, and the Mail says : "Miss Strong attained great success at th musical reception given at the Government House."

Her Magnificent Voice.

The St. John (N. B.) Telegraph, speaking of the elocution of Miss Churchill, who appears in the Opera House on Tuesday evening, Sept 1st, says :—"Her magnificent voice told with wonderful effect in Barbara Frietchie."

For the Falls.

About 150 citizens left for Toronto and Niagara Falls by the all-rail excursion over the G. T. R. this morning, and about 100 Lindsayites swelled the party. The tickets are good for three days, and many of the excursionists will no doubt avail themselves of that privilege, by stopping over at Toronto.

An Ashburnham Commotion.

For the past two or three days the northern part of the village has been in a state of commotion, and one gentleman in a sort of state of seige. It appears that the latter has a pasture field which has for some time been over-run by two flocks of geese. Twenty geese consume a considerable quantity of pasturage, and the gentleman, feeling unwilling to furnish his neighbors' bipeds with fodder, a day or two ago drove the trespassing birds forth from his field. Two ladies who own the geese, thinking that he was intending to impound their poultry, swooped down on the drover and hustled the geese back into the field, in spite of the owner of it, who, paralysed with fear was unable to resist the invaders. But his spirit rose as the ladies retired, and he aware a mighty oath, exclaiming, "By gosh ! if you're bound to have the varmints in here, here they sha l stay." And he barricaded the field against their escape and sent for the village constable. This functionary was soon on the spot, with a sufficient escort, and the offending geese were ignominiously conducted to the village pound. The wrath of their owners was great, and an intensity of ill-feeling has been aroused that may culminate in bloodshed, or, at least, a bald spot on the head of the amateur agriculturist who owns the unfortunate pasture field.

ATHLETICS.

Lacrosse.

THE U. S. CHAMPIONS LOWER THEIR COLORS TO THE PETERBOROUGHS.

The home lacrosse players succeeded yesterday afternoon in putting a little polish on their tarnished star by defeating the St. Paul Club, champions of the United States, in three straight games. Although it had been expected that the American visitors would not have a walk-over, and some of the more sanguine admirers of the home team confidently looked forward to a victory for them, the general opinion leaned towards a victory for the visitors. For the sake of giving citizens easy access to the game it was played on the grounds of the P. A. A. A., Ashburnham, but the attendance was not as large as might have been expected. The teams were drawn up in line about half-past three. The champions wore bright blue jerseys, similar to those worn by the Torontos, while the Peterboroughs were arrayed in the familiar dark blue. The players took up their position on the field in the following order :

St. Pauls.		Peterboroughs.
Martin	Goal	Stevenson
Sherwood	Point	Joyal
Burns	Cover Point	Myles
Larkin	Defence Field	Tierney
Orr	" "	Hall
Gibberton	" "	Kelly
Hughes	Centre	Sheehy
Costello	Home Field	Halpin
Warwick	" "	Rutherford
McNaught	" "	Henderson
Mahoney	Home	Rudkins
Hughes	"	Scott
J. F. Smith	Field Captain	J. Coughlin

Referee, Mr. H. LeBrun.

The ball, when faced for the first time, was taken by Sheehy, and at once went to the visitors flags, where such a close shot was made that many cried "game," but the umpire decided not, and play went on. The playing of the Peterboroughs was capital, and their attack so active and persistent, that during the game, which lasted 10½ minutes, their goal was seldom threatened, and the defence men had comparatively little to do. The visitors played in capital form, but, although they fought out every inch of the ground, could not withstand so determined and aggressive play, and their goal was captured at last by a shot from Henderson.

The second game was even more stubbornly contested than the last, and for a long time the issue was in doubt, attack after attack upon the visitors' goal being repelled, and compliments returned by a lively assault on the home flags. After 32 minutes' play the ball was put through the visitors' goal again, but a foul was claimed by them, and play resumed. Five minutes more play resulted in Henderson again putting the rubber where it would do most good—for the home team.

The third game lasted 13 minutes, and although luck seemed against them, the St. Paul's did'nt let up one bit, but pluckily played out every point of the game. They had at last to give way again to another of Henderson's shots, and the game was ended.

The Peterboroughs played a better game than when they last appeared on the field, there being a manifest improvement in their defence, which, though so weak in the match with Brampton a few weeks ago, seemed yesterday to be impregnable. Stevenson, though new to the position, played a first-rate game between the flags, Joyal, Myles and Tierney doing yeoman service at home Indeed, every man on the team played a first rate game, while Sheehy, Kelly and Henderson made themselves conspicuous by their activity and cleverness.

The American champions played a plucky and clever game, and their defeat is no discredit to them. Hughes, their centre, is as lively a lacrosse player as can well be imagined, and between him and Sheehy the play in centre was made interesting.

They were escorted to their travelling car by a number of the local players, and left for Toronto, where they make their next appearance, amid the cheers of quite a little crowd, and carrying with them the best wishes of the Peterboroughs for their success.

Lawn Tennis.

BUFFALO TO HAVE A TOURNAMENT.

There will be a tournament on the grounds of the Buffalo Lawn Tennis Club, beginning Tuesday, September 1, for the championship of Western New York. There will be two competitions, single and doubles, open to all comers. The entrance fee will be $1 per man in each competition, and the drawings will be on the Bagnall Wyld system. The tournament will be played on turf under the rules of the N.L.T.A., with Ayre's balls.

Already over 20 Buffalo players have signified their intention of entering, and it is thought that there will be many entries from other neighbouring cities.

Baseball.

COBOURG V. PORT HOPE.

The Toronto Mail has the following :—"Cobourg, Aug. 26.—A base ball match was played here to-day between Cobourg and Port Hope. The home team won by a score of 50 to 12." How is that for high ? The Peterboroughs had better look out for the Cobourg sluggers.

COBOURG VS. PETERBOROUGH.

The following are the players who will represent Peterborough in the match against Cobourg to-morrow :—P. Sullivan, p ; F. T. O'Neil, c ; Metheral, 1st base, Billings, 2nd base, Rutherford, 3rd base, Dayman, s. s.; Campbell, centre, Cameron, r. f., and Callaghan, l. f. The visitors are said to be bringing along a very strong nine, and the boys are likely to have their hands full, and a well contested game is assured.

Cricket.

BELLEVILLE BADLY BEATEN.

BELLEVILLE, Aug. 25.—A one-innings game of cricket was played this afternoon between the Onondagas, of Syracuse, and the local club. The visitors won by 137 to 77.

Mrs. Susanna Evans Peck.

Mrs. Peck, of New York, is everywhere acknowledged to be one of the most cultured speakers of the day. This eminent advocate of prohibition speaks in Peterborough County for one week, commencing at Lakefield next Monday evening. Mrs. Peck's platform presence is exceedingly pleasing. Her facts are always marshalled in a most interesting style. The diction of Mrs. Peck's addresses commands the admiration of her most scholarly listeners. Polished and persuasive, the lectures delivered by this eloquent lady leave everywhere a lasting impression in favor of the annihilation of the liquor traffic. Mrs. Peck speaks in Peterborough on September 4th.

PANTS.

How often does it happen that the general comfort and happiness of man depends on a good fitting pair of pants. Nothing will ruffle a man's temper more than to find when he tries on his latest new pair of pants that they are either too long or too short ; that they pinch him so bad in one place that he dare not stoop, and are so large and baggy around the waist and knees that he is afraid he might be taken for the departed "Smith."

CARDWELL.

On Thursday, Hon Thomas White, Minister of the Interior, in the Cardwell contest, defeated his Tory opponent, Dr. Allison, by a large majority. This result has no political significance; it is the issue of a mere family quarrel between the Conservatives of Cardwell, the majority being willing to have thrust upon them a representative who is not only an outsider, but also a citizen of another Province. "Political exigencies" demanded that Hon. Mr. White should be elected, the mandate was issued and the rank and file yielded unquestioning obedience thereto.

A Tree With Hands.

Lieut. Houghton, who has recently visited New Guinea and several other groups of islands in the Pacific, reports the existence of a prehensile tree. It appears to be a species of ficus, allied to the well-known banyan tree, which throws out from its branches air roots, that eventually reach the ground and take root there, and in their turn become new stems which perform the same function; so that a single tree will eventually extend so far as to form a complete forest, in which the stems are united by the branches to each other. The prehensile tree in question, similarly throws out from its branches long, flexible tendrils, which, touching the ground, do not take root there, but twine around any article that may lie within their reach. After so that they fail to reach the ground; but the finger-like processes continue to closely grip the article round which they have twined themselves, and which are consequently suspended in mid-air. In this way articles of considerable weight may be picked up from the ground and held in suspension.

Cooking With Oil Stoves.

Mrs. Lincoln, the Boston lecturer on cookery, say: When one tells you that there is "no trouble" in using an oil stove you may be morally certain that she does not know what she is talking about. To be sure you are saved additional heat and dust in the summer when you have so much of both from nature herself; but unless you are careful you will have a smoky atmosphere and a disagreeable odor. You needn't have either if you choose to manage properly; the "no trouble" people will have it all the time. The way to avoid it is to keep the burner perfectly clean, and entirely free from the gummy burner deposit which even the best oil will have on the polished brass burner. Everyday the burner should be washed in hot, clean suds thoroughly dried and the wick replaced; the little brass network about the base of the burner should be carefully wiped and kept free from every particle of dust. The wick should be cut squarely and evenly with sharp scissors, and not even a thread should be left that is higher than the rest. When the blaze is extinguished, the wick should be turned down at least, half an inch below the edge of the burner. If it is left above, or even with the top, it will absorb oil, and the oil will run over the top, making it greasy and soiled, and emit an unpleasant odor. The best quality of oil should be used, as, after all, it is fully as economical; there is less sediment in it, it will burn to the last drop, will not smoke so badly and does not leave should a rank odor. The stove should be filled after using, and when it is first lighted the blaze should be watched, because it increases in intensity and very soon begins to smoke. It can then be regulated and left for some time, especially if your baking; if you have water on boiling, as soon as the water reaches the boiling point the flame will increase again and must be turned down. The reason for this nobody pretends to explain, but the fact remains.

Misdirected Inventive Genius.

Professor Lendstrom, a German scientist, climbed a Spitzbergen mountain the other day, and by the aid of some long wire rods, a battery, some insulators, acids, and bad smelling drugs, manufactured an Aurora Borealis. It is true that it was not a very large one. It was described as being "about the size of the gable end of a two-story house."

The scientific world is excited over this achievement of Professor Lendstrom. The Professor acknowledges that his Aurora is not perfect yet. It is a little ragged at the edges, and inclined to warp and shrink in dry weather; but he claims that he will soon be able to produce a Borealis exactly like the genuine article furnished by nature, and equally as good.

What use Professor Lindstrom can make of an Aurora Borealis, we cannot see. You can't eat one of them. It is not a substitute for tobacco. Neither is it a stimulant, nor a cure for chills. It is not a labor saving machine. The Professor cannot pull his boots off at night with his Aurora Borealis, nor use it as a corkscrew, nor fry a rasher of bacon on it.

There might be some point in manufacturing Aurora Borealises if they would run machinery, poison rats, or grub up roots on the farm; but they do not seem to accomplish anything, and even if they did they could not be sent to purchasers by mail, and if forwarded by express the freight would eat up all the profit, and ruin the Borealis industry. We deprecate these investigations into the realms of natural science. First thing we know scientific men will be working up schemes to manufacture all kinds of natural phenomena, and the day may not be far distant when the poorest in the land may be able to own a cyclone, or a transit of Venus made to order, and earthquakes, eclipses, and waterspouts of assorted sizes will be manufactured, warranted to be equal to the genuine, and to keep good in any climate, and no one will be too poor to set up a private collection of rainbows in his own back yard. But we do not think that this will add to the wealth of the country. If these scientific men would go to work inventing ways and means to make buttermilk without the aid of a cow, or should discover means to make imitation gumboils, or other valuable articles of commerce, they would confer a benefit on the public, and generations yet unborn might call them blessed; but an Aurora Borealis factory is not what the people of this country yearn for.—Texas Siftings.

Germany's Great Gains.

BERLIN, Aug. 27.—Germany will shortly assume a protectorate over the Marshall Islands, where there are numerous German traders and a German consulate, in accordance with the Anglo-German agreement concerted by the Pacific Commission in London, recognizing German interests in the Caroline and Marshall Islands, and British interests in the Ellice, Gilbert and other groups.

Bismarck Wants to Escape the Trouble.

BERLIN, Aug. 27.—It is rumored that King Alfonso has sent an autograph letter to the Crown Prince Frederick William, asking him to mediate in order that the friendship between Spain and Germany may be maintained. It is also rumored that King Leopold of Belgium and Emperor Francis Joseph have been asked to act as arbitrators. Prince Bismarck, it is stated, favors the latter and desires a decision in favor of Spain, in order to escape from the difficulty.

"The Peace of Europe" Preserved.

VIENNA, August 27.—The New Free Press prints an interview with M. DeGiers, the Russian Prime Minister. M. DeGiers said the Royal meeting at Kremsier cemented the triple alliance and that the Emperor William was present in spirit though not in body. He thought the questions at issue between England and Russia were in a fair way of being settled amicably. There was no ground for supposing that the Kremsier interview was directed against a third power. The action was to improve mutual relations and preserve the peace of Europe.

Spain's Anti-German Feeling.

MADRID, Aug. 27.—The Government has dismissed several anti-German officials, and has instructed the provincial authorities to suppress anti-German feelings. The Government has closed the doors of the army and navy club, because officers belonging to the club have returned their German decorations and because the club has struck from its list of honorary members the names of German officers and that of the Crown Prince of Germany. The press and army are disgusted by the amicable attitude that has been suddenly displayed by the Cabinet towards Germany. The Ministerial papers have adopted a modified tone, while the Opposition journals attack Germany with increased vigor. The result is that seven of the latter papers have been seized and will be prosecuted. Public feeling is more decided than ever against the concession to Germany.

Smallpox in Quebec Province.

Spreading From Montreal.

MONTREAL, Aug. 27.—There were 26 cases of smallpox reported at the health office yesterday. Of these five were reported by the physician. Three deaths were reported.

QUEBEC, Aug. 27.—A correspondent writing from St. Pacome,, near River Quelle, states that there have already been four cases of smallpox at St. Pacome, two of which, imported from Montreal, had a fatal end. The two other cases are likely to recover. The disease is of a particularly virulent type. Messrs. King Bros., lumber merchants, are making generous efforts to confine the dreadful disease to St. Laurent's and Dube's houses, where it exists. They have supplied these poor families with provisions and an ample supply of carbolic disinfectant. They are using carbolic acid in liquid form, of which they make a strong solution coupled with chloride of lime. All their mill hands are supplied with this powerful disinfectant, with instructions to use freely. The correspondent adds: "The dreadful disease is surrounding us, but would go no further if good citizens would follow the commendable example of Messrs. King Bros.

Pitiable Quebec.

What Tory Rule has Done—Riot Ruin Wrought.

VALLEYFIELD, Aug. 27.—A political meeting of the electors of Beauharnois, P. Q., commenced at 1.30 o'clock in the field at the rear of the Windsor Hotel, 1,200 people present. Mr. E. Normandin, Warden of the County of Beauharnois, presided.

The Hon. Mr. Mercier, the first speaker, accused Mr. Bergevin of not representing the interests of the constituency, but conspiring with the others to ruin the Province of Quebec. The Conservatives had created an enormous debt to the Province. They had raised taxation and had created a debt of $21,000,000. He would prove it by the Budget speech of the Hon. Mr. Robertson, Treasurer in the Legislature. He condemned the sale of the North Shore, on which the Province had spent so much money. It would not have been necessary had not the Conservatives squandered the public funds. While their constituents remained indifferent, the majority of the House would let ministers do as they pleased, and the debt would increase. The expenditure should be cut down at once if the Province was to be saved from ruin.

Failure of the Robe Crop.

Soon a Canadian buffalo robe will be a thing of the past. The worst fears regarding the extinction of the American bison have been realized and in a year or two this "noble animal of the plains" will rank with the ichthyosaurus and the dodo. A report from the North-West says that this season's shipments of robes from Wolf Point, Poplar River and Berthold—a few years ago sources of immense supply—consisted of one bale, in which were three and a-half full robes, two splits and four calf skins. At Winnipeg there may be 1,000 robes in store, held over from last season, and they represent Canada's total PREVENTION PREFERABLE TO CURE.

In yesterday's issue we published an important letter from Dr. Clarke, Medical Health Officer, on the subject of "Smallpox and Vaccination," which pointed out the necessity of a more thorough system of vaccination than at present exists. When we see what Montreal suffers from the neglect of vaccination, we may form some idea of what the existence of even a single case of the loathsome disease in town might do for us, even in its effect upon business. The Witness paints a sombre picture of the effects the existence and ravages of the pestilence have produced there. The Witness says:

"Montreal is already suffering to an untold extent from harbouring an utterly unnecessary disease which she could get rid of in a month if she would, and she is going to suffer yet more. Montrealers are treated as lepers by silly people in other towns, not intelligent enough to measure the extent of the danger, and even Lachine cabbages are proscribed. Several excursions that were to have terminated here have been given up; we can have no carnival this winter, all because we have people among us who will not take the precautions that would save themselves and their neighbours from all risk."

"The only "sure precaution"—and it is a certain preventive—is vaccination. A person properly protected by vaccination need have no fear of the smallpox. The danger to which we are exposed here from the prevalence of the disease in Montreal is not to be despised. Commercial communication is so intimate and frequent that the disease may be developed amongst us any day Toronto, more distant from Montreal than we are, has two cases of smallpox, the original case direct from that city. It then becomes us to be alive to the danger, as other cities and towns are becoming. The Board of School Trustees of Guelph have decided that no pupils shall be admitted to school until they are duly vaccinated. Kingston has also seized time by the forelock. The local Board of Health have decided to open places for vaccination in each ward, the poor to be vaccinated at the people's expense. No pupils are to be admitted to public schools unless vaccinated, and all immigrants arriving by way of Montreal are to be required to pass inspection. This is wise action to take and is worthy of imitation. Many strangers from a distance are seeking Peterborough for employment, and the paralysis of business and trade caused by the smallpox in Montreal will drive many from that city. The necessity of vaccination being insisted on is suggested by no alarmist view—not more so, indeed, than to insist on having first-class fire engines as a protection against fire. Thorough vaccination is the wisest measure of precaution to take. The medical man who will first procure a supply of first-rate lymph—direct from the cow, will be a public benefactor. Peterborough has no greater need of alarm than Guelph or Kingston, yet the example of these places may be wisely followed. Never was the motto, "prevention is better than cure," more pertinent.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

English Conservatives are more radical than Radicals. The new Cabinet has ordered new uniforms for the yeoman of the guard stationed in the tower of London, which have used the same costume since 1485.

The figures are difficult to take in. Few Canadians realize that the public debt of Canada has increased two hundred millions—just think over these figures and try to realize what even one million is—two hundred millions in eighteen years. The total debt is three hundred millions, $60 per head for every man, woman and child in the Dominion

The integrity of the union of Great Britain and Ireland is safer in Liberal than in Tory hands. When Gladstone was in power, Parnell would never have dared to declare for home rule and separation as he has done. Emboldened by the alliance the Tories formed with his party to defeat Gladstone, Parnell has taken courage to advocate the disruption of the union, and he reasons that he may count on the assistance of the Tories, if on that depends their retention of power

Don't be Duped.

Smokers will further their own interest by insisting upon having the "Cable", or "El Padre" brands of cigars which have stood the test for a quarter of a century, and not allow greedy and unscrupulous dealers to persuade them to take other brands which pays them a larger profit, the consumer being a loser thereby. 13d-25w

A High New Railway.

The Pike's Peak Railway, which is expected to be in operation this year, will be the most notable piece of track in the world. It will mount 2,000 feet higher than the Lima and Ocoya Railway in Peru. It is now in operation to a point over 12,000 feet above the sea level. The entire thirty miles of its length will be a succession of complicated curves and grades, with no piece of straight track longer than 300 feet.

A Big Corporation.

The half-yearly report of the Improved Industrial Dwellings Company of London (Limited) has been issued, and the usual dividend of 5 per cent. is recommended for payment. The company now possess thirty-four estates in various parts of the metropolis, on which 4,739 dwellings have been built and are in occupation and 232 are in course of erection and completion, making a total of 4,971 tenements. When these are completed the number of persons residing on the company's estates will be upward of 25,000. The expenditure on capital account has now reached £922,,652.

Bridging Space.

Toronto newspapers of Wednesday can now be read in Victoria, British Columbia, on the following Tuesday, which fact, when we remember that the two cities are 3,500 miles apart, is one in which Canadians may take legitimate pride. The Toronto Globe, of the 29th July reached the Victoria post office on the morning of the 4th August at 10 o'clock. This is the quickest time on record made between Toronto and Victoria. The actual running time being 146 hours; six days and two hours, from the time the Grand Trunk train, carrying the western United States mail, left the Union depot, Toronto, until the bags were delivered in the post office at Victoria. "It will thus be seen," says the Victoria Times, "that a very high rate of speed has been maintained from Toronto to Victoria; considerably over 550 miles each day, including the Sound trip from Tacoma, partly by night. The C. P. R. assert that next year Montreal will be reached from that city in 100 hours.

The People's Free Niagara.

The Commission appointed by the Ontario Government to take preliminary steps toward making the Canadian side of the Niagara Falls free has entered upon its work. The local landowners will doubtless hope to get big prices for their possessions, but it will not pay them to be two hoggish in the business. If the scheme costs too much, the Legislature will not adopt it, and if it is not adopted the Canadian side of the Falls will soon be entirely neglected. Since the American side was made free, all the excursionists from the United States and from Canada flock to that side, and the money they have to spend is spent for Yankee victuals and Yankee nicknacks. Let that course continue for a few years, and what will the lands and the houses on the Canadian side be worth in the market? The Canadian property-owners had better make a virtue of a necessity and meet the Commission more than half way.

The Size of Apple Barrels.

At the last session of the Dominion Parliament several changes were made in the Act relating to weights and measures. The principal change is the one regulating the size of apple barrels. The clause in the Act reads as follows:—All apples packed in Canada for sale by the barrel shall be packed in good and strong barrels of seasoned wood, made as nearly cylindrical as may be; the staves of such barrels shall be twenty-seven inches in length from croe to croe, with heads from sixteen and one-half to seventeen inches in diameter; and such barrels shall be sufficiently hooped, with a lining hoop within the chimes, the whole well secured by nails. Every person who offers or exposes apples for sale by the barrel, otherwise than in accordance with the foregoing provisions of this section, shall be liable to a penalty of twenty-five cents for each barrel so offered or exposed for sale.

Dominion Doings.

The case of L. A. Senecal against Alphonso Trenchant, for libel for insinuating that the former had no right to the cross of the Legion of Honor, was dismissed by the Montreal recorder.

The local and Militia officers and Press Association of Quebec visited the French men-of-war La Flore and Le Bouvet Thursday.

Dr. Jas. Edwards, medical health officer for St. James, London, is in Montreal. He says the Pall Mall Gazette's "revelations" are untrue, and were gotten up merely to sell the paper.

A successful meeting of the Canadian Niagara Falls park commission was held at the Falls Thursday. The park will likely be two miles long.

The 16-year-old daughter of one of the wealthiest and most respected residents of St. Matthew's Ward, Toronto, recently eloped with the young man of her choice and was married in Detroit.

The police of St. Henri, Que., have arrested a man on suspicion of being connected with the murder of the young Monteith at Verdun, but he has not yet been identified.

Constable Beatty, of Montreal, who was mobbed by Griffintown roughs lately, is dying.

The steamship Summerside, from Montreal for Fogo, Newfoundland, has gone ashore at the latter place.

Jas. Hogg, aged 15, employed in the Clary Manufacturing Company, London, Ont., fell 25 feet to the bottom of a hoist, Thursday, and was picked up dead.

S. T. Mussal, jeweler, of Toronto, engaged a foreigner named Langmeer to travel for him, entrusting him with valuables to a large amount. At Barrie, Ont., he hid the watches and rings on his person and skipped out. He was arrested at the Suspension bridge for smuggling, and the goods were confiscated.

Martin Fitzgibbons and William Kearns, lads of 13, are in New York, having run away from their homes in Montreal. Their parents are puzzled to know where they got their money to travel with.

A row between cavalrymen and civilians occurred at the citadel, Quebec, last night. Two of the soldiers are in the hospital wounded.

Snow is reported to have fallen north of Beauport, Que., Thursday.

IT MADE HIM SING.

Mr. Edwards' Prescription for Evoking Melody from Recalcitrant Birds.

If any one has a canary bird that won't sing," said Mr. William Edwards to a New York Sun reporter, "I can give him a prescription that I never knew to fail in making a bird a first-class warbler."

Mr. Edwards is the naturalist who has been mentioned heretofore in the Sun in connection with experiments having in view the possible domestication of the alligator in Sheepshead bay. These experiments, it may be remembered, were not entirely satisfactory, owing to the drowning of one of Mr. Edwards' two subjects, and to the succumbing of the other, last winter, to uncongenial climatic influences, after a six months' diet of air.

"In the case of this prescription," continued Mr. Edwards, "it is the bird that is to be well shaken before taken, instead of the medicine. I discovered it in this way: Our canary-bird, Dick, is 5 years old, and when his notes were due, after a careful bringing up, he failed to utter a sound. We waited a reasonable length of time, and as he did not show any inclination to sing, we looked on the time and care that we bestowed upon him as entirely thrown away. If he had not been such a handsome bird he would have been disposed of at once, but his style kept him in the family. He was housed in a pretty brass cage, and received more attention than he deserved, as we then thought.

"About a year ago, Dick's cage was hanging in an upper window one day, and from some cause it fell to the ground below. When the cage was picked up it was found that one of the bird's legs was broken. We were about to put Dick out of his misery, when a lady who lived near us interfered. She said she could make him as good as new, which we didn't think was doing much, as when he was new Dick wasn't inventoried very high by us. The lady, however, took him and splintered the broken leg. For three weeks Dick laid on the bottom of his cage as patient as could be. He took his rations with discouraging regularity and relish, and one day hopped upon his perch as pert and fresh as if he had just returned from a long vacation in the country.

"But he was as mute as a mummy. His style was as handsome as ever, though, and he paraded it to its full capacity. About three weeks after coming out of the hospital, Dick's apartment was again hanging in the same window and again tumbled to the ground. The limb that had been so carefully doctored and nursed before was again broken. We splintered it as previously, and in a short time brought the bird around once more. The day that he resumed his position on his perch will never be forgotten in our family. He jumped to his place, cocked his eyes around the room, as if to see whether we were all present, straightened himself, stretched out his neck, and—well, talk about a canary bird singing. He filled the room with unheard of notes, and sent them ringing out of the windows until they penetrated the whole neighborhood and set every bird there was within a quarter of a mile to singing at a pitch that threatened the splitting of all the feathered throats that part of the bay contained. Sing? Why, he wouldn't stop. He kept it up right along all day, and woke up in the night to put in a bar or two he had forgotten to execute before. I guess that all the music that had been pent up in his soul for four years time he didn't think so much about it, but when it dropped the second time he began to wake up to what he believed the true situation was. He got it into his head that he was dropped out of that window because he wouldn't sing, and two trips was all he wanted. He made up his mind the second that if he ever got around again he would sing until he made things hum, and he did.

"That's my prescription for making canary birds sing when they won't sing, and I have no reason to believe that it won't work the charm every time, if used according to directions."

Warned by a Dream.

An extraordinary story is told in English court circles, and has been retailed by the spiritualists, as to the reasons which induced the Queen at the last moment to alter the arrangements for Prince Leopold's funeral. It is said that a short time before his death, dancing with an intimate friend, a lady of Danish birth, of great personal beauty, and the wife of an English peer, he was rallied by her upon his unwonted abstraction. His answer was that his sister Alice had come to him in the night, warned him of an approaching calamity, and told him not to trouble, for all would soon be well. The royal duke, like his mother, the Queen, seems to have accepted supernatural visitations as real, and he told the lady he would prefer, if anything happened to him, to have a military funeral. Her ladyship, the recipient of these confidences, wrote a letter to a high court official, telling him the story, and he laid her communication before her Majesty. At once the Queen ordered her dead son's desires, expressed in life, to be fulfilled. Hence that change at the last moment, which led to so much perplexity and inconvenience.

The unfortunate wife of Melville, the engineer of the ill-fated Jeannette, is living in Philadelphia supported by the allowance allotted her by the court. She has two lovely children of 7 and 9, and an elder daughter of 18, who is as gifted as she is pretty. In the old days Maud was her father's favorite child. Now the famous engineer speaks of his daughter only with regret."

The late Edmond About was writing "Germaine," one of his best novels, which was being published as a feuilleton in one of the daily papers. The story, relating to a young consumptive girl who was in love, was approaching the fatal end, when the Empress Eugenie wrote to the author: "I conjure you, do not make the heroine die." About complied with the request, and Germaine was made to live in the novel.—from Galignani

Chapter XIII—Continued.

He had kept, I said, a few thousand pounds. The boy and the girl were growing up, and their uncle thought that even his patriotism permitted him to keep back enough to complete their education and start them in life. Pauline was promising to be so beautiful that he troubled little about her future. A rich husband would set everything right for her. But Anthony—who was becoming a wild headstrong young fellow—was another affair.

As soon as the youth should reach man's estate, Ceneri had resolved to make a clean breast of his defalcations—to tell him how the money had been spent—to beg his forgiveness, and, if necessary, bear the penalty of his fraudulent act. But so long as any money remained he delayed doing so. The young man, if evincing no sympathy with his uncle's regeneration schemes and pursuit of liberty, fully believed in his integrity. Feeling assured that when he came of age he would succeed to a splendid inheritance, swelled by accumulated savings, he threw away money in a thousand and one extravagant ways, till Ceneri soon saw that the end of the reserve fund was drawing near.

So long as he had money in hand to meet Anthony's demands, he postponed the evil day of confession. The idea, which Macari had tried to work out with my aid, of appealing to the Italian Government for a return of some of the amounts expended, suggested itself to him; but to carry this out it would be necessary to let his nephew know what had taken place—the appeal must be made in his name.

As the inevitable exposure drew near he dreaded it more and more. He had studied Anthony's character, and felt sure that when he knew the truth his one wish would be to take revenge on the fraudulent trustees. Ceneri could see nothing before him but a well-deserved term of penal servitude. If the English law failed to touch him, that of his own country might be brought against him.

It seems to me that until this time he had committed no crime from which he could not absolve himself on the grounds of patriotism; but now the desire to save himself from punishment grew upon him, and he determined to avoid the consequences of his acts.

He had never felt any great affection for the two children. No doubt they had latterly appeared in the light of wronged innocents who would one day demand a reckoning with him. They were in disposition too much like their father for him to be greatly drawn toward them. He despised Anthony for his gay, frivolous life—a life without plans or ambition—and contrasted it with his own. He honestly believed he was doing good work in the world; that his plots and conspiracies quickened the steps of universal liberty. In his dark, secret circle he was a figure of considerable importance. If he were ruined and imprisoned he would be missed. Had he not the right to weigh his own high purposes against the butterfly existence of his nephew?

So he reasoned and persuaded himself that, for the sake of mankind, he might do almost anything to save himself.

Anthony March was now twenty-two. Trusting his uncle; careless and easy-going; so long as his wants had been supplied he had accepted, until now, the excuses made for deferring the settlement of his affairs. Whether his suspicions had at last been awakened or not cannot be said; but recently he had taken another tone, and was insisting that his fortune should be at once placed in his hands. Ceneri, whose schemes called him for a time to England, pacified him by assuring him that he would, during his stay in London, explain everything.

The explanation must indeed be given now, as Anthony's last drafts had reduced the remnant of his father's wealth almost to nothing.

Now, as to Macari's part in the affair. He had been for years a useful and trusted agent of Ceneri's; but most probably without the latter's lofty and unselfish aims. He appears to have followed conspiracy as a trade by which money might be made. The fact, which seems beyond a doubt, that he fought bravely and distinguished himself on the battle-field, may be accounted for by the natural ferocity of the man's nature, which bade him fight for the sake of fighting.

Being mixed up in all his plots he was often at Ceneri's house, wherever for the time being it might be; and on many occasions saw Pauline. He fell in love with her when she was but a young girl, and tried everything he knew to win her heart. To her he was soft and kind. She had no reason to mistrust him, but she utterly refused to give him the love he asked for. The pursuit went on at intervals for years—the man, to give him his due, was constancy itself. Again and again Pauline assured him of the hopelessness of his suit, but after each rebuff he returned to the attack.

Ceneri gave him no encouragement. He did not wish to offend him, and seeing that the girl was proof against his blandishments, let things alone, hoping that Macari would grow weary of urging those requests which were always met by refusals. He believed that he was not seeking Pauline for the sake of the money which should have been hers. Macari knew what large sums Ceneri had poured into the patriot's treasury, and, no doubt, guessed whence they came.

Pauline remained at school until she was nearly eighteen; then she spent two years with her uncle in Italy. It was a dull life for the girl, and she sighed audibly for England. Although meeting him seldom, she was passionately attached to her brother, and was greatly delighted when Ceneri told her that business would take him for a while to London, and that she might accompany him. She was growing tired of Macari's pertinacity, and, moreover, longed to see her brother again.

Ceneri, for the sake of receiving his many political friends at what hours of day or night he chose, took a furnished house for a short term. Pauline's disgust was great when she found that one of their first visitors was Macari. His presence was so indispensable to Ceneri that he took up his abode with them in Horace street. As old Teresa, the doctor's servant, accompanied the party and waited upon them, the change to Pauline was a very slight one.

Macari still persecuted the girl without success. At last, almost desperate, he formed the wild plan of trying to enlist her brother on his side. His idea was that Pauline's love for Anthony would induce her to yield to any wish he expressed. He was no particular friend of the young man's, but, having himself entitled to ask a favor at his hands. Knowing that both brother and sister were penniless he had less hesitation in so doing.

He called on Anthony and made his request. Anthony, who seems to have been a proud, arrogant and not a very pleasant young man, simply laughed at his impertinence and bade him begone. Poor boy, he little knew what that laugh would cost him!

It may have been the retort made by Macari, as he departed in whirlwind of rage, that opened Anthony's eyes as to the jeopardy in which his fortune was placed. Any way he wrote at once to his uncle, insisting upon an immediate settlement. In the event of any delay he would consult a solicitor, and if necessary take criminal proceedings against the trustee.

The moment which Ceneri had so long dreaded—so long postponed—had come; only now, the confession, instead of being as he intended a voluntary one, would be wrung from him.

Whether he would be amenable to the Italian or English law he did not know, but he felt certain that Anthony would at once take steps to insure his arrest and detention. The latter, if only temporary, would ruin the scheme upon which he was now engaged. At any cost Anthony March must be silenced for a time.

He assured me with the solemnity of a dying man that no thought of the dreadful means which effected this was in his mind. He had revolved many plans and finally settled on one which, although difficult to execute and very hazardous, seemed to give the best promise of success. His intention was with the assistance of his friends and subordinates, to carry Anthony abroad, and deposit him for some months in a lunatic asylum. The confinement was only to be temporary; yet, although Ceneri did not confess to it, I have little doubt but the young man would have been asked to buy his freedom by a promise to forgive the misappropriation of the trust money.

And now as to carrying this precious plan into execution. Macari, vowing vengeance for the words of insult, was ready to aid in every way. Petroff, the man with the scarred face, was the doctor's, body and soul. Teresa, the old servant, would have committed any crime at her master's command. The necessary papers could be obtained or forged. Let the conspirators get Anthony to visit them at the house in Horace street, and he should leave it only as a lunatic in charge of his doctor and his keepers. It was a vile, treacherous scheme, the success of which was very doubtful, necessitating, as it must, carrying the victim to Italy. How this was to be done Ceneri did not exactly explain—perhaps he had not quite worked out the details of the plot—perhaps the boy was to be drugged—perhaps he counted upon his frantic state when he discovered the true position of affairs to give color to the statement that he was of unsound mind.

The first thing was to induce Anthony to come to Horace street at an hour suitable for development of the plot. Ceneri made his preparations; gave his instructions to his confederates, and then wrote to his nephew begging him to call upon him that night and hear his explanation of matters.

Perhaps Anthony mistrusted his relative and his associates more than was suspected. Any way, he replied by declining the invitation, but suggested that his uncle should call upon him instead. Then, by Macari's advice, Pauline was made the innocent means of luring her brother to the fatal house. Ceneri expressed his perfect indifference as to where the meeting took place, but, being very much engaged, postponed it for a day or two. He then told Pauline that as business would keep him from home until late the next night, it would be a good opportunity for her to spend some time with her brother—she had better ask him to come and see her during his absence. As he also wanted to see Anthony she must endeavor to keep him until his return.

Pauline, suspecting nothing, wrote to her brother, and, saying she should be all alone until late at night, begged him to come to her, or, if he would, take her to some place of amusement. They went to the theater together, and it was twelve o'clock before he brought her back to Horace street. No doubt she begged him to remain with her awhile—perhaps against his will. Awful as the shock of what followed was to the girl, it must have been doubly so when she knew that her entreaties had led him to his death.

The brother and sister sat alone for some time; then Ceneri and his two friends made their appearance. Anthony seemed displeased at the encounter, but made the best of matters and greeted his uncle civilly. Macari he simply turned his back upon.

It was no part of Ceneri's plan that any act of violence or restraint should take place in the presence of Pauline. Whatever was to be done should be done when Anthony was about to leave the house. Then he might be seized and conveyed to the cellar; his cries if needful being stifled. Pauline was to know nothing about it. Arrangements had been made for her to go on the morrow to a friend of her uncle's, with whom she was to stay, ignorant of the purport of the business which suddenly called the plotters away.

"Pauline," said Ceneri, "I think you had better go to bed. Anthony and I have some affairs to speak about."

"I will wait until Anthony leaves," she said, "but if you want to talk I will go into the other room."

So saying, she passed through the folding-doors and went to the piano, where she sat playing and singing for her own amusement.

The Organ Recital.

In spite of the uncomfortable coolness of last evening, rendering it pleasanter to stay in the house than to venture abroad, quite a large audience was present at Mr. J. S. Parker's organ recital at St. Paul's Presbyterian Church. The programme, which is given below, was rendered by Mr. Parker and the choir in a very acceptable manner, and although, of course, in the church, no applause was admissable, it was evident that each succeeding number on the programme was heard with pleasure by the audience. Mr. Parker's anthem, "Saviour Breathe an Evening Blessing," rendered for the first time, is a very pleasing composition, giving evidence of conscientious study and a keen appreciation of the delicacy of musical expression needed to render effective such a production; as is also his air, sung by Miss Haultain, "Abide With Me," which is now, however, becoming familar to attendants at St. Paul's. The accompaniments to the anthems were played by Mr. C. C. Hampshire, organist of St. John's Church.

Well-Merited Recognition.

Mr. Herbert Charman has performed the duties of superintendent of St. John's Sunday School for the past ten years. Recently, however, he has resigned that position to be succeeded by Mr. H. H. Hammond. Mr. Charman's former associates in Sunday School work, feeling that the faithful services Mr. Charman had rendered were deserving of recognition, procured for presentation to him a beautiful set of plate, which on Thursday evening was given to him. The teachers and a number of the friends of the Sunday School assembled in the School Room, and the Rector, Rev. J. W. R. Beck, in a few words, recognizing the faithful services rendered by both Mr. and Mrs. Charman and family in promoting the welfare of not only the Sunday School, but the Church in general, made the presentation. The plate consisted of a handsome silver pitcher, drinking cup, teapot, cream jug and salver from China Hall. The pitcher bore the inscription, "Presented to Mr. Herbert Charman by the teachers of St. John's Sunday School, Peterborough, Aug. 27th, 1885." Mr. Charman briefly returned thanks for the present made him, and said it was entirely unexpected. He had done what he had done from a sense of duty. He looked upon the Sunday School work as a labor of love, for he had the honor of being connected by family ties with the great founder of the Sunday School system. [In explanation of Mr. Charman's illusion, it may be remarked that Mrs. Charman's grandmother was a neice of the venerable Robert Raikes, who established the first Sunday School in 1784. The niece and Robert Raikes' daughter were the first teachers in the first Sunday School, which consisted of only two or three sweeps. It is a pleasant fact to record that we have in our midst persons who are connected by direct genealogical descent, and active co-operations in the work, with the founder of a system, which is a great power for good wherever the Gospel is preached. The fondness for Sunday School work seems to have been transmitted from the first workers down to the present generation, as represented by Mr. Charman's family. Mr. Charman still retains his connection, with St. John's Sunday School, Mr. Hammond relieving him of the onerous duties of the superintendency.

The "Ten Cent" Store has removed one block south, opposite Alexander's Dry Goods store.

ATHLETICS.

Baseball.

THE BANKERS DEFEAT THE OPERATORS BY 9 RUNS AND AN INNINGS.

The baseball match between the bank clerks and telegraph operators, which took place yesterday afternoon on the grounds of the P. A. A. A. at Ashburnham, had been regarded by the knowing ones as a sure thing, and a pretty soft one at that, for the operators, several of whom are practised players, and who counted in among themselves the professional catcher of the Peterboroughs, who, at some time or other, has been a manipulator of the key. There were not wanting, however, those who believed that the ledger keepers would render good "accounts" of themselves, and these latter were not disappointed, for after five innings had been played the game was called, shortly after six o'clock, and the bankers declared winners by nine runs and an innings. The game throughout was of a most amusing character. In the first innings the telegraphers were first to bat, but, to their surprise, were retired in quick order for one run. The bankers followed with four runs, leaving the telegraphers three runs behind. In the second innings the telegraphers piled up similar figures, the bankers only making two, leaving the operators one ahead. In the third innings the key wrestlers were disposed of for four, and the bankers going to bat, the fun began. The bankers slugged the ball all over the field, and between their own heavy batting and stealing of bases, and the laughable overthrows and errors on the part of the telegraph men, put fourteen runs to their credit before the side was put out. In the fourth innings the operators began to have their share of the fun, and again the ball was p ded all over the field. They only piled up nine runs, however, before they were all out, and the bankers again taking the willow put together ten runs. It was then decided to call the game at the end of the fifth innings, and the operators for the last time went to bat. They were all put out for only three runs, leaving the bankers masters of the situation by nine runs, without taking their half of the innings. As the score indicates, the play was of a rather wild description, but in spite of this, there were at times some clever individual bits of fielding done on the bankers' side, which indicated the presence of a cricketer on the field. The bankers, too, showed up well in base running, Orde and Miles Hamilton travelling around the diamond in great form. The bankers are greatly indebted for their victory to the captaining of Sabine, who also did great execution at the bat and around the bases. The operators had a few really good players among them, but the mistakes of the one or two inferior ones so handicapped them as to render them less efficient as a team than the bankers. The latter were highly delighted with their victory, but are not at all likely to discard cricket and tennis for baseball. The following are the teams and the score by innings:

Bankers.		Telegraphers.
Sabine	4	O'Neil	3
Cooper	3	Spencer	1
Hamilton	4	Dixon	3
Morris	4	Wood	2
Geale	3	Henderson	5

Smith	3	Simm	1
Orde	3	McAuley	1

Lacrosse.

THE U. S. CHAMPIONS.

The St. Paul lacrosse team arrived in Toronto yesterday. To-morrow afternoon they will meet the Torontos on the Rosedale grounds. As the visitors from St. Paul are the champions of the United States the Torontos have decided not to be caught napping and will send to the field the same team—with probably one or two exceptions—that will face the Montrealers on the following Saturday.

THE LAWS OF LACROSSE.

A correspondent of the Montreal Gazette writes to state his views concerning the proposed revision of the laws of lacrosse. The following is an extract from his letter:—

"As one of 'the old school' who was in at the birth of its first laws submitted to the association at its first meeting in Kingston in September, 1867, I firmly believe that the game would be played with more fairness to-day had there not been a few cranks constantly tinkering and mending it with stupid 'amendments.' For several years after 1867, as well as for many years before it, there was very much more 'dodging' in the game, and men were really more exposed to foul play, if foul players were so disposed. But as the game developed and improved, it was year after year subjected in the association to so much legislation that delegates thought laws could make it scientific, and no one man could possibly remember, much less carry out, the everlasting amendments. Tinker at any other game in the same way, and see what you'll make of it. I maintain that the old laws were better than the new; that any captain or referee who thoroughly understood them could protect the game from rough play. The chief law needed with reference to rough play was plain and clear, and at the first convention its meaning was demonstrated by two delegates performing the very 'body checking,' etc., which referees permit to-day. The fact is, the players now sublimely ignore the laws, because nobody has the knowledge or the pluck to enforce them, and referees are too often appointed who have never handled a stick and cannot possibly learn what rough play means unless they have been active players themselves. Next year the champions of Great Britain and Ireland will visit Canada and the United States. They had no rough Indians or pale-faces to play with; they were obliged to learn our national game by thoroughly studying its laws, and I do them the justice of saying that they have practically interpreted, and played according to the intention of the legislators, more fully than Canadian players. I have not seen a match for many years in Canada in which the spirit of the laws was not broken, unconsciously, no doubt. Judge the humiliation it was for a Canadian picked team to be reproached by their pupils in the old country with not playing according to Canadian laws!

A Magnificent Gift.

There has been placed in St. Luke's church, Ashburnham, by Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Smith, former members of the congregation, a beautiful reminder of their connection therewith. It consists of a splendid lectern of polished brass. Though it must be seen to be appreciated, this superb article of church furniture may be described as follows:—The base is a tripod, and from the three feet converge to the central shaft three pieces intersected by a circle about a foot in diameter, on which is engraven the words: "To the glory of God, and in grateful remembrance of services much appreciated, this lectern is presented to St. Luke's Church, by H. H. and Georgina Smith, August 1885." From the junction of these three pieces rises a column about two inches in diameter. From the three pieces also spring artistically chaste decorative designs, a prominent feature of which is the trefoil typical of the Trinity. These designs narrow as they rise, and terminate at the intermediate capital of the column. Above this extends a short column with spiral fluting, and from the capital of this spring other ornaments similar to those below, which, however, expand, as they rise to support the desk of the lectern, which is also of brass scroll work. The whole is of polished brass, and presents an exceedingly striking appearance. It is doubtful if a finer lectern exists in any church in Canada. It was made to the order of Mr. and Mrs. Smith from designs selected by themselves, by Messrs Jones & Willis, the celebrated workers in brass, London and Birmingham. The gift is a most valuable, elegant and highly appreciated one, and the congregation will have an opportunity of seeing it on Sunday when it will be first used. Mr. and Mrs. Smith have, by its presentation to St. Luke's, intensified the sentiments of respect and esteem which their past relations with the church have evoked in the hearts of the pastor and congregation.

The Citizens' Excursion.

A postal card sent to a gentleman in town, from a friend on the Niagara Falls excursion, yesterday, says:—The citizens' excursion is a decided success; about 200 got on at Peterborough, and by the time we reached Scarboro Junction, the party numbered between 400 and 500. The run so far has been made in splendid time; if the balance of the trip is as pleasant, certainly, every one will be well pleased. The committee expected a parlor car to be put on at Peterborough, but were disappointed by the railway company."

PANTS.

How often does it happen that the general comfort and happiness of man depends on a good fitting pair of pants. Nothing will ruffle a man's temper more than to find when he tries on his latest new pair of pants that they are either too long or too short; that they pinch him so bad in one place that he dare not stoop, and are so large and baggy around the waist and knees that he is afraid he might be taken for the departed "Smith."

Councillor Davidson moved the adoption of the estimates and the by-law striking the rate of assessment for the coming year at 12 3-10 mills on the dollar, received its three readings and was passed.

On motion of Councillor Davidson, the clerk was authorised to prepare a by-law making a grant of $100 to the Mechanic's Institute.

THE EXEMPTION QUESTION.

Councillor Menzies stated in reply to Councillor McNaughton, that in consequence of a quorum of the special committee appointed to investigate in regard to the Dickson exemption not having met, they could not report in reference to the matter.

Councillor McClelland said that there was a very general feeling throughout the town that in this by-law a gross outrage on the taxpayers had been perpetrated, and was sorry to see the Mayor mixed up in the matter so much.

The Mayor said he believed that any feeling of that kind that existed among the townspeople was due to misapprehension and misunderstanding. The most vague stories as to the nature of the exemption were being circulated. He would suggest that a public meeting should be held, at which the matter of exemptions could be fully discussed.

Councillor McClelland maintained that people knew very well the nature of the exemption. They did not object to exempting a new industry, as was shown by their willingness to exempt the lock and stove works. But the principle they were contending for was that before granting any exemption they should know exactly what they were exempting, and not let the Dickson estate erect buildings to be exempted from taxation in which businesses injurious to taxpayers might be instituted.

Councillor Hartley spoke in favor of the Dickson by-law, and after a protracted but somewhat desultory discussion, the matter was settled by a motion of Councillor Menzies. calling a public meeting to discuss the question of the Dickson exemption.

The Mayor was desirous of having the motion amended, to include exemptions in general, but the mover held that only the Dickson exemption was in question and the motion passed without amendment. After granting two weeks' leave of absence to Janitor Beavis, the Council adjourned for one month.

The new freight shed built on the site of the sheds destroyed by fire during October of last year, is nearly finished and will be completed and in use next week. In putting up the building regard was had to some conveniences in the handling of freight and business connected therewith not provided in the sheds that were burned. The new shed is 120x36 ft. wide along both sides and at the north end. At the south a platform 15 feet wide, heavy plank, has been laid down to facilitate the handling of machinery. It is proposed at some future day to place at this platform a crane with powerful gearing. Such an appliacne it has been ascertained would give additional facilities for loading and unloading heavy freight and goods that have to be handled in bulk. At the north end of the shed is placed the freight office, a neat room floored and sheeted with narrow widths of dressed lumber. The interior arrangement of the freight office will be such that a part of it will be for the use of the public, and the remainder railed off as sacred to the staff and their belongings. The ground to the north of the shed is to be cleared of the debris of last October's fire and filled up to a level and will make an excellent place on which to load or unload direct to or from cars. Other improvements about the sheds in the way of grading and levelling will be made and it is safe to say that the whole when completed will be much more convenient than as matters were arranged some time ago.—Post.

Earthquakes in Styria.

LONDON, Aug. 28.—Severe and repeated shocks of earthquakes have been experienced at Kindberg, in the Styrian Alps. The houses toppled and the inhabitants fled.

Beguiling the "Sick Man."

BERLIN, Aug. 28.—The Boersen Courier has a despatch from Constantinople stating that Russia is making overtures for an alliance with Turkey, holding out as an inducement a prospect of Turkey's recovering possession of the Balkan Passes and fortresses. The Turkish Ministers are divided as to the acceptance of the proposal.

The Exiled Poles.

BERLIN, Aug. 28.—Subscription lists have been opened throughout Galicia for the benefit of the exiled Poles. Great animosity is displayed against Prince Bismarck. At Lemburg a newspaper has been confiscated for publishing a virulent article against the German Chancellor.

The Cholera.

TOULON, Aug. 28—All the theatres have closed, and the hotels and shops are closing. The people are despondent. Twelve new cases of cholera and six deaths were reported at Salon yesterday. Several deaths from cholera have occurred at Luncon, Corsillon, St. Chan, Chamda, Graas and Bonne. At Bonne a member of the Chambers of Deputies and the Mayor have died of the disease.

Poe.

Oh, if he sinned he suffered! Let him rest,
Who, in this world, had little but pain!
The life of patient virtue still is best—
But there be bosoms powerless to restrain
The surging tempests of the heart and brain;
Souls that are driven madly o'er the deep,
Their passions fatal and their struggle vain;
Men that in nameless grief their vigils keep,
With marble lips, and eyes that burn but cannot weep.

His music dies not—nor can ever die—
Blown round the world by every wandering wind;
The comet, lessening in the midnight sky,
Still leaves its trail of glory far behind.
Death cannot quench the lustre of the mind,
Nor hush the seraph song that Beauty sings;
Still in the Poet's soul must Nature find
Her voice for every secret that she brings,
To all that dwell beneath the brooding of her wings.

The silent wave of Time's eternal sea
Roll o'er the relics of the dead;
But, wafted on those waters, far and free,
[illegible]
sped!
Black gleams the deep beneath, but overhead
All heaven is glorious with its orbs of light,
While, like a spirit loosed from ocean's bed,
Lo! one clear echo, sounding through the night,
Floats up the crystal slopes of God's own mountain height.

The Quassia Cup.

"What has become of the famous quassia cup that was once the rage?" asked a reporter of The Mail and Express of an experienced drug clerk in an up-town drug store.

"Well, for their own medical qualities they are rarely used now. They are rather a dead stock on hand, and can only be sold at long intervals to some person who has faith in their tonic properties. I remember the time when the beauties of New York bought the cups by the dozen, and ceased to drink out of any other vessel. O yes; I do know of one use they are put to by an eminent physician on Madison avenue. The great rage now is to drink hot water for dyspepsia. Well, this physician has conceived the novel idea of putting the hot water in these quassia cups and giving it to his patients for dyspepsia. It is a drink then fit for a heroic stomach only, and is calculated to knock out the dyspepsia. Imagine the bitterness of such a drink! He says it works like a charm and gives tone to the waning stomach. I don't see why it shouldn't if any stomach can hold it down. You pay 10 cents at the cafes for a drink of hot water, so I think perhaps it is not such a bad idea after all for this physician to add the quassia cup, and have at least a shadow to charge for."

"What is the history of the quassia cup and its properties?"

"Quassia has in the highest degrees all the properties of the simple bitters. It is purely tonic, invigorating the digestive organs, with little excitement of the circulation or increase of animal heat. It has not been long known as a medicine. About the middle of the last century, a negro of Surinam, named Quassia, acquired considerable reputation in the treatment of malignant fevers of that country, by a secret remedy which he was induced to disclose to one Roland, a Swede, for a valuable consideration. Specimens were taken to Stockholm in 1756, and the medicine soon became popular in Europe. The name of the negro has been perpetuated in the generic title of the plant. But the quassia of Surinam is not now in use, having been superseded by the product of quassia excelsa, from the West Indies. The medicine is useful whenever a simple impression is desirable. It is particularly adapted to dyspepsia and to that debilitated of state the digestive organs which sometimes succeeds acute disease. It may also be given with advantage in the remission of certain fevers in which tonics are demanded. No one at present would expect from it any peculiar controlling influence over malignant fevers. It is said to be largely employed in England by brewers to impart bitterness to their liquors. The cups, of course, impart to the water placed in them the bitterness of their nature, and so they were used in preference to pulverised quassia. But the dyspeptic hot-water drinkers don't take so kindly to quassia cups and prefer their pure boiling beverage in a tumbler.

A Plymouth Eccentric.

At Plymouth, in the olden days, lived a shrewd philosopher who rejoiced in the familiar title of Sam Barnes. Short of stature, keen of tongue, and squeaky of voice, Barnes was known to everybody, and in turn knew everybody so well that he was able to hit off their peculiarities to the delight of all hearers but the victim. It is related, for instance, that a miserly neighbor who, in the opinion of Plymouth farmers, starved his stock, complained to Barnes that his pig was sick. "I've given him seaweed and rockweed," the owner said, "and pigweed and burdock, and nothing seems to please him. What would you do, Sam, if he was yours?" "Well, now, I swear to man," answered Sam, with his usual sharp, jerky manner, "if he was mine I'd try him with a little good meal and water." Barnes was a Universalist, and much did he pride himself thereon. One evening when the church bells were ringing, Sam, on his way to the corner grocery, where his comrades were wont to congregate, encountered the orthodox clergyman. "Hallo, Parson B.," piped Sam, "what on earth are all those bells a-ringing for?" "It is prayer-meeting evening, Mr. Barnes," the clergyman replied, with pious severity and mild reproof in his voice. "Well, now, I swear," Sam continued, as if the idea were a novel one to him. "What's it for? What do you do there?" "We pray, Mr. Barnes." "Pray? I swear to man! Now, my Bible says: 'When we pray go into your closet, and shut the door, and pray in secret.'" "But do you pray in secret?" asked the divine, in that tone of pointed appeal which marks the consciousness of a home thrust. "Well, now," retorted Barnes, undismayed, "if I should tell you there wouldn't be nothing secret about it." And with a triumphant chuckle he pursued his way to the corner grocery.—Boston Courier.

Uncle Abe Recovers His Pullet.

"Wall," began the old man, "I had my 'spicions 'bout dis here chicken, but I ain't say much. I jis' lie low and watch de case. Tinks I, Brudder Dick bin a powerful han' on de stealing question, and I don't see as how his 'ligion dun 'prove him any, so I jis' keep my eye on his motions. Jis' now, as I was a passin' his house I hear a mighty singing and pattiug ob de feet, like Brudder Dick feel monstrous happy. Den I peeps fro' de orack, and dar, bress God, I seed de old sinner jis' a taring de fedders outen dat pullet. Den I walked back a few steps and sot up a signal, too; and when I gets to his house I hollers out: 'Brudder Dick, is you dar?'

"Den he answers up, skeert like: 'Jas hats Brudder Abe. What's [illegible] pledger?'

"'I'se cumin' in to sit awhile,' says I, and I shuffles about like there is a powerful site o' mud on my feet, kase I was boun' fur to hab a leetle fun, and I wanted to gib de ole man time to hide de pullet.

"When I goes in Brudder Dick was jis' a shovin' a basket ob fedders under de bed. 'Hab a cheer, brudder,' says he, powerful perlite; 'I'se sure glad fer ter see yer. Bring dat cheer nigher to de fish.'

"Den we talks and talks, and while I was lookin' roun' I sees a piece ob dat pullet a stickin' outen his pocket.

"'Brudder Dick,' says I, 'dus you carry a rabbit foot for good luck?' And gin a grab fur de chicken, but no, bress de Lord, the ole man was too peart for me, and he clap he han' on his pocket and he holler out: 'Don't touch my rabbit foot, kase you'll spile all my luck.'

"'Dat's the truff,' says I; den I sot to t'inking bow I was gwine to get dat pullet outen dat pocket.

"Arter awhile says I: 'Brudder Dick I'se dun los' dat fine Plymouth Rock pullet what I sot so much store by.'

"'You ain't tell me so,' he 'plies, innercent like as a dove; 'how dot dun happen, brudder?'

"'I can't in no wise tell,' says I, 'but I bress de niggah what eats dat chicken, kase I is dun put de ebil spell on it, and it is conjured clar to de back bone. I is shure seen dat pullet afore now stan' on its head and walk on its tail.'

"'You ain't say so,' he 'sclaims, and his eyes look like dey wus gwine to pop outen his head, and I see him hitch back his coat like he was skeert fur de pocket to touch him. Tinks I, ole man, you'se all right now, and I tells him good nite and leabs.

"Den I hides behind a tree fur to see what he gwine fur to do nex', and bimeby he comes to the door and peep out; he ain't seen nobody and he gin a run and flung the chicken inter my yard. Den I hear he say to hisself, 'If dat dere chicken is conjured I is dun fixed up ole man Abe's dog, kase Cash is boun' fur to eat it afore mornin'.' Den he slips in de house and I gets to dat pullet in a hurry and here it is, now ready for de cooking, ole 'oman. Ha! ha! ha!" laughed the negro. "I is cunnin' as a coon; it is hard to kotch up wid dis niggah."—Philadelphia Times.

Wanted to Argue.

"chief" of one of the New evening papers walked into the city department on last Wednesday morning. The city editor had just lighted a pipe of Killikinic, and several of the reporters were enjoying "corn cobs," preparatory to going out on the warpath after murders, insurance failures, and other events necessary to progressive civilization. The editor-in-chief looked at the smokers, made a rapid mental calculation of the number of cubic feet of air being adulterated with smoke, and said: "Gentlemen, the order is that no smoking will be allowed during office hours. Smoking affects the lungs, irritates the air passages, and prevents men of ability from making a good newspaper." The city editor blushed, threw his pipe out of the window, and all the reporters were reluctantly preparing to follow his example, when a modest little jackrabbit of a fellow, who had only been on the paper three days, jumped out of a cane-bottomed chair, and walked boldly up to the "chief," said: "Excuse me, but are you the head of this establishment?" "I am." "Allow me to congratulate you. I am glad to meet you, sir. My father, who is a postmaster in Orange county, says you are a good man. But I think you are wrong about smoking. History is against you sir, and I'll prove it."

This was said in an easy flow of breath, and to the astonishment of the city editor and reporters. The chief himself was evidently too surprised to knock the young man into the ash-box, and order the janitor to remove him to the street. Observing the profound silence, the young man continued: "I see you want proof. Dickens, Thackeray and Byron smoked, and did not need a plumber to fix their air passages. Then there were Milton (you have heard of Milton, the fellow who wrote the story about Adam and Eve) and Scott, the boss poet. Both of them smoked, and their mucus membranes were as good as new when they died. You may say these are exceptions. Well, Addison smoked so did Charley Lamb and Campbell. History says nothing about their nerves being shattered. But these bright and glorious names are not all, for Burns and Locke, Scott and Dan Webster, John Quincy Adams and Henry Clay, Andrew Jackson and old Grant himself all smoked, and never died with their boots on. These are but a few of the smokers, and if you will listen a"——At this juncture the fire alarm was sounded; the editor leaped to his desk, while the veterans went down stairs four steps to a jump, leaving the young chap from Orange in a whirl of speculation as to the probable result of his powers. All doubts were removed on the following day when he was made assistant to the base ball reporter at a salary of five dollars a week.—Washington Capital.

NEGLECTING THE VOLUNTEERS.

For years the policy of the Dominion Government towards the volunteers has been marked by what looks like systematic neglect. The same spirit of indifference characterized the equipment, transport and provision for the comfort of the force during the rebellion. Now, since the gallant lads have successfully quelled the uprising and returned home, no improvement in treatment is shown. After rewarding General Middleton with a "Sir Frederick" and twenty thousand dollars, and giving two private clerks of his Department $1000 for the hardships they endured in sitting in a warm office while the volunteers were toiling across the gaps, sleeping in the snow or spending hours at a time in the chilly waters of the Saskatchewan, Sir Adolph seems to have forgotten the existence of the latter. Even after receiving the insignificent reward of three hundred and twenty acres of land or scrip, to the nominal value of $80, they are not able even to secure the scrip. What little they can dispose of the scrip for to some exacting broker, is all that the vast majority of them can realize. Many of the volunteers since their return home have not been able to secure work, and are in need of money. Others who have a chance of securing employment at a distance, wish to realize on their scrip before their departure. Yet they have been unable to get even their certificates in some cases. They have written to Ottawa, and have failed to get even an answer to their applications. This is a shameful state of affairs. Instead of having to beg, unsuccessfully so far, for the petty $80 worth of scrip, the latter should be sent to them without delay. General Middleton and family were not suffering because no wages came into the house, and he did not particularly need his $20,000, yet he got it long ago. Caron wasn't seedy in clothing or hungry for lack of his knighthood and the trumpery gewgaws that go with it, yet he got both long ago. The returned volunteers are, many of them, out of work, their clothing is seedy and they badly need money, yet Minister Caron and his clerks are too busy admiring the brand new knight's new clothes to even have the civility to answer the letters volunteers send asking for the rights which should, with an efficient administration of the Militia Department, be voluntarily, promptly and cheerfully extended them.

The Engagement Still On.

You have heard of papa's trouble at the bank, George dear?" she asked from beneath the lapel of his coat.

"Your papa's trouble at the bank!" exclaimed George, turning white. "Certainly not! What is it?"

"Why, he is $2,000,000 behind in his accounts and an investigation is to be had."

"In that case," replied George, coldly, struggling to release himself, "our engagement must——"

"And mamma got a dispatch from him to-day from Canada," interrupted the girl, holding him down by main strength. "He reached there only this morning, and is willing to settle matters at 3 cents on the dollar."

"Oh!" said George, returning her head to his shoulder and stroking her ringlets fondly.

Knows How it is Himself.

Grover Cleveland himself once came to Washington after an office, says Gen. Wisewell, who was an old friend of Cleveland's father. It was at the time he had finished his schooling, and he had letters to Gen. Wisewell, who was in office here at the time. He failed. Had he succeeded he would probably be holding a clerkship to-day. It was the same with Salmon P. Chase, who came to Washington as a youth and tried to start a private school here. He failed, and applied to his uncle, Dudley Chase, who was then in the senate, for a place. His uncle refused, saying: "Salmon, I once got an appointment for a nephew in the treasury and it ruined him. I am not going to ruin you in the same way. I will give you a half-dollar to buy a spade or an ax for you to go out and out or dig for a living, but I will never help you to a place under the government." And then, as he noticed his nephew's face color, and as young Chase arose and indignantly refused the half-dollar, he continued: "You think me harsh, my boy, but the time will come, when you will see that I am right."

The time did come. Salmon P. Chase went off to Ohio, made a great reputation, and coming back to Washington rose to a higher position than his uncle had ever held, becoming senator, secretary of the treasury, and finally chief justice of the United States. —Washington Letter.

Not Easily Imposed Upon.

He had six fly screens under his arm, and was talking to a man in front of a house on Hastings street.

"I am offering these at 50 per cent. below their cash value," he explained, "because I want to get out of town."

"Vhell, it was soon coming winter, and I like to know how some flies come aroundt den?" the man answered.

"That's true enough, my friend, but the fly question is not the only thing. These screens save 25 per cent. in fuel."

"Vhell?"

"They give an air of refinement to a house."

"Vhell?"

"I don't say they keep out cholera altogether, but you can't point to a house in Detroit provided with them which has had a case of cholera."

"Vhell, dot vhas so."

"In buying them you help a poor man to reach the bedside of his dying wife in Buffalo."

"Yes."

"You add at least $200 to the value of your place."

"Yes."

"They are not a burglar-alarm, but when a burglar finds them in the windows he turns away discouraged."

"Dot vhas good."

"The air which enters your house is strained, as it were, and must, therefore, be free from chips, gravel, sand, dust and other substances deleterious to health."

"I see."

"And you will take 'em?"

"My frendt, vhas dose fly-screens like a watch dog? If some poys come in der alley dose dey raise a big row und let me know?"

"Why, no; of course not."

"If I vhas in a row mit my vhife does dose fly-screens help me oudt?"

"Of course not."

"If I come home in der night und der front door vhas locked, und I can't get in, does dose fly-screens make it all right?"

"No, sir—no, sir. How can you expect any such things from fly-screens?"

"Vhell, I doan' know. I guess you petter moof along to der next corner. Chinese Executions.

A correspondent of the Brooklyn Eagle writes: During the campaign against the Taepings from Shanghai, a large number of the insurgents were captured and a batch were turned over to the government officials. This, of course, meant execution, and I went with a score of other young fellows, inexperienced like myself, to witness the performance. It was the strangest and most revolting sight I ever beheld.

The day was bright and beautiful, and a gentle breeze shook out the folds of the flags and banners, borne by the almond-eyed troops drawn up on all sides of a small, level square or parade ground. Two hundred rebels were to dispatched, but from their manner and freedom I should not have known which were the intended victims had they not been distinguished by their clothing. When the hour arrived the prisoners got into line, and one after the other awaited their turn. I say they got into line—I mean each man stepped in anywhere, apparently not caring which was the beginning or which the ending. They chatted to one another, and laughed as if nothing in the world concerned them, and reminded me of a line of pleasure-seekers in the lobby of a theater awaiting their turn to get their tickets at the box-office. Some of them had nuts and sweetmeats, which they ate with seeming relish, though quietly. There was nothing false about their actions, no vaunting bravery nor look of pride. Their manners were wholly unconstrained and natural, and looking at them I wondered if our fear of death was not altogether artificial, and whether, naturally, lying down to die was any more repulsive to human instincts than lying down to sleep. The more I think of it the more the dread of death seems like the bugaboo of nursery lore, made to play upon the imagination of unreasoning beings, but not to be tolerated by full-grown men.

The warning note sounded. The first man stepped out and dropped on his knees. His hands were caught by an attendant and held behind his back. Another drew the victim's cue out opposite to his hands, thus bringing his neck in a horizontal position. Like a flash the executioner brought down a long glittering blade, and one stroke severed the head completely from the body. The next prisoner stepped out promptly and underwent the same operation. As fast as one fell another was ready. There was no hesitation or urging. The men presented themselves as if they expected some benefit, with no sign of emotion, save perhaps of some who were engaged in quiet humor. Two of the fellows were evidently enjoying a joke. The story-teller would frequently glance askance at the executioner and talk faster, probably fearing that demand would be made upon him before the tale had been finished. He sang away in a higher key every time he looked around and saw his time getting shorter. At length, when he discovered his turn had come, he motioned to the executioner to delay for a moment and gabbled away harder than ever. When he finished his story he and his listener burst into a roar of laughter. Then he hurried up to the bloody spot and had his head whisked off, and his friend, still chuckling over the joke, a moment later did likewise.

It is a mistake to suppose that the Princess of Wales is the leader of fashion in London. Were she so, crinolettes, high shoulders, and inordinately high heels would never have been seen, nor loud combinations of color and elaborate head gear. The Princess is celebrated for being always dressed in quiet and perfect taste. She goes in for a rather severe article of tailor-made garments just now. Of course she is imitated. If she appears in a gray or pink hat, many are the gray and pink heads to be seen; but for one who will follow the Princess' quiet, lady-like style, twenty will follow the lead of some eccentric or celebrated actress.

Talmage's Sermons.

Discourse by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage.

The Road to the City.

"And an highway shall be there, and a way, and it shall be called 'The way of holiness;' the unclean shall not pass over it; but it shall be for those: the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein. No lion shall be there, nor any ravenous beast shall go up thereon, it shall not be found there; but the redeemed shall walk there; and the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads; they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away."—ISAIAH 35: 8-10.

There are hundreds of people in this house this morning who want to find the right road. You sometimes see a person halting at cross roads, and you can tell by his looks that he wishes to ask a question as to what direction he had better take. And I stand in your presence this morning conscious of the fact that there are many of you here who realize that there are a thousand wrong roads, but only one right one; and I take it for granted that you have come in to ask which one it is. Here is one road that opens widely, but I have not much faith in it. There are a great many expensive toll-gates scattered all along that way. Indeed at every rod you must pay in tears, or pay in genuflexions, or pay in flagellations. On that road, if you get through it at all, you have to pay your own way; and since this differs so much from what I have heard in regard to the right way, I believe it is

THE WRONG WAY.

Here is another road. On either side of it are houses of sinful entertainment, and invitations to come in, and dine and rest; but, from the looks of the people who stand on the piazza I am very certain it is the wrong house and the wrong way. Here is another road. It is very beautiful and macadamized. The horses' hoofs clatter and ring, and they who ride over it spin along the highway, until suddenly they find that the road breaks over an embankment, and they try to halt, and they saw the bit in the mouth of the fiery steed, and cry, "Ho! ho!" But it is too late, and—crash!—they go over the embankment. We shall turn, this morning, and see if we cannot find a different kind of road.

You have heard of

THE APPIAN WAY.

It was three hundred and fifty miles long. It was twenty-four feet wide, and on either side of the road was a path for foot passengers. It was made out of rocks cut in hexagonal shape and fitted together. What a road it must have been! Made of smooth, hard rock, three hundred and fifty miles long. No wonder that in the construction of it the treasures of a whole empire were exhausted. Because of invaders, and the elements, and Time—the old conqueror who tears up a road as he goes over it—there is nothing left of that structure excepting a ruin. But I have this morning to tell you of a road built before the Appian Way, and yet it is as good as when first constructed. Millions of souls have gone over it. Millions more will come.

"The prophets and apostles, too,
Pursued this road while here below;
We therefore will, without dismay,
Still walk in Christ, the good old way."

"An highway shall be there, and a way, and it shall be called 'the way of holiness;' the unclean shall not pass over it; but it shall be for those: the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein. No lion shall be there, nor any ravenous beast shall go up thereon, it shall not be found there: but the redeemed shall walk there; and the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads; they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away."

I. First, this road of the text is

THE KING'S HIGHWAY.

In the diligence you dash on over the Bernard pass of the Alps, mile after mile, and there is not so much as a pebble to jar the wheels. You go over bridges which cross chasms that make you hold your breath; under projecting rock; along by dangerous precipices; through tunnels adrip with the meltings of the glaciers; and, perhaps for the first time, learn the majesty of a road built and supported by governmental authority. Well, my Lord the king decided to build a highway from earth to heaven. It should span all the chasms of human wretchedness; it should tunnel all the mountains of earthly difficulty; it should be wide enough and strong enough to hold fifty thousand millions of the human race. If so many of these should ever be born. It should be blasted out of the "Rock of Ages," and cemented with the blood of the Cross, and be lifted amid the shouting of angels and the execration of devils.

BUILT BY HIS SON.

The King sent His Son to build that road. He put head, and hand, and heart to it, and after the road was completed, waved His blistered hand over the way, crying, "It is finished!" Napoleon paid fifteen million francs for the building of the Simplon Road, that his cannon might go over for the devastation of Italy; but our King has built a road for a different purpose, that the banners of heavenly dominion might come down over it, and all the redeemed of earth travel up over it.

Being a King's highway, of course, it is well built. Bridges splendidly arched and buttressed have given way and crushed the passengers who attempted to cross them. But Christ, the King, would build no such thing as that. The work done, He mounts the chariot of his love, and multitudes mount with Him, and He drives on and up the steep of heaven amid the plaudits of gazing worlds! The work is done—well done—gloriously done—magnificently done.

II. Still further: this road spoken of is

A CLEAN ROAD.

Many a fine road has become miry and foul because it has not been properly cared for; but my text says the unclean shall not walk on this one. Room on either side to throw away your sins. Indeed, if you want to carry them along you are not on the right road. That bridge will break, those overhanging rocks will fall, the night will come down, leaving you at the mercy of the mountain bandits, and at the very next turn of the road you will perish. But if you are really on this clean road of which I have been speaking, then you will stop ever and anon to wash in the water that stands in the basin of the eternal rock. Aye, at almost every step of the journey you will be crying out: "Create within me a clean heart." If you have no such aspirations as that it proves that you have mistaken your way; and if you will only look up and see the finger board above your head, you may read upon it the words: "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof is death." Without holiness no man shall see the lord; and if you have any idea that you can carry along your sins, your lusts, your worldliness, and yet get to the end of the Christian race, you are so awfully mistaken that, in the name of God, this morning, I shatter the delusion.

III. Still further: the road spoken of is

A PLAIN ROAD.

"The wayfaring men though fools, shall not err therein." That is, if a man is three fourths an idiot, he can find this road just as well as if he were a philosopher. The imbecile boy, the laughing-stock of the street, and followed by a mob hooting at him, has only just to knock once at the gate of heaven, and it swings open; while there has been many a man who can lecture about pneumatics, and chemistry, and tell the story of Farraday's theory of electrical polarization, and yet has been shut out of heaven. There has been many a man who stood in an observatory and swept the heavens with his telescope, and yet has not been able to see the Morning Star. Many a man has been familiar with all the higher branches of mathematics, and yet could not do the simple sum: "What shall it profit a man, if he gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" Many a man has been a fine reader of tragedies and poems, and yet could not "read his title clear to mansions in the skies." Many a man has botanized across the continent, and yet not known the "Rose of Sharon, and the Lily of the Valley." But if one shall come in the right spirit, trying the way to heaven, he will find it a plain way. The pardon is plain. The peace is plain. Everything is plain.

He who tries to get on the road to heaven through the New Testament teaching, will get on beautifully. He who goes through philosophical discussion will not get on at all. Christ says: "Come to Me, and I will take all your sins away, and I will take all your troubles away." Now, what is the use of my discussing it any more? Is not that plain? If you wanted to go to Albany, and I pointed you out a highway thoroughly laid out, would I be wise in detaining you by a geological dicussion about the gravel you will pass over, or a physiological discussion about the muscles you will have to bring into play? No. After this Bible has pointed you the way to heaven, is it wise for me to detain you with any discussion about the nature of the human will, or whether the atonement is limited or unlimited? There is the road—go on it. It is a plain way.

"This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners." And that is you and that is me. Any little child here can understand this as well as I can. "Unless you become as a little child, you cannot see the kingdom of God." If you are saved, it will not be as a philosopher, it will be as a little child. "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." Unless you get the spirit of little children, you will never come out at their glorious destiny.

IV. Still further: this road to heaven is

A SAFE ROAD.

Sometimes the traveller in those ancient highways would think himself perfectly secure, not knowing there was a lion by the way, burying his head deep between his paws, and then, when the right moment came, under the fearful spring the man's life was gone, and there was a mauled carcass by the roadside. But, says my text, "No lion shall be there." I wish I could make you feel, this morning, your entire security. I tell you plainly that one minute after a man has become a child of God, he is as safe as though he had been ten thousand years in heaven. He may slip; he may slide; he may stumble; but he cannot be destroyed. Kept by the power of God, through faith, unto complete salvation. Everlastingly safe.

The severest trial to which you can subject a Christian man is to kill him, and that is glory. In other words, the worst thing that can happen a child of God is heaven. The body is only the old slippers that he throws aside just before putting on the sandals of light. His soul, you cannot hurt it. No fires can consume it. No floods can drown it. No devils can capture it.

"Firm and unmoved are they
Who rest their souls on God;
Fixed as the ground where David stood,
Or where the ark abode."

His soul is safe. His reputation is safe. Everything is safe. "But," you say: "suppose his store burns up?" Why, then, it will be only a change of investments from earthly to heavenly securities. "But," you say: "suppose his name goes down under the hoof of scorn and contempt?" The name will be so much brighter in glory. "Suppose his physical health fails?" God will pour into him the floods of everlasting health, and it will not make any difference. Earthly subtraction is heavenly addition. The tears of earth are the crystals of heaven. As they take rags and taters and put them through the paper-mill, and they come out beautiful white sheets of paper, so, often, the rags of earthly destitution, under the cylinder of death, come out a white scroll upon which shall be writen eternal emancipation.

There was one passage of Scripture, the force of which I never understood until one day at Chamounix, with Mont Blanc on one side, and Montanvert on the other, I opened my Bible and read: "As the mountains are around about Jerusalem, so the Lord is around about them that fear Him." The surroundings were an omnipotent commentary.

"Though troubles assail, and dangers affright;
Though friends shall all fail, and foes all unite;
Yet one thing secures us, whatever betide,
The scriptures assure us the Lord will provide."

V. Still further: the road spoken of is

A PLEASANT ROAD.

God gives a bond of indemnity against all evil to every man that treads it. "All things work together for good to those who love God." No weapon formed against them can prosper. That is the bond, signed, sealed, and delivered by the President of the whole universe. What is the use of your fretting, O child of God, about food? "Behold the fowls of the air; for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them. And will He take care of the sparrow, will He take care of the hawk, and let you die? What is the use of your fretting about clothes? "Consider the lilies of the field. Shall he not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith?" "What is the use worrying for fear something will happen to your home? "He blesseth the habitation of the just." What is the use of your fretting lest you will be overcome temptations? "God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it."

O this King's highway! Trees of life are on either side, bending over until their branches interlock and drop midway their fruit and shade.

HOUSES OF ENTERTAINMENT

on either side the road for poor pilgrims. Tables spread with a feast of good things, and walls adorned with apples of gold in pictures of silver. I start out on this King's highway, and I find a harper, and I say: "What is your name?" The harper makes no response, but leaves me to guess, as, with his eyes towards heaven and his hand upon the trembling strings that same comes rippling on the air: "The Lord is my light and my salvation. Whom shall I fear? The Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid?" I go a little further on the same road and meet a trumpeter of heaven, and I say: "Haven't you got some music for a tired pilgrim?" And wiping his lip and taking a long breath, he puts his mouth to the trumpet and pours forth this strain: "They shall hunger no more, neither shall they thirst any more, neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat, for the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall lead them to living fountains of water, and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes." I go a little distance further on the same road, and I meet a maiden of Israel. She has no harp, but she has cymbals. They look as if they had rusted from sea-spray; and I say to the maiden of Israel: "Have you no

SONG FOR A TIRED PILGRIM?"

And like the clang of victors' shields the cymbals clap as Miriam begins to discourse: "Sing ye to the Lord, for He hath triumphed gloriously; the horse and the rider hath He thrown into the sea." And then I see a white-robed group. They come bounding toward me, and I say: "Who are they? The happiest, and the brightest, and the fairest in all heaven—who are they?" And the answer comes: "These are they who came out of great tribulations, and had their robes washed and made white with the blood of the Lamb."

I pursue this subject only one step further.

WHAT IS THE TERMINUS?

I do not care how fine a road you may put me on, I want to know where it comes out. My text declares it: "The redeemed of the Lord come to Zion." You know what Zion was. That was the King's palace. It was a mountain fastness. It was impregnable. And so heaven is the fastness of the universe. No howitzer has long enough range to shell those towers. Let all the batteries of earth and hell blaze away; they cannot break in those gates. Gibraltar was taken, Sebastopol was taken, Babylon fell; but these walls of heaven shall never surrender, either to human or Satanic besiegement. The Lord God Almighty is the defence of it. Great capital of the universe! Terminus of the King's highway!

Dr. Dick said that, among other things, he thought in heaven we would study chemistry, and geometry, and conic sections. Southey thought that in heaven he would have the pleasure of seeing Chaucer and Shakespeare. Now, Dr. Dick may have his mathematics for all eternity, and Southey his Shakespeare. Give me Christ and my old friends—that is that is heaven enough for me. O garden of light, whose leaves never wither, and whose fruits never fail! O banquet of God, whose sweetness never palls the taste and whose guests are kings forever! O city of light, whose walls are salvation, and whose gates are praise! O palace of rest, where God is the monarch and everlasting ages the length of his reign! O song louder than the surf-beat of many waters, yet soft as the whisper of cherubim!

ALL THE HEAVEN I WANT,

O my heaven! When my last wound is healed, when the last heart-break is ended, when the last tear of earthly sorrow is wiped away, and when the redeemed of the Lord shall come to Zion, then let all the harpers take down their harps, and all the trumpeters take down their trumpets, and all across heaven there be chorus of morning stars, chorus of white-robed victors, chorus of martyrs from under the throne, chorus of ages, chorus of worlds, and there be but one song sung, and but one name spoken, and but one throne honored—that of Jesus only.

Encouraging Bloodshed.

A Detroiter who put in a part of the winter in a Tennessee town made a number of friends among whom was a gentleman called Colonel, and another known as Judge. Both were recent arrivals in the place, and no one knew just how they came by their titles or by what right they wore them. The Colonel and the Judge were good friends for awhile, but at length they had a falling out over politics and the lie was passed. This brought a challenge, which was duly accepted. In the course of a couple of hours the Colonel called on the Detroiter and said:

"The Judge is a good fellow at heart, and I hate to kill him. Maybe you had best go quietly to the Sheriff, and he will appear on the ground in the morning and interfere."

The Colonel had scarcely disappeared when the Judge came in and said:

"I've been challenged by the Colonel."

"Yes, I knew."

"And I've accepted."

"Yes"

"And I'll certainly kill him, for I'm a deadshot."

"Well, he must take his chances."

"Yes, but he's a good fellow and I hate to slaughter him. You might drop quietly around to the Sheriff and give him the wink, and of course he'll prevent the duel and the Colonel's life will be saved."

Both principals understood that the Sheriff was to be notified, but that official did not receive the slightest hint of the affair. On the contrary, every effort was made to keep any knowledge from him, and morning came to find the men on the ground and in a great state of anxiety. Things were delayed as long as possible, and finally, when it was realized that the Sheriff would not show up, the Colonel apologized, the Judge said he was sorry, and the duel was declared off. Neither of the men would afterwards walk on the same side of the street with the Detroiter.—Detroit Free Press.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 29, 1885.

Use the Telephone.

Friends and patrons of the EVENING EXAMINER are requested to use the telephone in communicating items of news which may come under their notice. We should be glad to avail ourselves of any information transmitted in that way before 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

A Great Treat.

Do not miss the opportunity of hearing Miss Churchill, the great elocutionist, and Miss Strong, Canada's finest singer, at Bradburn's Opera House, on Tuesday evening, Sept. 1st. Plan of Hall at Hartley's music store.

Lakefield's Civic Holiday.

The Riverside and Crete Lacrosse Clubs will play a match at Lakefield on Tuesday, September 1st,—Lakefields' Civic Holiday—for a cup and the championship of Douro. An exciting game and good sport may be looked for.

The P. A. A. A. Sports.

The semi monthly sports of the Amateur Athletic Association will take place next week on Thursday evening instead of Friday. Arrangements are in progress to hold the annual games in the later part of September, when a large and successful gathering is anticipated.

Furs.

As orders of new furs are coming in already I wish to remind my customers and the public in general not to delay the opportunity to bring their furs in early for repairing, as the fur business of a manufacturer differs so very materially from any other trade, the months of November and December are only devoted for making up ordered goods. W. LECH.

A Good Work.

The Street inspector has been doing a good work in grubbing up and removing the stones that have made driving a rather bumpy enjoyment, on several of our streets. As far as surface is concerned our streets are now in pretty fair condition, but Charlotte street will be badly cut up when heavy loads of grain begin to pass over it, unless, in the meantime, it is treated to a good many loads of road metal.

Music in the Park.

The band of the Fire Brigade gave another of their enjoyable weekly concerts last evening in the Court House Park, but owing to the coldness of the evening not many citizens turned out and the programme was consequently somewhat curtailed. The light is still inadequate to enable the band to play with the precision they desire, and they think an electric light would get over the difficulty. The following is the programme:

Quick March	Amor Patrise Newton.
Fantasia	The Sacred Lyre Newton
Valse	The Silver Rhine Meissler
Fantasia	La Passirelle Boisseau
Quadrille	The Jolly Girls Dawson

An Interesting Programme.

The following is the programme of the elocutionary and musical entertainment to be given in Bradburns Opera Hall on Tuesday evening, Sept. 1st, by Miss F. H. Churchill and Miss Marie C. Strong:

ATHLETICS.

Baseball.

AN UNFINISHED GAME BETWEEN PETERBOROUGH AND COBOURG.

The game between the above clubs which was begun at Riverside Park yesterday afternoon, was, owing to the rain and the fact that the visitors had to leave town at 4 o'clock, abandoned after the third innings had been played. As far as it went the visitors had a good deal the best of it, making in the three innings a score of ten against the home team's five. This was in a great degree owing to the weakness of the Peterborough's fielding, several of their best men being unable to turn out, and four of the runs made by Cobourg were accumulated while the home men were engaged in a frantic search for the ball under the grand stand, where it had been knocked by one of the visiting sluggers. Still the Cobourgers showed up strong, and had the game been played out the chances were all in their favor. Mr. W. Sailsbury, of Cobourg, umpired the game, and had a hard time of it.

The following were the players:

Cobourg		Peterborough
Mulhall	c	Giroux	2 b
Wood	p	Sullivan	p
Hargraft	1 b	Campbell	r f
McDowel	s s	Dayman	s s
York	2 b	O'Neil	c
Hayden	3 b	Callaghan	3 b
Cann	c f	Cameron	1 f
Stevens	r f	Metheral	1 b
Pickard	1 f	Howard	c f

Errors—Cobourg 7, Peterborough 8; Basehits—Cobourg 4, Peterborough 6; Struck out—Cobourg 4, Peterborough 3; First base on called ball—Cobourg 5, Peterborough 2.

Separate Schools.

The Separate Schools in town will re-open on Monday next with a full staff of teachers, and it is to be hoped a full supply of pupils.

Prob's Weather Promises.

The following forecast of the weather for this district for the 24 hours from 1 a. m. to-day, is received from the Toronto Meteorological office:—Light to moderate winds mostly fair weather, with a few local showers, slightly higher temperature.

The Way the Weather has.

Mr. G. W. Morgan, druggist, supplies the following memoranda of the variations of the thermometer and barometer:—

	Thermometer.	Barometer.
9 o'clock	62°	29 37°
1 o'clock	67°	29.33°
3 o'clock	67°	29 30°

Market Mems.

There was a fair attendance at the market this morning and a good supply of market stuff. The "lightning" calculator succeeded in attracting a large audience from among the farmers and no doubt managed to lighten their pockets to some extent. Butter was selling at 20c., eggs from 10 to 11 cts., potatoes 15cts. per peck, and apples from 15 to 25 cents, according to quality.

"Trouble Begins.

On Monday next at 9 o'clock the schools in town, including the Collegiate Institute, will resume operations. The teachers have all returned home from their holidays with recreated energies, and the pupils have had a long cool holiday innings. It is not probable that more than the work of organization for the coming term will be attended to on the opening day. The Ashburnham public school also opens on Monday.

Open Air Temperance Meeting.

This afternoon, about one o'clock, a well-known auctioneer and an equally well-known town councillor engaged in an open air debate, as to the merits of the Scott Act, on the street at Postoffice corner. Both have a stentorian style of speaking, and their voluble contributions to the discussion attracted a large crowd, which was highly pleased if not instructed. If both orators had not been without their dinners, the stream of oratory would have flowed on far into the afternoon.

He Will Succeed.

Mr. James Sheehy announces his intention of opening out a dry goods establishment in the store on George street lately occupied by Messrs Hugh Ross & Co., next door to Mr. W. Leoh's fur store. Mr. Sheehy, during several years spent in the employ of Messrs. T. Dolan & Co. and J. Hackett, has made for himself a reputation that might be envied by many who are his seniors by several years, his intimate acquaintance with all the details of the dry goods business, and his known probity of character having rendered him an invaluable employee, while the geniality and courtesy, which are such marked features of his social character, have made for him innumerable friends in private life. The good wishes of these accompany him in his new venture and cannot fail to materially tend to the success, which we, with them, have every confidence, will attend his efforts. Mr. Sheehy may be depended on to treat all who favor him with their custom in a gentlemanly and business-like manner, and there is no doubt that he will receive a liberal share of public patronage.

Personal.

Mr. J. E. McIntyre, of the Oriental, has returned from Nebraska, where he was visiting a hotel owned by him.

Mr. John A. Nicholls, of Lowell Mass., who opens the Scott Act campaign here on Monday evening, has arrived in town from Toronto.

Rev. Mr. Tovell has returned home from his holiday tour and will occupy the pulpit of the George-street Church in the morning and that of the Charlotte-street Church in the evening.

Rev. F. H. Wallace has returned from his recreation tour among the Thousand Islands, and will preach in Charlotte-street Church in the morning, and in the George-street Church in the evening.

What We may Expect.

Sorrowful faces among the children on Monday morning.

A meeting of the School Board on Tuesday.

A public meeting for discussing exemptions on Friday evening.

Rising temperatures next week.

The P.A.A.A. semi-monthly games on Thursday evening.

What We Would Like to See.

The formula for making wizard oil.

A return match between the Peterborough and Cobourg baseball teams.

A town whose rate of taxation is lower than Peterborough's.

Or that gets better value for its money.

A full and satisfactory understanding among the citizens as to the exemption question.

And inducements offered to manufacturers to locate here.

What they are Saying.

We hope the town will put Charlotte street in good order before we begin to market our grain.—North Monaghan farmers.

day.—Tommy Beavis.

We rattled the Peterboroughs.—The Cobourg baseball men.

Wait till we meet again.—The Peterboroughs.

We want to know all about the Dickson exemption.—The taxpayers.

You'll change your mind when it has been fairly explained to you.—Mayor Cox.

Temperance Sermon.

John A. Nicholls, lecturer for the Grand Division of the Sons of Temperance, will, D. V., occupy the pulpit of the Mark street Methodist church, Ashburnham, to-morrow, (Sunday) evening, at 7 o'clock, All are invited to come and hear this eloquent advocate of temperance. A silver collection at the close of sermon.

Fatal Railway Accident.

Yesterday afternoon Baptiste Brewer, a young conductor in the employ of the G.T.R., while in charge of a loaded gravel train near Bethany, met with a terrible accident which resulted fatally this morning. The unfortunate man was riding on the rear end of his train, which was backing up, when from some unexplained cause he fell off and, falling under the cars, was run over by the entire train, consisting of 7 cars, engine and tender. When picked up he was found to be still living, but fearfully mangled and injured. Both legs and his left arm were broken in two places, his right arm was also broken, and his head terribly cut and lacerated. Every effort was made to alleviate his terrible sufferings, and the best obtainable attention was paid to him, but the survival of such terrible and extensive injuries was impossible, and he expired about 4 o'clock this morning. The deceased was a single man, whose parents live in Waubushene, and his father, who was summoned from that place soon after the accident, this morning removed his sons remains on the morning express.

The Estimates.

The "budget" was submitted at the Council meeting last night by the Chairman of the Finance Committee. The expenditure is estimated at $44,143, and the rate of taxation will be as follows:—Protestant rate, 12-2/10 mills. Roman Catholic rate, 13-7/10 mills. This is a much lower rate than is usual in towns of Peterborough's importance; the rate in Napanee was announced the other day as being 20 mills on the dollar.

To Discuss the Dickson Exemption.

The Council last night arrived at the conclusion that the best way of getting at the opinion of the taxpayers as to the Dickson exemption by-law, would be to hold a public meeting for the purpose of thoroughly discussing it. Accordingly, the Mayor will call a public meeting for next Friday evening, Sept. 6th to be held in Bradburn's Hall, when all pros and cons of this much vexed question will be placed squarely before those of the ratepayers who take sufficient interest in the matter to attend, and every ratepayer is interested and should make a point of being present.

PANTS.

How often does it happen that the general comfort and happiness of man depends on a good fitting pair of pants. Nothing will ruffle a man's temper more than to find when he tries on his latest new pair of pants that they are either too long or too short; that they pinch him so bad in one place that he dare not stoop, and are so large and baggy around the waist and knees that he is afraid he might be taken for the departed "Smith."

A SAFE THING TO DO

ATHLETICS.

Lacrosse.

The St. Pauls met the Torontos on Saturday afternoon on the Rosedale grounds, and, contrary to expectation, managed to win two of the five games played, from the ex-champions of Canada. This speaks well for the Peterborough boys, who beat the U. S. champions in three straight games. The St. Paul men explain, or try to explain their defeat here by saying their goal keeper, Martin, was playing on one leg, being lame of the other. It was singular that his lameness was not discovered till they reached Toronto. Among the names of others who played against the Torontos appears that of W. Kelley. Who is W. Kelley? The Torontos had on a strong team for the occasion, six of the men who are to play in the championship game at Montreal next Saturday, being on the field.

P.A.A.A.

SEMI-MONTHLY GAMES.

The semi-monthly games of the Peterborough Amateur Athletic Association will be held on the Association grounds next Thursday. In order to afford an opportunity for the presence of spectators the games will be contested in the afternoon, commencing at 3.30. A number of capital races will take place, and the management hope to see a large number of spectators on the grounds.

Baseball.

UNDERWRITERS V. MERCHANTS.

The insurance men have got the baseball craze and are going to try conclusions with the merchants at Riverside on Friday afternoon. The merchants feel very cocky over their defeat of the lawyers, and confidently anticipate a new victory. The insurance men, however, have a good opinion of their abilities on the diamond, and are willing to take "risks" to any amount on the result of the event.

REVIEW V. EXAMINER.

The representatives of these offices are assiduously engaged in mastering the mysteries of called balls, foul flys, and other technicalities of the "ball game," in anticipation of their game next Saturday evening. Notwithstanding their inexperience, they may be expected to play in good "form," and are likely to prove themselves adepts at "slugging," and their natural avidity for "pick-ups" is an assurance that they will shine in the field.

Collegiate Institute.

The Collegiate Institute opened to-day. The full staff of teachers reported for duty. There was an increase in the number of pupils, and the prospects for a successful term are exceedingly encouraging.

Peterborough Stoves.

The Powell & Jones Company, owners of the Peterborough Stove Works, have just issued an exceedingly handsome illustrated catalogue of the stoves manufactured by them. The catalogue, which is from the EXAMINER office, is a remarkably fine specimen of typography and binding, the letter press being both clean and artistic, and the illustrations printed in a manner that would do credit to any office. The stove works building is rapidly approaching completion, the brick work being now finished almost to the roof. The machinery has been imported and a great deal of it placed in position, while the remainder is being put in with all expedition, and the company expect to be in full operation in a week from next Monday. They have already booked orders for a large quantity of stoves and further orders are still pouring in, so that when the building and machinery are ready, a large staff of workmen will at once be busily employed.

Personal.

Mr. D. W. Dumble and family returned home on Saturday from their holiday sojourn among the back lakes.

Mr. R. J. Sailsbury left town on Saturday evening, his destination being the Southern States, where, for the benefit of his health, he intends wintering. During his absence his business will be carried on by his brother, Mr. W. Sailsbury.

The many friends of Mr. John Campbell, M. A., formerly classical master in the Peterborough Collegiate Institute, will be pleased to learn that he has been offered and has accepted the position of classical master of Guelph Collegiate Institute. He [illegible] this evening or to-morrow morning for the scene of his new duties. For many years Mr. Campbell has been a respected citizen of Peterborough, and a successful teacher in our Collegiate Institute; and the citizens of Guelph are to be congratulated on securing the services of a gentleman who has shown himself qualified in every respect to perform efficiently and satisfactorily the duties of the position he has assumed. We give Mr. Campbell our congratulations and best wishes for success.

What War Would Cost Russia.

BERLIN, Aug. 29.—The North German Gazette, Prince Bismarck's organ, says an Anglo-Chinese alliance would cost Russia Manchuria in the event of war with England.

A German Protectorate.

ZANZIBAR, Aug. 29.—It is confirmed that Germany has established a protectorate over the whole territory between the Tana and Juba rivers.

Hungarians for the Northwest.

HAZELTON, Pa., August 29.—Over 400 Hungarians and Polanders left to-day for the Canadian Northwest. It is expected a great many more will leave for the same regions in a few days.

Peace Assured.

LONDON, Aug. 29.—It is almost certain that peace between England and Russia on the Afghan question, is now completely assured. The two Governments are busily engaged in arranging the last details of a mutual understanding, and negotiations are proceeding rapidly and harmoniously.

Is Gen. Gordon Really Alive?

LONDON, Aug. 29.—The belief is growing among the military and other friends of Gen. Gordon that he really escaped alive from Khartoum and succeeded in fleeing to the equator. So strong has this faith become that a mission has been organized to search for and secure him. The work of preparing the mission for its enterprise is now almost completed.

Ravages of Yellow Fever.

VERA CRUZ, Aug. 29.—Despite the remarkable cleanliness of the city and the rigid enforcement of sanitary regulations, yellow fever is raging with great virulence, and many deaths are occurring daily. The epidemic has spread to many interior towns and cities and is frightfully fatal. It is also raging with great fury in the large cities of Tehuantepec and Mazatlan, where a filthy condition and want of proper sanitary regulations furnish abundant food for the scourge. Wealthy people are going with their families to higher altitudes.

A Priest Beats His Bishop.

VIENNA, Aug. 29.—The people of Polski, in Austro-Hungarian Croatia, are busy with a clerical scandal. The Bishop of that diocese felt himself compelled to call upon one of his priests regarding some clerical property, and who was a candidate for election. The priest resented this as unnecessary interference with his personal rights, and a quarrel resulted. The priest became frenzied and put the bishop out of the parsonage, chased him through the streets to his residence, then fell upon him and and gave him an unmerciful beating.

Without the Crimes Act.

An Eviction Riot—The Parish Priest Bids Defiance to the Magistrate and Police.

DUBLIN, Aug. 29.—A serious riot occurred to-day at the village of Murlinavat, county Kilkenny, in connection with evictions on the estate of Ballyfaisey. The chapel bells there rang early in the day, and when the bailiffs and police arrived a crowd of 2,000 people confronted them. Mr. Bodkin, the resident magistrate, ordered the parish priest to stop the bells ringing, but the priest refused, and when the magistrate said he would employ force the priest stood at the chapel gate and said those who attempted force would have to pass over his body.

Hot Irish Blood.

DUBLIN, Aug. 28.—A great sensation has been caused in fashionable circles by the thrashing of an officer and the horsewhipping of a deputy lieutenant by Mr. John Pollock, of Tismary, County Galway, well known as high sheriff and owner of estates in Scotland. Some painful domestic differences had led to Mrs. Pollock leaving her husband and going to Scotland. Many stories were current here, several of which coupled the names of Captain Barry, of the Royal Horse Artillery, son of Lord Justice Barry, and Mr. John Albert Blakeney, of Ballybunion, County Galway, Deputy Lieutenant, with that of the erring wife. Mr. Pollock threatened to horsewhip both gentlemen, and this week he came to Dublin horse show, met Captain Barry leaving Kildare street club, pulled him off an outside car as he was getting on, and struck him in the face and then on the head with a stick. Friends interposed and separated the combatants. Mr. Pollock called out: "Barry, you know where to find me if you want any satisfaction," and drove to a house on Burlington Road where Blakeney was to dine, and waited until Blakeney drove up. Pollock seized hold of him in front of the house and thrashed him soundly with a horsewhip. The Deputy-Lieutenant bellowed for help, but made not the slightest resistance.

Riel Shall not Hang.

That is, if French-Canadian Emigrants Can Prevent It.

ROCHESTER, N.Y., Aug. 30.—A largely attended and enthusiastic meeting of French-Canadians of this city was held this afternoon in behalf of Riel. Addresses were made by prominent Frenchmen of this city, and a petition addressed to Secretary Bayard asking for the interposition of the United States government was unanimously adopted. The petition states that Riel is a citizen of the United States, and that his trial was not a fair one. The petition is signed by all the French residents of the city.

MADRID, Aug. 29.—There were 3,575 new cases of cholera, and 450 deaths in Spain yesterday.

MADRID, Aug. 30.—Returns from the cholera infected districts in Spain for Saturday show 3,617 new cases and 1,171 deaths.

A riot occurred at Almeya in Andalusia. The increasing cholera mortality having driven most of the wealthy residents from the city, a large number of poor people were deprived of employment. This desertion on the part of the rich employers incensed the laboring people and a feeling of indignation culminated in a riotous outbreak. Many of the houses of the wealthy were wrecked by the mob. The soldiers were called out and in the conflicts that ensued eight persons were killed and 12 others wounded.

MARSEILLES, Aug. 30.—There were fifty-three deaths from cholera in this city on Saturday and 24 to-day. There are now 70 patients under treatment at the Pharo hospital.

TOULON, Aug. 30.—There were 56 deaths on Saturday and 20 to-day from cholera. The weather is cooler. Upwards of 7000 persons have fled from the city and about 100 shops are closed.

Minden.

It will be seen by advertisement in our columns to-day that our present issue appears under somewhat changed circumstances, Mr. W. W. Brown, formerly connected with this journal, having disposed of his interest therein to Geo. H. Small, who will in future carry on the business in all its departments the same as heretofore.—Minden Echo.

Millbrook.

The Messenger says:—"Monday last, was almost continuously wet, the rain teeming down pretty heavily, on several occasions. Notwithstanding the display of dampness, the "Free and Independent" faced the "cooling strame," to aid in Ward-ing off the Preston calamity." A community that tolerates a newspaper capable of perpetrating such a hideous pair of puns, couldn't be expected to return anything but a Tory.

Belleville.

An immense traffic in live stock is going on over the Grand Trunk Railway. It is estimated that between 600 and 700 car loads passed through Belleville during the 24 hours ending at 8 a.m. Saturday morning.

A fatal accident occurred on the steamer Hero Saturday morning about seven o'clock, three miles north of Thompson's Point, by which Engineer Dickson was scalded to death. The steamer left here at four o'clock Saturday for the Thousand Islands with a small number of passengers on board. When near Thompson's Point the passengers and hands on the boat were alarmed by a sharp report followed by a hissing noise, as if steam was escaping from the boiler. At first some thought that the steamer was on fire, and the passengers became terribly frightened but on entering the hold it was discovered that a plug in the boiler had been blown out. The body of Dickson was found lying near by. Life was almost extinct. He had been scalded to death by the escaping steam almost in an instant.

Fenelon Falls.

Two or three days ago Mr. Joseph Nevison showed us a natural curiosity which grew in his garden on Fidler's hill. It was a cluster of fifteen turnip radishes all united together and growing from one stem.

Saturday last our neighbor Mr. John Louden had a little daughter added to his family. The 22nd of August is not only the new baby's birthday, but it is also Mr. Louden's his brother's and his mother's, making four members of one family who will have to simultaneously wish each other "many happy returns of the day."

Last week a very severe storm passed over this section of country. During its progress a span of horses owned by Mr. Alexander Rutherford, who lives not far from Powles's corners, in Fenelon, were struck by lightning and killed. Mr. Rutherford put them into the stable with their harness on, and when he returned shortly afterwards to unharness them he found them lying dead. One was slightly singed on the hips, but the other had no marks whatever. The lightning ran down the gable end of the stable.—Gazette.

Richard Powell's Twenty Sons.

It was at Bakley's Run that old Richard Powell and his family, famous for its numbers, lived over a century ago. During his life, Powell took great pleasure in boasting of his large family. It was his habit to remark: "I have twenty sons and each one has a sister."—Those to whom he used to relate this naturally asked: "What! Forty children? Can it be possible?" Then the old man would laughingly explain that he had twenty sons and one daughter, so each boy therefore had a sister.

Eighteen of the sons were in the war of the Revolution, and were noted for their bravery and good fighting qualities. Many were wounded at various times, and three of them, as far as now known by the descendants, were killed. Previous to the war the sons resided with their parents on a large farm at Bakley's Run, and aided in working the farm under the direction of their father. They are described as having been large, well developed and strong men, and their appearance in the field was a sight well worth seeing. The daughter wandered off into the woods one day when only 8 years old. She lost her way and for three days and nights nothing was seen of her. The brothers and their friends industriously searched for the child, and when she was discovered she had lost her reason. She remained an imbecile all her life. In time the sons married. Some remained at the old homestead, while others took up residences in other parts of the State. Their descendants are now scattered all over New Jersey in large numbers.—Philadelphia Record.

SIR CHARLES TUPPER.

The Conservative journals are very fond of picturing the Liberal party as in the last throes of dissolution. But it appears also that everything is not serene in the Tory camp. The cohesive force of the Conservative party is Sir John. "While stands the coliseum Rome shall stand." While Sir John is able to maintain his present position the party may hang together, but when he passes away or resigns the leadership, there will be a beautiful kettle of fish. Already there are several aspirants for the Chieftain's shoes. Of these Sir Charles Tupper seems to have the best chance. Sir John has promised Sir Charles the place, and was to have given possession after the first session subsequent to his return to power. But the lust of power was too strong, and the leader has held on to the position and all that it implies. Still the High Commissioner is not discouraged; he still has hope. His presence in the country is explainable in no other way than by assuming that he has deserted the high responsibilities of his London position to push his personal aims. Sir Charles Tupper has never shone as a patriot; and he declines to sacrifice himself for the benefit of his country. The High Commissionership in London is a good thing financially, but Sir Charles knows that he can reap for himself both glory and gain by getting the leadership of the party. He has no nice scruples against making any position of responsibility in which he may be placed subservient to the promotion of his personal interests. Sir Charles is in this country after something, and he has to have it this time or there will be serious trouble. Sir John will be willing to give him anything but the leadership, no matter how much the people have to pay for Sir Charles' pacification. The latter knows his value to the party. He knows that he is the only man in the party, besides Sir John, of what may be called first-rate ability. Matters went at rather loose ends in the debates of last session on the Tory side of the House for want of Sir Charles' ballast of brains. Sir John would be glad of his former colleague's assistance, but he is jealous of Sir Charles Tupper's ability, and the latter declines to play second fiddle any longer. The settlement of this question will tax the ingenuity of Sir John to its utmost, but he will find a way out of the difficulty in some way—in any way besides a straight-forward, honorable one—and the people's interests will be almost sure to be sacrificed.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Whether a universal language is desirable or not things are tending towards it. In number one half, and in circulation two-thirds, of the newspapers published in the world are in English, and the proportion is increasing every year.

A despatch states that Sir Adolph Caron, Minister of Militia, will be at the Toronto Volunteer Review "in person." What other way could he be there? He might send, of course, his decorations as proxy. He is always with the volunteers in spirit, and that accounts for the persistent neglect which the active militia receives at his hands.

Dr. Canniff, medical health officer in Toronto, recommends the Board of School Trustees to enforce the regulation that no unvaccinated child be admitted to the public schools. It appears that there are many parents who either do not care whether their children are vaccinated or not, or who are on principle opposed to the precaution.

It seems that Sir Francis Hincks, who succumbed to the smallpox, which has been raging with great virulence in Montreal for several weeks, was not vaccinated, and it is stated as a singular coincidence that Peter Carroll, who contested the county of Oxford against Sir Francis Hincks, also died of the same disease, smallpox, that carried off the latter. Mr. Carroll also, the Woodstock Times says, caught the disease in Montreal, on his return from England in 1876.

Now that there is a joint librarianship at Ottawa, demands are being made upon the Government that other offices be duplicated. It is proposed to divide the Department of Agriculture so as to provide for a French and an English Deputy Minister as soon as Dr. Taché retires. It is also proposed that there shall be a Deputy Speaker of Senate, two Adjutant-Generals of Militia, and that the system of duplicating important public offices shall be made general! This would be strictly in accord with the present Government's policy of wasting the people's money in rewarding political party heelers.

At a very largely attended meeting of Ottawa Liberals, recently held, a resolution was unanimously passed tendering the thanks of the Association to the Honorable Edward Blake and the Liberal representatives in Parliament for their devoted and signal services to the country during the late protracted and eventful session of the Parliament of Canada.

There is a law in the United States which forbids any increase in the forces employed on Government work within sixty days of an election. Such a law would completely paralyze the present Dominion Government, by taking one of the chief electioneering dodges out of their hands. It would be injurious to Canada to have such a law in force here. The present Government does not construct public works on the principle of their being needed, but as a means of bribing the electors. We have had a big batch of postal and customs offices erected in Canada, during the past three years, and almost every one of them has been the fulfilment of election promises, made as said prior to the election of 1882. In Peterborough, however, the plan does not seem to work well. Either the local wire pullers are without influence or they have so much influence that the Government hasn't courage enough to settle the little family quarrel that has arisen out of the post office site question, by making a choice. Happily for us, the United States law referred to, is not in force here, and we may therefore look confidently to having a new post office—promised—on the eve of the coming general elections in 1887.

Cheese Markets.

BROCKVILLE, Aug. 27.—About 4,500 boxes of cheese were offered, and 2,200 sold at 7½ to 7⅞., the latter price for one lot of fancy August make.

LISTOWEL, Aug. 28.—At the cheese fair 27 factories registered 11,065 boxes principally July make, with a few August lots. The sales were 1,200 boxes at 7c., 440 at 7⅛c., 400 at 7¼c., and 2,060 at 8c. Cables, 39s.; market lively. Stock about equal parts colored and pale. Ten buyers were present.

Hanlan in a Challenging Mood.

NEW YORK, August 29.—Hanlan has been somewhat "cut up" by the talk of Courtney and his backers at Geneva, and announces that he will, to-day, issue a challenge, and post a forfeit, to row Courtney a three mile race one day and collar his mate the next day, for from $1,000 to $2,000 a side and place the money in well known and responsible hands. In regard to a double-scull race he will post a forfeit to row Courtney and Conley in a three mile race against himself and mate for $1000 or $2000 a side. He will also match his mate against either Courtney or his mate Conley, a three mile race for $1,000 a side.

Hot Weather Ahead.

The nights as well as the days for the past week have been unusually chilly, but a meteorological expert asserts that we have yet to go through the most trying portion of the summer—within the next few days, there will be very warm days, followed by nocturnal chills—weather that will give a greater shock to the human system than it can undergo with impunity, however grateful the "cool wave" succeeding a "hot wave" may be. To meet it the system should be forearmed by the substitution of light flannel undergarments in lieu of the flimsy gauze which most Canadians don in June. If people generally would now doff their thin undergarments and put on light flannel the number of cases of malarial fever would be incredibly small, even in the marshy districts. The necessity for this modification of dress will be discovered after one or two frosts occur and so-called malaria is in the system. But as the thermal range between noon and night on many of the remaining days of the warm season will now constantly increase, this is the time to guard the body, already debilitated by the hot weather, against further debilitation by August and autumnal night chills.

The Lumber Trade.

Brighter Prospects for the future—Ottawa's Hopes.

OTTAWA, Aug. 28.—Mr. R. M. Cox, a Liverpool lumber merchant, speaks glowingly of the present state of the sawn lumber trade. He says Ottawa lumbermen are doing a more flourishing trade now than for years past, as the prices in all grades have advanced from three to four per cent on an average. This owing to the boom at present prevailing on the English market. While American prices are a shade less than last year, English prices average seven per cent more, and a larger proportion of lumber has been exported to England this year than before. The tendency to import sawn lumber is assuming a greater magnitude, and the exportation of square and fancy timber is decreasing. Mr. Cox says that no timber district on the continent of America has done as well as Ottawa during the last six months. Alluding to the Canadian trade in general, he said that indications point to the centralization of the sawn lumber trade in Eastern Canada at Ottawa. The larger of the Quebec mills are cutting little this year, owing to the fact that they cannot successfully compete with Ottawa lumber dealers. The limits from which the Quebec mills are fed are becoming depleted of the material necessary for manufacturing marketable lumber whereas Ottawa lumber men have almost exhaustless resources to draw upon.

A Social Shocked by Death.

Sudden End of Deacon Lyon at Jarvis Street Baptist Church, Toronto.

There was a sad occurrence at the Jarvis street Baptist church, Toronto, on the occasion of a reception social to Rev. Dr. Thomas, pastor of the church, on his return from England. While James F. Lyon, an old and esteemed member of the congregation, was delivering an address of welcome he reeled to the left, fell off the platform, and died in a few seconds.

The deceased had only got nicely into his discourse, having spoken about five minutes. On the platform with him were Rev. Dr. Thomas and Dr. E. H. Buchan, of the asylum, who acted as chairman. Dr. Buchan opened with a short address, and after prayer, called on Mr. Lyon for the address of welcome. The sad affair created profound sorrow among all present. Mrs. Lyon yielded to uncontrollable grief. The deceased was about 64 years of age, and resided at 380 Sherbourne street. He came to this country many years ago from England, and for 28 years was a deacon of the church. He also was superintendent of the Sunday school for a number of years. He was a senior member of the wholesale drug firm of J. F. Lyon & Co., at 67 Jarvis street. He leaves a wife and two adopted daughters.

ALMOST A TRAGEDY.

It might be truly said that a band of music welcomed them upon their arrival, for as the hotel coach drove up to the door, Mr. and Mrs. Winsum, the sole occupants, stepped out to the tune of "See the Conquering Hero Comes," one of the various melodies with which the numerous guests of the Mountain House were entertained on pleasant afternoons.

Dark hair and eyes, well-cut features, broad shoulders, five feet ten, such was Mr. Frank Winsum, who sprang first from the clumsy vehicle and assisted a little lady with golden hair, violet eyes, perfect complexion, retrousse nose—Mrs. Frank Winsum.

The bridal couple, for such they proved to be, were received with undisguised satisfaction.

We were getting tired of the despotic control exercised by Mrs. Vandeville, a tall dignified woman exceedingly slender, with a Roman nose, piercing black eyes, and an imperious manner, which overawed most of us, more particularly her husband, a merchant man, who was a terror in his office and a slave at home.

She had directed the social element of Mountain House for a month past, and had so completely subjected its inmates, that I fancy we hardly ventured to take a drive before consulting her as to the best road.

Mrs. Vandeville, who was the maternal parent of two auburn-haired daughters, eyed the fascinating bride with cold suspicion.

"Who are these persons?" she said in a severe tone, looking round her small circle of adherents. "We cannot be too careful. We are wives" this with a scathing look at her timid spouse "and mothers" casting a sentimental glance at her fair Progeny, who immediately began to whisper "and it is due to our families that we should find out exactly who these Winsums are before allowing ourselves to become intimate with them."

Although fully agreeing with their leader that evening, the next day an introduction to the enemy completely routed their prejudices, and one and all shamelessly went over to the other side without instituting a single enquiry as to their antecedents, or, in fact, asking anything about them.

Mrs. Vandeville accepted the situation, but it was evident she did not intend to relinquish the field without a struggle.

Blowing Women.

A musician says: "Women are daily acquiring business qualifications long considered beyond their reach, and I do not doubt that their scope will soon include playing in bands. A day or two ago I read an account of some experiments with brass instruments in Germany. Some doctor there, the name of whom I forgot, said blowing horns would cure consumption if practiced before the disease had taken firm hold. They got some ladies to try the plan and nearly half the number recovered. I attribute the good health of my wife to the same practice. When I married her she was very delicate, but now she tips the beam at 187, the gain being the result of her efforts with the cornet. She has been playing for thirteen years, but can't make good music, simply because she has no musical talent. It is amusing to see a woman learning. How she draws long breaths and puffs out her cheeks, and blows as if she was a bellows in a blacksmith shop and the fate of the world depended on her getting the fire glowing. They'll take a cornet, for instance, an instrument difficult to handle properly, and exhaust all their breath at a spurt, then gradually rise to the tips of their toes while elevating the cornet above their heads, looking for all the world as if they were trying to force wind from their shoetops."

"Little Alec's" Dogs.

A remarkable element of Mr. Stephens' life, and one which will give great insight into his character, was his love for his friends, both man and beast, writes a correspondent. His dogs enter as largely into his friendly letters as do state questions, and his private secretary tells me that when he was at home, at Liberty hall, he spent one hour each day going about among his stock, petting the horses, cows, and sheep, and lingering long over the colts, lambs, and little pigs. His dogs accompanied him during these expeditions, receiving as much attention from him during their gambols as though they were human. Like Walter Scott, he looked upon them as sympathetic friends rather than as mere dumb brutes. Whether riding, walking, or studying, they were beside him, and at night they had a place at the foot of his bed, or an especial couch of coffee sacks was made up for them in the library adjoining his chamber. He delighted in teaching them tricks, in watching their queer natures, and respected their feelings as much as any father ever did those of his child. Rio's wild howling affects him to tears, he rejoices in the wild glee of Sir Bingo Binks, and when Troupe dies he feels as if he had lost one of his dearest friends.

Perfectly Harmless.

At Cross Keys my horse fell lame, and as night was coming on I gave up the idea of reaching Port Republic and made for the nearest farm-house. The people were kindness itself, and when bed-time came they gave me the bedroom off the parlor and a bed so high and wide and luxurious that I was asleep in five minutes. In less than an hour the old farmer rapped on the door and put his head into the room and queried:

"Stranger from Michigan, are ye awake?"

"Yes."

"Is everything all right?"

"Oh, yes."

"You ain't nervous, are ye?"

"Not a bit."

"I just looked in to tell ye that we are bothered a good deal with milk-snakes. The old woman says there was one racing around this room to-day, and she meant to have driven it out but forgot to. They are harmless as kittens, you know, and if you feel one in bed with you don't feel a bit alarmed! Good night."

It was awful good in him, but he doesn't know to this day that I piled out of that bed like a streak o' lightning, got into my clothes, and then skipped through the window and slept in the barn all night.—M Quad.

Chapter XIII—Continued.

"It is too late to talk about business to-night," said Anthony as his sister left the room.

"You had better take this opportunity. I find I must leave England to-morrow."

Anthony, having no wish to let his uncle escape without an explanation, reseated himself.

"Very well," he said; "but there is no need to have strangers present."

"They are scarcely strangers. They are friends of mine, who will vouch for the truth of what I am going to say."

"I will not have my affairs talked about before a man like that," said Anthony, with a motion of contempt toward Macari.

The two men were conversing in a low tone. Pauline was not far off, and neither wished to alarm her by high words or by the appearance of a pending quarrel; but Macari heard the remark and saw the gesture. His eyes blazed and he leaned forward toward young March.

"It may be in a few days," he said, "you will be willing enough to give me freely the gift you refused a short time ago."

Ceneri noticed that the speaker's right hand was inside the breast of his coat, but this being a favorite attitude of his, thought nothing of it.

Anthony did not condescend to reply. He turned from the man with a look of utter contempt—a look which, no doubt, drove Macari almost beside himself with rage.

"Before we talk about anything else," he said to his uncle, "I shall insist that from now Pauline is placed under my care. Neither she nor her fortune shall become the prey of a low-bred, beggarly Italian adventurer like this man, your friend."

These were the last words the poor boy ever spoke. Macari took one step toward him—he made no exclamation of rage—hissed out no oath which might warn his victim. Grasped in his right hand the long bright steel leaped from its lurking place, and as Anthony March looked up, and then threw himself back in his chair to avoid him, the blow was struck downward with all the force of that strong arm—the point of the dagger entering just below the collar-bone and absolutely transfixing the heart. Anthony March was silenced forever!

Then, even as he fell, Pauline's song stopped, and her cry of horror rang through the room. From her seat at the piano she could see what had happened. Is it any wonder that the sight bereft her of her senses?

Macari was standing over his victim. Ceneri was stupefied at the crime which in a moment had obviated any necessity for carrying out his wild plot. The only one who seemed in possession of his wits was Petroff. It was imperative that Pauline should be silenced. Her cries would alarm the neighbors. He rushed forward, and throwing a large woolen sofa-cover over her head, placed her on the couch, where he held her by force.

At that moment I made my frantic entrance—blind and helpless, but, for all they knew, a messenger of vengeance.

Even the ruthless Macari was staggered at my appearance. It was Ceneri who, following the instincts of self-preservation, drew a pistol and cooked it. It was he who understood the meaning of my passionate appeal to their mercy—he who, he averred, saved my life.

Macari, as soon as he recovered from his surprise, insisted that I should share Anthony March's fate. His dagger was once more raised to take human life, whilst Petroff, who had been forced by the new turn of affairs to leave Pauline, pinned me down where I had fallen. Ceneri struck the steel aside and saved me. He examined my eyes and vouched for the truth of my statement. There was no time for recriminations or accusations, but he swore that another murder should not be committed.

Petroff supported him, and Macari at last sullenly yielded, with the stipulation that I should be disposed of in the manner already related. Had the means been at hand, I should have been drugged at once; as it was, the old servant, who as yet knew nothing of the tragedy which had taken place, was roused up and sent out in search of the needful draught. The accomplices dared not let me leave their sight, so I was compelled to sit and listen to all their actions.

Why did Ceneri not denounce the murder? Why was he, at least, and accessory after the crime? I can only believe that he was a worse man than he confessed himself to be, or that he trembled at his share in the transaction. After all, he had been planning a crime almost as black, and when the truth as to the trust money was known, no jury in the world would have acquitted him. Perhaps both he and Petroff held human life lightly; their hands were certainly not clean from political assassinations. Feeling that a trial must go hard with them, they threw their lot in with Macari's and at once set about baffling inquiry and hiding all traces of the crime. From that moment there was little to choose between the degrees in criminality of the three men.

Now that they were all sailing in the same boat, they had little doubt of success. Teresa was perforce taken into their confidence. This was no matter, as, devoted to Ceneri, she would have aided in a dozen murders had her master decreed them. First of all, they must get rid of me. Petroff—for Ceneri would not trust me in Macari's hands—went out and found a belated cab. For a handsome consideration the driver consented to lend it to him for an hour and a half. It was still night, so there was no difficulty in carrying my senseless form to it without observation.

Petroff drove off, and having deposited me in a by-way a long distance from the house, returned the cab to its owner and rejoined his companions.

And now for Pauline. Her moans had gradually died away, and she lay in a death-like stupor. The great danger to the accomplices would be from her. Until she recovered nothing could be done save to carry her to her room and place her under Teresa's charge. When she awoke they must decide what course to pursue.

But the pressing thing was, how to make away with the dead body of the murdered man. All sorts of plans were discussed, until one at last was adopted, the very audacity of which no doubt made it a success. They were now growing desperate and prepared to risk much.

Early in the morning a letter was dispatched to Anthony Blodgins, saying that Mr. March had been taken seriously ill the night before, and was at his uncle's. This served to stop any inquiry from that quarter. In the meantime the poor young fellow had been laid out as decently as possible, and with everything that could be done to suggest a natural death. A doctor's certificate of death was then forged. Ceneri did not tell me how the form was obtained. The man he got it from knew nothing of its object. An undertaker then was ordered to send a coffin and deal case for the same the next night. The body, in Ceneri's presence, was simply placed inside it, with none of the usual paraphernalia, the reason given for such apparent indecency being that it was only a temporary arrangement, as it was to be taken abroad for interment. The undertaker marveled, but being well paid, held his peace. Then, by the aid of the forged certificate, the proper formalities were complied with, and in two days' time the three men in the garb of mourners, were traveling to Italy with the body of their victim. There was nothing to stop them, nothing suspicious in their manner or in the circumstances of the case. They actually took the coffin to the town where Anthony's mother died, and they buried the son by the side of the mother, with his name and the date of his death recorded on the stone. Then they felt safe from everybody except Pauline.

They were safe even from her. When she at last awoke from her stupor, even Teresa could see that something had gone wrong. She said nothing about the scene she had witnessed; she asked no questions. Her past had vanished. According to instructions given her, Teresa, as soon as possible, took her to join Ceneri in Italy, and he saw that Macari's crime had deprived the brother of life and the sister of reason.

No search or inquiry was made for Anthony March. Carrying out his bold plan to the very letter, Ceneri instructed an agent to take possession of his few personal effects at his lodgings, and to inform the people there that he had died at his house and been taken to Italy to be buried with his mother. A few friends for awhile regretted a companion, and there was an end of the affair. Nothing having been heard of the blind man, it was supposed he had been wise enough to keep his own counsel.

Months and months passed by, whilst Pauline remained in the same state. Teresa took charge of her, and lived with her in Turin until that time when I saw them at San Giovanni. Ceneri, who had no fixed home, saw little of the girl. His presence did not awaken any painful recollections in her mind, but to him the sight of his niece was unbearable. It recalled what he was eager to forget. She never seemed happy in Italy; in her uncertain way she was pining for England. Anxious to get her out of his sight, he had consented that Teresa should take her to London—had, in fact, come to Turin that particular day to arrange as to their departure. Macari, who, even with a brother's blood between them, considered her in some way his property, accompanied him. He had been continually urging Ceneri to let him marry her, even as she was now. He had threatened to carry her off by force. He had sworn she should be his. She remembered nothing—why should he not wed her?

Bad as Ceneri was, he had recoiled from this. He would even, had it been possible, have broken off all intercourse with Macari; but the men were too deep in each other's secrets to be divided on account of a crime, however atrocious; so he sent Pauline to England. There she was safe from Macari. Then came my proposal, the acceptance of which would take her, at my expense, entirely off his hands and out of his companion's way.

Hence our strange marriage, which even now he justified by saying that should the girl grow attached to any one, should any feeling corresponding to affection be awakened in her clouded mind—that mind would gradually be built up again.

This, not in his own words, was Ceneri's tale. I now knew all I wanted to know. Perhaps he had painted himself in better colors than he deserved; but he had given me the whole dark history freely and unreservedly, and in spite of the loathing and abhorrence with which he now inspired me, I felt that he had told me the truth.

CHAPTER XIV.

DOES SHE REMEMBER.

It was time to bring our interview to an end. It had lasted so long that the civil captain had more than once peeped in with a significant look on his face, as much as to say there was such a thing as overstepping the limits of even such an authority as I held. I had no desire to protract the conversation with the convict. The object of my long journey had been attained. I had learned all that I could learn. I knew Pauline's history. The crime had been fully confessed. The man with me had no claim upon my consideration. Even had I felt inclined to help him I had no means of so doing. Why should I linger?

But I did linger for awhile. The thought that my rising and giving the signal that my business was finished, would immediately consign the prisoner to that loathsome den from which he had emerged, was inexpressibly painful to me. Every moment I could keep him with me would be precious to him. Never again would he see the face of a friend or acquaintance.

He had ceased speaking. He sat with his head bent forward; his eyes resting on the ground. A tattered, haggard, hopeless wretch; so broken down that one dare not reproach him. I watched him in silence.

Presently he spoke: "You can find no excuse for me, Mr. Vaughan?"

"None," I said. "It seems to me there is little to choose between you and your associates."

The erection of the main building will not be proceeded with this year, but the necessary accommodation will be provided in marquees of large size which will be procured from Ottawa.

Justice's Justice.

Francis Martin was charged, at the Police Court this morning, with having been drunk and disorderly on the Sabbath. He admitted the offence which he explained by saying that he met a man who gave him a couple of horns, and that being somewhat weak in the head, owing to a wound he received while engaged in the Northwest transportation service during the late rebellion, he had been overcome by the effects of them. As the two horns had overcome the wounded head that he in turn wanted to overcome everybody who came near him, the magistrate fined him $1 and costs, which he paid.

A Suspicious Departure.

On Wednesday last a reporter of THE EXAMINER, while watching the departure of a train bound to Toronto, was attracted by the suspicious movements of two respectably dressed young men, who appeared on the platform just as the train was on the point of leaving. Their hats were pulled over their eyes, and they gazed furtively around as if fearing to meet the eye of some one they knew, and, jumping hastily on the cars were evidently much relieved when the train pulled out before any such person hove in sight. The reporter smelt a rat, and making some inquiries regarding the two travellers, ascertained that they were two well-known young law students who had hitherto been held in high esteem, and against whom the breath of suspicion had never been raised; yet, their conduct was such that he made a mental memorandum of the affair and awaited developments. The latter came this morning in the shape of an announcement that Messrs. J. W. Bennett and J. P. Eastwood, students-at law in the offices of Messrs. Ponsette & Roger and E. H. D. Hall, respectively, had successfully passed their second intermediate examinations at Osgoode Hall, Toronto. The truth at once flashed upon the reporter's mind. The suspicious travellers were friends Bennett and Eastwood, who, with the modesty that always accompanies true merit, were in fear and trembling making their way to Osgoode Hall to pass the dread ordeal, and, fearing they might not be successful, did not want to have the fact of their departure known. THE EXAMINER has great pleasure in adding its congratulations to the many, doubtless received already by the two aspiring and successful "Chitty-lings."

MIDNIGHT MARAUDERS.

Another Attempted Burglary on Water Street.

Thieves Frustrated.

It is becoming more and more evident that there are in town at the present time a pair, if not more, of daring criminals, who, taking advantage of the absence of the occupants of houses on their holidays, are coolly going around taking observation of such houses, with the intention, during the darkness of the night, of returning, breaking into and plundering them. Just a week ago the robbery of Mr. E. H. D. Hall's residence and the attempted burglary of Dr. Halliday's on the Saturday night were chronicled, and this morning a similar, though fortunately futile, attempt at burglary is reported. Mr. E. B. Edwards, town solicitor, is at present out of town, and it seems that the burglars marked this house down as a fit scene for their nefarious midnight operations. There was one little thing, however, which put their calculations somewhat out, and that was the presence in the house of two young men, Nelson Brown and E. Mason, who have been sleeping there in the absence of the proprietor. Between three and four o'clock this morning these young men were aroused by a noise in the house, and arming themselves with a loaded rifle that had been left handy for such an emergency, made their way to the dining room, whence the noise proceeded. On entering the room they were just in time to see the retreating figures of two men, one of whom made his exit by the door, while the other, not standing on the order of his going, jumped through the open window. The young men gave chase, and fired two shots after the marauders, who climbed over a fence into the grounds of the George street Methodist church, and from there made their escape by way of George street, the pursuers losing sight of them in the darkness. On returning to the house Messrs. Brown and Mason found that although they had been unable to catch the thieves, they had arrived on the scene just in time to prevent them

GETTING AWAY WITH A VALUABLE BOOTY.

The burglars had gained entrance to the house by the dining room window which faces on McDonnell street, breaking the shutter and a pane of glass in doing so. They appear then to have gone methodically to work to collect all the valuable articles they could lay their hands on, for in the centre of the room were deposited all the silver and plated ware that the room contained, ready to be packed up and taken away. Turning their attention then to other parts of the house, they made an attempt to burst open the door between the dining room and parlor, but in doing this made the noise that disturbed the occupants of the house, and led to their own somewhat premature departure. There is no doubt that these burglaries have been deliberately planned and coolly executed by bold thieves who are well acquainted with the town. The darkness of last night prevented the young men, Brown and Mason, from seeing clearly their features, but they think they could identify them by their general appearance, and it is altogether likely the scamps will be brought to justice. Until they are, great precaution on the part of citizens will need to be observed, for these miscreants, made bolder by the immunity from capture they have enjoyed, will not cease their depredations until they have made a big haul, or until they have themselves been hauled to the goal. A little extra vigilance on the part of the nightwatchmen, too, would not be misplaced; of course it is not possible for one man to be everywhere at once, but any suspicious parties seen hanging round late at night should be shadowed and arrested on the first attempt to enter any premises.

Range and Rifle.

The regular monthly meeting of the Peterborough Rifle Association will be held next Thursday afternoon. This will be the last of the four monthly matches, and will decide the final ownership of the Ontario medal, in the competition for which Mr. Cameron is at present at the head of the list.

The First Gun.

The famous lecturer, Mr. John A. Nicholls, will open the platform campaign in connection with the Scott Act contest at the Opera House to-night. Meeting will commence at 8 prompt. Chair will be taken by Geo. A. Cox, Esq. Discussion and questions invited.

Prob's Weather Promises.

The following forecast of the weather for this district for the 24 hours from 1 a. m. to-day, is received from the Toronto Meteorological office:—Moderate south-west winds, generally fair weather, with a few light local showers; not much change in temperature.

The Lock Works.

A meeting of the Peterborough Lock Manufacturing Company was held on Saturday afternoon for the purpose of organization, etc. The following officers were elected:—President, Mr. J. Stevenson; Secretary, C. H. Crofts; General Manager, Thos. Brooks. The following directorate was also elected, Messrs. J. Stevenson, Geo. A. Cox, John Burnham, M. P., George Hilliard, M. P., John Carnegie, M.P.P. and Thomas Brooks. The amount of the capital stock of the company is $50,000, of which $30,000 has already been paid up. The personnel of the directorate is a sufficient assurance that the business will be prosecuted with energy and tact, while, in Mr. Brooks, the company have secured a general manager who thoroughly understands every detail of the business. Judging from the sample locks that are exhibited, there is every reason to believe that the company will turn out an article the equal of anything on the market, and a large demand for their goods may be confidently anticipated.

W.C.T.U. are holding their regular meeting this afternoon.

Subscription.

Mr. Thomas Menzies, town agent for the G. T. R. and several steamship lines, has just had a large and handsome enamelled sign placed on his ticket office window. The letters are the largest of their kind that have yet been used in town.

The Public Schools.

About half-past eight this morning the throngs of boys and girls to be seen on the streets with books and bags, told that the public schools re-opened this morning, and with a full attendance too. The youngsters who passed the promotion examination, could be told by his or her jaunty air, dashed however with a shade of concern as to what awaited them in their new sphere of mischief and scholastic achievement.

Try Our Style.

The city authorities of Winnipeg are threatening to discontinue the use of the electric light, unless the contractors at once produce a marked improvement in its quality. If the city fathers of Winnipeg had a first-class electric light, such as Peterborough possesses, there could be no ground for complaint. The only grumbling would come from the sun, whose jealousy of our electric light is so great that old Sol has sulked during the past week, and has hardly shown his face an hour a day. Just try our style, Winnipeg aldermen, and you will be electrified with delight.

What We may Expect.

Mr. J. A. Nicholls to speak on the Scott Act to-night.

A lively time at the Lakefield celebration.

Our lacrosse boys to want to try their hands with the Torontos.

And to get badly downed if they do.

Finer weather.

And overcoats to be laid away again.

What We Would Like to See.

A continuation of the present weather.

The lightning calculator's lungs.

Stray cattle kept off the streets on Sunday.

Our police on the alert for those burglars.

And the latter gentlemen adorned with handcuffs.

A large attendance at the Lakefield civic holiday to-morrow.

And fine weather.

What they are Saying.

The Peterboroughs must be a pretty good lacrosse club.—The Torontos.

You bet your life.—The St. Paul's.

I am a Peterborough man.—Hon. Thos. White.

We've passed our exams all right.—J. P. Eastwood and J. W. Bennett.

We made those burglars jump.—Nelse Brown and Ed. Mason.

But you didn't catch us.—The burglars.

I must be on the lookout for those burglars.—Chief Johnston.

PANTS.

How often does it happen that the general comfort and happiness of man depends on a good fitting pair of pants. Nothing will ruffle a man's temper more than to find when he tries on his latest new pair of pants that they are either too long or too short; that they pinch him so bad in one place that he dare not stoop, and are so large and baggy around the waist and knees that he is afraid he might be taken for the departed "Smith."

THE SCOTT ACT.

Inaugural Meeting in Bradburn's Hall.

The Maine Argument.

The inaugural meeting of a series which are to be held in Peterborough for the purpose of discussing and advocating the passage of the Scott Act in this county was held last evening in Bradburn's Hall. It had been announced that the chair would be taken by Mayor Cox, but as he did not arrive in town from Toronto until some minutes after the time for which the meeting was announced, that position was filled by Dr. Fife, though at a later hour Mr. Cox did arrive and take a seat on the platform, upon which were also seated the following gentlemen: Rev's. I. Tovell, F. H. Wallace, Geo. Davis, F. McAmmond and Mr. Fessey, organizer for the county. The hall was crowded to the doors, the audience consisting of people of all ranks and ages, all of whom evinced a lively interest in the movement. The proceedings were opened by singing a hymn, after which Rev. G. Davis opened the meeting with prayer. The chairman then related to the audience the circumstances under which it had been decided to submit the Scott Act in the county, and stated that as the day had now been appointed for taking a vote on the Scott Act, it was in order that some of the principles of that Act might be made clear to them, that they were assembled, After the hymn "Hold the Fort" had been sung, the speaker of the evening, Mr. J. T. Nicholls, was introduced by the chairman.

That gentleman, after a few preliminary remarks, said it afforded him pleasure to meet the audience gathered to-night to fight the good fight. There were times like the present when, from consciousness of his own weakness, by reason of incessant work, he felt that he would almost rather the work were in other hands. The cause they were met to discuss, he said, was worthy of the highest honor, and to take a part in this grand battle against wrong was a credit to any man. He was there against the liquor traffic, and to ask the audience if that indictment was true, and if they believed it to be so to banish it forever from their midst. The New York Tribune had lately said that the liquor traffic rested on debased manhood, wronged womanhood and defrauded childhood. He stood there to support the truth of that charge, and mothers knowing it to be true, could not be silent, or fathers uninterested, and it was before them that he would bring the liquor traffic, and against it lay this charge. It had robbed man of his home, woman of her virtue, and childhood of its purity; it was heaven's worst enemy, and the devil's best friend. And he would now proceed to ask this prisoner, are you guilty or not guilty? And surely if this charge were true there was only one duty before every God-fearing man and woman—to set their faces against this great and heinous criminal. He had learned that in his own State of Massachusetts, by a careful and impartial investigation instituted, not to get evidence against the liquor trade, but to ascertain the causes of crime, it was found that 84 per cent of all the crimes committed had been perpetrated while under the influence of strong drink. The London Times could not be termed a fanatical organ, yet it had denounced this traffic in the strongest terms possible. Mr. Joseph Chamberlain and Cardinal Manning, neither of whom could be accused of fanaticism, had added the weight of their condemnation, and coming nearer home, we found Dr. Lucien Hall, superintendent of the Massachusetts Reformatory for inebriate women, declaring it as his experience, that out of 204 women under his care for drunkenness, 120 had

TO MAKE AN INDICTMENT

COMMENCED BY BEER DRINKING.

The speaker did not wish to weary his audience, or he might bring more testimony to the same effect. The evil, however, was admitted, and the question oftenest asked was, how can we stop it? Well, we could make use of what was popularly known as the Scott Act, which he would explain to them. The Scott Act, or Canada Temperance Act, was not perhaps a perfect piece of legislation, but it was the best we had. It might be divided into three parts, the first of which provided the legal machinery necessary for its submission to vote. That part of the Act had been gone through in this county and on the 24th of next month a vote was to be taken. If on that date a majority of the votes declared in favor of it, it would go into force on the 1st of May following and from that time the retail sale of liquor would be stopped in the county. Manufacturers might still continue to manufacture in the county, but neither they or wholesale merchants could sell in it or the next county, though they might send it out to other counties. The only way then in which liquor could be procured was for medicinal purposes, from a druggist, but the Act did not allow a man to drop into a druggist shop and say, "I am not feeling as well as I did, and want a drink," and be served in that way. That was

EVADING THE LAW,

and a fine of $50 for the first offence was imposed, $100 for the second, and for the third and every subsequent infringement a man might be sent to prison for two months, and a man was likely to be careful of incurring that imprisonment. A dealer who would run that risk was a dishonest man and the speaker didn't want to be found in company with such a one. The second part of the Act provided the prohibition, and the third the fines and penalties for violations of the law. Now he would say to the prisoner, the liquor traffic, are you guilty or not guilty? But this was not an honest prisoner and would try to dodge the issue by running off and saying that prohibition was a failure. That didn't make the prisoner any better, even if it was a fact. The question was, is the charge true or false; it didn't make any difference whether prohibition was a failure or not, the question was, are you guilty or not guilty? The prisoner said prohibition was a failure in Maine, but the speaker had found that the people who knew least about Maine were the ones who had most to say about it. The more the speaker thought about Maine, (and he knew it well and had been through it, and knew from personal observation if it was a failure) the stronger was his conviction that if any one knew whether or not prohibition was a failure in that State, it must be

THE PEOPLE WHO LIVED THERE.

Now, the Maine liquor law had been passed in 1851, and with a brief exception, had never been changed since, save to make it more stringent. Last September in that State prohibition was submitted to popular vote for the purpose of making it a law for ever, and it was voted on last fall. If after thirty years of prohibition it had been found a curse surely they would have repealed it. The result of the vote, however, was that the amendment, making it a perpetual law was carried, by a majority of 46,972 votes. That was what the people of Maine thought about prohibition, and they placed it beyond the power of legislators to remove it from the Statute Book. It had been asserted that Maine was injured by prohibition. Well, we found that savings banks were increased in the State, and that in the hard times of the past six months the increase in the deposits in the Maine savings banks was $1,823,047.67, the largest increase ever known in that State; that didn't look as if Maine was very badly injured by prohibition. In no State, said the Governor of Maine, were there better facilities for employment or less poverty. It was said they sold liquor in the State of Maine. Well they sold liquor in this town on Saturday night, and that didn't prove that the Crooks Act was a failure. He had heard a gentleman the other day describing how he had got drunk in a Maine town. He asked the landlord of a hotel for some brandy, and was told that he could not get any, but if he took an interest in natural history he could see the striped pig. The gentleman went out into the back yard and found there a shed over which was painted, "The Striped Pig. Admission, 10 cents." On entering the building was found to be a bar provided with all kinds of liquor. And this was the way prohibition was avoided. Well, if they had to go to a pig pen to get their drinks, he thought prohibition was a grand success in that town. In 1830 there were thirteen distilleries in the State of Maine turning out of whiskey yearly and the people spent thirteen millions a year on it, but now you could find no distilleries and breweries in that State. So he would ask the prisoner to come back off the Maine switch, for it was evident that prohibition was not a failure there. The prisoner would then run off on to the Halton county switch, and say the Scott Act was a failure there. In that county when an attempt was made to repeal the act, the people met E. King Dodds and $40,000 subscribed by the liquor trade to defeat the act, for they knew Halton would be the key to the whole country, with God-fearing women and earnest men, and when the repeal was voted on it was found that Halton, instead of repealing the Act, had sustained it by a majority of 183. Well, they said liquor was sold in Halton. That might be so, but no honest man sold liquor there, and no man that sold any liquor could have the respect of the people. If they wanted to sell it they had to keep it in pickle bottles with cucumbers soaking in it, as he had read in the Mail the other day; a man who would go to that trouble for a drink he thought must be badly in need of it. He had the testimony of the most prominent men in Halton that the act

EIGHT HUNDRED THOUSAND GALLONS

WAS NOT A FAILURE

there, but that business had been benefitted and was still being benefitted by it. The people of that county had banded together and determined to vote for no man who was not a prohibition candidate. They had raised $1,000 to enforce the provisions of the Scott Act during the year and were willing to make any sacrifices to keep it in existence. He did not mean to say that it was possible at present to enforce the law thoroughly, but it was the duty of the Government to make provisions for doing so. The Government were the paid servants of the people and if they didn't do the people's work the people could turn them out of power, and ought to do so.

But the prisoner now said well, it may work all right there, but there's another switch; we pay the revenue. If you cut us off who'll pay the revenue? He would ask the brewer or distiller who said that he paid the revenue, where did you get the money to pay it with? Whiskey did not pay one red cent of the revenue. Who did, then? The brewers and distillers of Canada were merely the tax collectors appointed by the Government to collect tax from the people of this country. And how did they do it? Out of $36,000,000 they collected, they give the Government five or six and pocket the rest. The mother, toiling at the wash tub, paid the revenue, while the husband was spending in drink the money that should keep him. Starving children of drunken parents selling papers on the streets of Toronto paid the revenue. Every dollar it raised came from and it was a shame and a disgrace that a Christian Government should receive any portion of its revenue from such a source, from the proceeds of the sin and degradation of its people. The idea of atoning for crime by giving up a portion of the spoil was preposterous. Would a judge let a thief off because he was willing to surrender to the judge a part of his ill-gotten gains? But this prisoner, the liquor traffic, now arraigned would not answer the question of guilty or not guilty, but shuffled out by saying, "if you pass sentence on me you will lose $6,000,000 of blood money every year." Sir Leonard Tilley, the Finance Minister, speaking at Westminster Palace Hotel, on Aug. 9, 1883, said:—"It has been my misfortune to hold the post of Finance Minister in various governments, and I have only heard one opinion about the revenue question, and it is that it is a secondary matter. The revenue we obtain in Canada is some five or six millions, and it costs twenty millions to provide it for us." That was the testimony of the Finance Minister. He said that any Finance Minister who in these days should propose such a plan of raising the revenue by spending 20 millions to raise five or six would not have a long official career. This question of revenue had been tested in Ireland. Between the years 1839 and 1842 there was a great decrease in the revenue derived from whisky as a result of the prosecution of temperance work there, the total loss being £382,611 But they did not have to put on any additional taxation; not at all—not one cent. The revenue as a whole, from every source, notwithstanding this falling off in strong drink, by the sum of £90,823. For tea alone, in the year named there was an increased revenue of £8,639. The people had been drinking tea instead of whiskey. These were facts that could not be gainsaid, and it was a fact that the money spent in strong drink, if devoted to other channels would send around the machinery as had never been done before. Instead of hard times we would be crying there is so much to do. We often heard that overproduction was an evil. Why, there was no such a thing as overproduction in this Dominion, and there could not be while a single home was without the necessaries and some of the luxuries of life, while children were without clothing or food, or homes destitute, of while there was poverty or degradation in the Dominion. There could be no overproduction; it was underconsumption, produced by the fact that the money that should buy these necessaries went over the bar and into the money-bags of the liquor-seller.

BROKEN HEARTH AND DESOLATED HOMES,

INCREASED AS A WHOLE

Liquor selling was worse than counterfeiting, for if a son of any one in the audience exchanged a good $2 bill for a good dollar and a worthless one, the worthless one at least did not do him any harm, while if exchanged for a good dollar and a skin full of whiskey he would be injured. He asked his hearers, then, on the 24th of next month to record their votes

TO PROTECT THEIR BOYS.

The Indian was protected against liquor and why not the white man?

The gentlemen composing what was known as the Liberal Temperance Union advocated the suppression of whiskey and encouragement of beer. The speaker would far rather have the young man, who once in a while got on a spree and filled up with whiskey than he who daily dulled and befogged his brain with libations of beer, for the latter was more brutalizing, and all statistics proved that there was more drunkenness in beer drinking counties than anywhere else.

The speaker brought his address to a close by an earnest exhortation to the audience to throw themselves into the work and to vote for the act on the 24th of September, and to range this county along side the glorious list of those which had already fallen into line.

An invitation was extended to any one in the audience who desired to speak on the opposite side, but no response was made, and after a collection had been taken up the meeting was brought to a close by the audience singing "God save the Queen."

'Tis He, but Oh! How Changed.

"Is your pa at home, little girl?"

"Yes, sir; do you wish to see him?"

"Yes."

"But you won't know him if you saw him!"

"Why, what's the matter?"

"Well, you see, out in the country, on our farm, a man and his wife got to fighting, and pa he tried to stop them."

"Oh, indeed!"

"Yes, you'd better call again. You wouldn't know pa now."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Smallpox in Montreal.

MONTREAL, Aug. 31.—Twenty-five cases of smallpox were reported yesterday, 12 authenticated; 17 deaths on Saturday, and 11 on Sunday.

A Rich Cargo.

SAN FRANCISCO, August 31.—The steamer St. Paul arrived on Saturday night from Alaska with 99,996 sealskins, valued at over $1,000,000.

The Army Worm and Drought.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., August 31.—The army worm is devastating the cotton fields in southern parts of Tennessee. Thousands of acres have been completely denuded. Cattle are suffering in some parts of the state for want of water. Many streams and wells are now dried up.

The Cholera.

MARSEILLES, Aug. 31.—Typhus fever is spreading. Twenty fatal cases of cholera have occurred at Salons and other towns in the vicinity.

MADRID, August 31.—There were 3,633 new cases of cholera, and 1,248 deaths in Spain yesterday.

Disgusting Despotism.

LONDON, Aug. 31.—The Russian Government is taking severe measures to suppress the use of the German language in the Baltic provinces. This action meets with great resentment. The Berlin press denounces it as illegal and unjust.

BERLIN, Aug. 31.—The Cologne Gazette hints that a quick and friendly settlement of the Carolines dispute will be effected in favor of Spain, but the latter will be the ultimate sufferers for bearding Prince Bismarck.

The Carolines Difficulty.

BERLIN, Aug. 31.—The German Government is still awaiting the reply of the Spanish Government to the proposal to refer the Carolines question to arbitration. No official news of the hoisting of the German flag over the Carolines has been received by the German Government. It is believed, however, it has been hoisted at Bavelthuap and Porapi. The North German Gazette says a white book (corresponding to our blue book) on the subject is being prepared.

MADRID, August 31.—The Government has forwarded to Germany a copy of the agreement signed three years ago by native chiefs, in which they recognize the sovereignty of Spain over the Caroline Islands.

Toronto Topics.

Aug. 31.—A special from Winnipeg reports the crops ripening fast and very little damage from frost.

Dr. Bryce, of the Provincial Board of Health, has telegraphed to Washington a contradiction of the highly exaggerated reports of the smallpox epidemic in Ontario.

Mrs. St. John, sister-in-law of ex-Governor St. John, of Kansas, gave a temperance address at Lorne Park on Saturday. Mr. St. John speaks at the same place on Tuesday.

Dr. Bryce advises the management of the Toronto Industrial Exhibition and the railway to cancel the announced excursion from Montreal on the grounds of the danger of infection and of the dread of it, which would keep other visitors away from the show.

A Difficult Task.

Sir H. D. Wolff's Mission to Turkey—The Sultan's Pride Aroused.

VARNA, Aug. 31.—Sir H. D. Wolff's mission has not proved all smooth water. The Sultan did not like the tone of Sir Henry's speech, of which a copy, according to traditional usage, is always provided before an audience. Owing to too literal translation, England was made to appear as if she authoritatively demanded Turkey's assistance, instead of applying to the Sultan as the supreme sovereign to help in restoring order in Egypt. The matter having been explained, and due prominence having been accorded to the Sultan's position, he consented to receive Sir Henry.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 31.—Even telegrams from Conservative sources admit that Sir Henry D. Wolff has a very difficult task here.

Kingston Cheese Board.

KINGSTON, Aug. 31.—There was a good showing of cheese at the board meeting on Saturday. Cable figures having advanced the market showed signs of firmness. The factory men were quite elated. Nearly all of the July make, up to the 20th, having been either sold or consigned, the amount on register was not large. The Liverpool market was quoted at 40s 6d; the Ingersoll 7½ to 8¼c.; the Brockville at 7⅞ to 7¾c. The factories registered 2,360 boxes. Half a dozen buyers were present. A number of July cheese were secured at 7¾c., but no offers were made above 8c. for August. Sellers wanted 8¼c. Elgin being sold at 8c. It is expected that the market will go up from this date until the close of the season.

At Ogdensburg on Saturday 3,500 boxes of cheese were offered. The majority of offerings were sold at from 8c. to 8¼c.; 8c. ruling. At Canton 4,000 boxes were offered, all sold at 8c.

Notes from Ottawa.

OTTAWA, Aug. 31.—Major-General Laurie arrived here this morning.

Chief Commissioner Wrigley, of the Hudson Bay Company, arrived here from Winnipeg this morning on business relative to the settlement of the company's accounts against the Government for services and supplies furnished in connection with the rebellion.

The caterer for the recent citizens' banquet to the returned volunteers, despairing of otherwise getting his dues, has had a writ served upon the chairman of the committee to compel payment.

The annual meeting of the Dominion Rifle Association opened to-day. The attendance of competitors is large. There will be 34 targets in operation, including those for the long range and revolver matches. This year there are twenty general competitions on the programme, the aggregate number of prizes being 827 against 633 at the last prize meeting. The money value shows an increase of about $800, being close on $6,000. Besides this there are several valuable cups and other prizes in kind.

NEW SCHOOL REGULATIONS.

Necessarily the school system of Ontario, good as it was, and superior as it was to that of most civilized countries, had many imperfections, which, though of minor importance, needed to be removed. From time to time numerous amendments have been made, resulting in the school law becoming a cumbersome and unwieldy aggregation of enactments. The Minister of Education, with that clear-sightedness and practical good sense which has characterized the administration of his Department last session, introduced legislation codifying the school law and the result is a vast improvement. Since that time he has also turned his attention to the regulations framed under the authority of the Department, and has succeeded in making them more easy of reference and therefore more likely to be acted upon. Referring to the improvements alluded to, the Globe says:—

"We have no space to notice more than a few of the more important changes here, but we advise all who have to do with school management—trustees, teachers, and inspectors—to make a careful study of the Acts and Regulations, which ought now to be published in a single manual for their use.

"A marked improvement is visible in the Public School programme, which has been made much more flexible, practical and, and effective than it was. An illustration of the tendency of the changes is afforded by the following direction:—

"Grammar should be taught (first three classes) mainly as the basis of composition. The essential parts of the sentence; the functions and definitions of the parts of speech, and the rules of inflection should be arrived at by induction."

If this method of dealing with grammar is properly and consistently enforced by suitable examination papers on the subject, there will soon be a revolution for the better in the use of every-day English amongst the people. Another improvement noticeable is the ingenious attempt to harmonize more completely the work of the Public and High Schools with that of our excellent universities. University examinations will henceforth be accepted in lieu of departmental examinations as a test of the non-professional qualifications of Public School teachers of the highest grade, and on the other hand not even graduates will be allowed to enter on professional work without some preliminary training, which, for High School purposes, can now be obtained in certain collegiate institutes selected for the purpose. These changes will, we have no doubt, go a long way towards making the various classes of educational institutions strictly complementary to each other in one harmonious and well ordered system.

The only other change we shall specify is one made in the basis of distribution of the High School grant. This has long been the vexed question of our system, and to all appearance these new regulations contain a solution of the problem. "Payment by results," in a very important sense of the term, is the basis, but the system will secure payment for all good results instead of payment for mere intellectual cramming. The Minister of Education personally explained the scheme to the High School masters at their late meeting, and their unanimity in approving of it was exceedingly gratifying.

The Minister had fortunately a similar opportunity of explaining the new code of regulations as a whole to the General Provincial Convention, and as he had previously circulated it in the form of a printed draft for the purpose of receiving suggestions, there can be no room to doubt that it will prove acceptable to the whole community. Of course it is enacted by Order-in-Council, subject to rejection by the Legislative Assembly, but rejection under the circumstances is not likely to be an element of the question.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Bradstreet's foreshadows a temporary revival in trade.

The election petition against the return of Mr. Dill, the Liberal representative of Muskoka, was yesterday dismissed, the petitioners, by their confession that they could get no evidence to sustain their charges, admitting that the petition against his return was a mere matter of party spite.

Hon. Thos. White in his speech at the banquet given in his honor at Montreal, promised great improvement in the management of Northwest affairs. Mr. White need be at no loss for opportunities. He can turn in no direction but he will find wrongs to be righted, abuses to be corrected. It is to be hoped that "political exigencies" will not crop up to prevent the new Minister of the Interior from carrying out the programme of reform he has laid down. Mr. White can brave a great deal of opposition, but "political exigencies," to use the jargon of the ring, "knock him out every time."

An Absolute Monarchy.

"Pa," said a little boy, "what is absolute monarchy?"

"I can't explain it, my son, so that you can comprehend it. Wait till you get married, my son, and then you'll know."

The Colorado beetle has caused great havoc among the potato vines in Quebec this season.

The first of October has been fixed for hearing of proof in the Megantic P.Q. contested election case.

A large number of lumbermen are leaving the Ottawa district to work in the woods of Michigan and Wisconsin.

Owing to the smallpox a Montreal boot and shoe firm lost a $5,000 order from Winnipeg.

The Canadian mare Phyllis won the free for all race at Springfield, Mass., on Saturday, in 2.17¼.

Hon. Alexander Mackenzie left on Saturday for a trip on Lake Superior.

At Colpoy's Bay, Grey County, a primitive court, held in the open air, fined a Scott Act breaker $150.

A farmer in Grey County had the hind quarters of a valuable ox filled with 74 grains of shot, while the animal was in the pasture.

The public school of Emerson, Manitoba, remains closed owing to want of funds with which to pay the over-due demands of the teachers, amounting to some $3,000.

Montreal had only four stabbing affrays on Sunday, which may be considered a quiet day in the lawless state Montreal is in at present.

Near Toronto a few days ago a demented widow lady, disemboweled and mutilated three of a neighbour's cattle in a horrible manner. She is rather proud of her action.

Two Toronto photographers have been fined $5 each for taking photographs on Sunday. A positive punishment for a negative sin.

On Sunday morning Mr. John Bags, an old sailor, of Brooklin Ont., who has been drinking hard of late, went to a stable in rear of the house where he had been living and hanged himself.

Warner, a young farmer, near London Ont., circulated scandalous stories concerning a Miss Taylor. Last Sunday the maligned young lady collared Warner as he was coming out of church, and while her father and brother held the maligner, gave him a rawhiding.

F. M. Caldwell, a prominent merchant of Philadelphia, has taken action for $3,000 against the city of Montreal. While driving around the Mountain Park some time ago he stumbled in a dangerous hole and broke his leg.

Owen Sound will vote on a by-law to grant $25,000 to start a glass factory. If Owen Sound wants such a factory it can buy out the one at Napanee, which was one of the fruits of the N. P., very cheap. It is now closed down, though backed with 35 per cent. protective tariff

WHAT SHE WANTS TO KNOW.

She Wants to Know How to Make Both Ends Meet on $16 per Week.

Among the young women who ask important and sometimes perplexing questions of the Philadelphia Times is one who wants to know what kind of a young man she should marry. Her particular anxiety is to know whether it is safe for a girl without money to marry a man without a trade. It is rather unusual for a girl in love to look so far ahead as this, or to take such a practical view of life. Few of them ever look beyond how they will look at the wedding, or whether it would not be better to have the services at home, in church, or whether, as a matter of romance, she ought not to run away.

The trouble with the young woman in the present case is that she is engaged to a nice young man who never learned a trade. He thought it was much nicer to take a clerkship, where he gets $16 a week and where the work does not soil his clothes. The young woman has been studying this question with rather more philosophy and good judgment than the sex is usually credited with. She fears that clerkships as a general thing do not pay well, do not afford much opportunity for advancement, and are of less certain tenure than almost anything else. She finds that the young men who early learn trades—good, honest, useful trades—seem to have more ambition, are sturdier and better directed.

The young woman has clearly reached a sensible conclusion. The subject about which she inquires is not altogether new. It has been discussed in these columns before. It is always interesting, however. Girls cannot be advised that it would be a misfortune always to marry a clerk, but it must be apparent that the better dependence is upon a man who has the discipline and the advantage which the thorough knowledge of a useful trade gives. It is rare indeed that the skilled workman is out of employ, and unusual skill and ability find ready recognition in every department of labor. It is the misfortune of too many of the girls of this time that they prefer young men whose work is such that they can always wear good clothes.

Asthma in a Birds' Boarding House.

"Yes," said the girl who is the mistress of a birds' boarding house in Brooklyn to the New York Sun, "canaries suffer much from asthma. If you will listen to that one you can hear its wheezy, choking respiration. They frequently die from the malady. They also have consumption and heart disease. You can't tell the latter. The bird will be active and energetic, and seemingly in good health, when in a few minutes it will drop dead. We know it is heart disease by examination afterward. Almost all domestic pets suffer from consumption. Monkeys generally die from it, and when they have it they look just like a human being, having a distressing cough and an emaciated face. We have more birds now than usual, because so many people have gone out of town and left them with us. We charge 25 cents a week, and make no difference whether it is sick or well. In most cases we can cure it. Here is a parrot that is nearly well," putting her finger into a cage and stroking the bird. "When it came off ship it was not well, and we had to attend to it a great deal."

It is said that King Kalakaua talks of building a roller-skating rink. This will make necessary another advance in civilization. The King and his subjects will have to wear shoes if they want to use the most improved style of roller-skate. To screw a skate on the bare foot and glide around half an hour would cause agony, and wo, and bitter thoughts, and profanity, and sores, and so forth.—Norristown Herald.

The Chinese Military's Passion for Flags.

The military desire for flags in China has developed into a passion. Every fortress, intrenched position, camp, city gate or officers' headquarters, has from one to 100, some of one bright solid color, but most are arranged in stripes, the colors red, white and blue being preferred. Were but three stripes used the resemblance to the French tricolor would be almost exact, but as they ordinarily use five or six the similarity of color becomes a mere suggestion. When blue is not obtainable, black, and rarely yellow, takes its place. At the camp of the Tso-tsung-tang regiment, on a pleasant knoll just outside the walls of King-chun-foo, more than 100 large flags were displayed, ranged with the precision of the rows in a cornfield, there being one for nearly every white canvas tent, in which the soldiers were comfortably installed. The material used is Manchester cotton, bought white and colored by the Chinese. As each is about the size of a common bed blanket, and several thousands must be required for the 10,000 troops stationed in and about Holhow and King-chow-foo, the quantity needed is immense and the merchants who deal in the goods were prepared accordingly. There is no doubt but that their number is often unreasonably increased by the mandarins commanding the troops that they may have the squeeze, or difference in price, since they purchase at a fair rate and charge the government double.

Vegetarians.

We find in one of the numerous tracts issued of late years by the Anglo-American vegetarians some food diagrams which exhibit peas as containing twice and a half as much heat, force and tissue producing power as "butcher's meat." Now this is what the rhetoric of common life calls proving too much. And how is it done? In the first place, dried peas are compared by weight with raw beef. That is, a soft substance, two-thirds of which are alleged to consist of water, is compared with a hard, dry one which holds only one-seventh of moisture.

But we are not pigeons that we should eat dry peas, nor do we consume our meat raw. The comparison should fairly be made between cooked meat and pea soup or pease pudding or a dish of green peas, or rather between a vegetarian's meal and that of an omnivorous man, which practically includes the vegetarians; and we should like to see how the case would stand then. The same reckless style of misstatement runs through these diagrams which, says the author of the tract, "on card board, with the flesh making elements colored dark red, the carbon appropriately black, and the water beautifully blue, I have found very effective in illustrating my vegetarian lectures."

These diagrams are followed by a table of the analyses on which they are ostensibly founded, and one is not surprised to find that, out of the 16 articles of diet enumerated, the percentages of five only will "add up;" the other 11 being hopelessly wrong, and all of them at variance with the tables of the Bethnal Green food collection. This precious tract also carefully prints Genesis, i., 29, which allows the eating of vegetable food; but is cautious to ignore Genesis, ix., 3, which permits flesh. Perhaps it is on such evidence as these said diagrams and tables that Mr. F. W. Newman in his essays advances "the positive testimony of the first chemists as to the real superiority of grain and pulse, and dried cabbage or cauliflower, and nuts, and dried apples and potatoes, to equal weights of dried meat."

But the whole truth does not lie in any of these statements. To quote the late Mr. Dallas in his almost classic "Book of the Table": "There never was a greater farce than these tables of nutritive values. It appears that white of egg is more than twice as nourishing as the yolk, and that a red herring is more than nine times as nourishing as mother's milk. What can be the worth of a science that works out such incredible results? Not only would these results—even if they were trustworthy—be valueless, since they take no account of the digestive labor required to utilize the different substances, but they cast doubt on the received chemical doctrine that the nitrogenous elements of food are the most nutritious. The Saturday Review.

The Galley Slaves.

The gang of galley slaves was seated in close order on benches covered with coarse sacking rudely stuffed, over which were thrown bullocks' hides. Five or six of them occupied a bench 10 or 11 feet long. To a footboard beneath each man was attached by a chain ending in an iron band, riveted round one of his ankles. The benches were so close together that as one row of them pushed forward their oar, the arms and oar of the row behind were projected over their bended backs. The size and weight of the oar were so great that, except at the end where it was tapered to a manageable size, it was necessary to work it by handles fixed to the side. * * * The slaves were overlooked by the boatswain. His place was on the gangway, close to the sternmost oars, where he was at all times within hearing of the orders of the Captain. Along the gangway, at regular intervals, his mate and the driver were posted, so that the conduct of each slave was under inspection. The oars were put in motion or stopped by the sound of a silver whistle worn by the boatswain, who, with his mates, was armed with a heavy whip of bull's sinew to stimulate the exertions of the slaves. When it was necessary to continue the labor for many hours without respite, they would administer, in addition to the lash, morsels of bread steeped in wine, which they put in the mouths of the men as they rowed. If, in spite of these precautions, a slave sank from fatigue, he was whipped until it was evident that no further work was to be obtained from him, and then thrown either into the hold, where among bilge water and filth he had a chance of recovering his consciousness, or, if his case appeared desperate, into the sea.—Don John of Austria—Sir William Stirling Maxwell.

CALLED BACK.

BY HUGH CONWAY.

Chapter XIV—Continued.

He rose wearily. "Pauline will recover, you think?" he asked.

"I think—I hope I shall find her almost well on my return."

"You will tell her how you have found me; she may be happier in knowing that Anthony's death has indirectly brought me to this."

I bowed assent to this dreary request.

"I must go back now," he said, with a kind of shiver, and dragging his weary limbs slowly toward the door.

In spite of his sins I could not let the wretched being go without a word.

"Stop a moment," I said. "Tell me if there is anything I can do to make your life any easier?"

He smiled faintly. "You may give me money—a little. I may be able to keep it and buy a few prisoners' luxuries."

I gave him several notes which he secreted on his person.

"Will you have more?" I asked. He shook his head.

"I expect these will be stolen from me before I spend them."

"But is there no way of leaving money with any one for your use?"

"You might leave some with the captain. It may be, if he is kind-hearted and honest, a portion of it may reach me. But even that is doubtful."

I promised to do so, and knew that, whether it reached him or not, I should feel easier for having made the attempt.

"But what will your future be? Where are they taking you, and what will be your life?"

"They are taking us right to the end of Siberia—to Nertchinsk. There I shall be drafted off with others to work in the mines. We go all the way on foot and in chains."

"What an awful fate!"

Ceneri smiled. "After what I have passed through it is Paradise opening before me. When a man offends against the Russian law his one hope is that he may be sent at once to Siberia. That means going from hell to heaven."

"I do not understand."

"You would if you had lain like me for months, untried and uncondemned. If you had been placed in a cell without light, without air, without room to move. If you had heard those next to you screaming in their madness—madness brought on by solitary confinement and cruel treatment. If every morning as you woke you had said, 'I, too, shall be an idiot before nightfall.' If you had been frozen, beaten, starved, in order to make you betray your friends. If you had been reduced to such a state that your death-warrant would be welcome, then, Mr. Vaughan, you would look forward to and long for the gentle rigors of Siberia. I swear to you, sir," he continued, with more fire and animation than he had yet displayed, "that if the civilized nations of Europe knew one-tenth part of the horrors and deeds in a Russian prison, they would say, 'guilty or innocent, no human beings shall be tormented like this,' and for the sake of common humanity would sweep the whole accursed government from the face of the earth!"

"But twenty years in the mines! Is there no hope of escaping?"

"Where could I escape to? Look at the map and see where Nertchinsk is. If I escaped I could only wander about the mountains until I died or until some of the savages around killed me. No, Mr. Vaughan, escapes from Siberia only occur in novels."

"Then you must slave until your death?"

"I hope not. I once gathered together much information respecting Siberian convicts, and, to tell you the truth, was rather disgusted to find how incorrect the common opinion is. Now I can only hope my researches showed me the truth."

"The treatment is not so bad, then?"

"It is bad enough, as you are always at the mercy of a petty tyrant. There is no doubt but for a year or two I must slave in the mines. If I survive the toil, which is very unlikely, I may, by finding favor in the ruler's eyes, be released from further work of that description. I may even be allowed to reside at some town and earn my living. I have great hopes that my professional skill may be of use to me. Doctors are scarce in Asiatic Russia."

Little as he deserved it, my heart echoed his wish; but as I looked at him I felt sure there was small chance of his enduring even a year's toil at the mines.

The door opened and the captain once more looked in. He was growing quite impatient. I had no reason for wishing to prolong the conversation, so I told him I should have finished in a moment. He nodded his head and withdrew.

"If there is anything more I can do let me know," I said, turning to Ceneri.

"There is nothing—Stay! one thing. Macari, that villian—sooner or later he will get his deserts. I have suffered—so will he. When that time comes, will you try to send me word? It may be difficult to do so, and I have no right to ask the favor. But you have interest, and might get intelligence sent me. If I am not dead by then it will make me happier."

Without waiting for my reply he walked hastily to the door, and with the sentry at his side was marched off to the prison. I followed him.

As the cumbrous lock was being turned he paused. "Farewell, Mr. Vaughan," he said. "If I have wronged you I entreat your pardon. We shall meet no more."

"So far as I am concerned I forgive you freely."

He hesitated a moment and then held out his hand. The door was now open. I could see the throng of repulsive, villainous faces—the faces of his fellow-prisoners. I could hear the jabber of curiosity and wonder. I could smell the foul odors coming from that reeking den crowded with filthy humanity. And in such a place as this, with such associates, a man of education, culture and refined tastes, was doomed to spend his last days. It was a fearful punishment!

Yet it was well merited. As he stood on the threshold with outstretched hand I felt this. To all intents and purposes the man was a murderer. Much moved as I was by his fate I could not bring myself to grasp his hand. My refusal may have been harsh, but I could not do it.

He saw that I did not respond to his action. A flush of shame passed over his face; he bowed his head and turned away. The soldier took him roughly by the arm and thrust him through the doorway. Then he turned, and his eyes met mine with an expression that haunted me for days. He was gazing thus when the heavy door was shut and hid him from my sight forever.

I turned away sick at heart, perhaps regretting I had added anything to his shame and punishment. I sought my obliging friend, the captain, and received his word of honor that any money I left with him should be expended for the convict's benefit. I placed a considerable sum in his hands, and can only hope that a part of it reached its destination.

Then I found my interpreter, and ordered horses to be at once procured and the tarantass brought out. I would start without a moment's delay for England—and Pauline.

In half an hour all was ready. Ivan and I stepped into the carriage; the yemschik flourished his whip; the horses sprang forward; the bells jingled merrily, and away we went in the darkness, commencing the return journey which counted by thousands of miles. It was only now, when burning to find myself home again, that I realized the fearful distance which lay between me and my love.

A turn of the road soon hid the gloomy ostrog from my sight, but it was not until we were miles and miles away that my spirits recovered anything like their former tone, and it was days before I ceased to think, at nearly every moment, of that terrible place in which I had found Ceneri, and to which I saw him again consigned after my business with him was finished.

As this is not a book of travel I will not recapitulate the journey. The weather nearly all the time was favorable, the roads were in good condition. My impatience forced me to travel almost day and night. I spared no expense; my extraordinary passport procured me horses when other travelers were compelled to wait—my large gratuities made those horses use their best speed. In thirty-five days we drove up to the Hotel Russia at Nijnei Novgorod, with the tarantass in such a dilapidated condition that in all probability another stage would have finished its work in this world. I bestowed it, a free gift, upon my guide, who, I believe, sold it immediately for three rubles.

From Nijnei by rail to Moscow; from Moscow to St. Petersburg. I only tarried in the capital long enough to pay my respects to Lord——, and once more thank him for his assistance; then, having collected what luggage I had left there, away for England!

On my road back from Irkutsk I found letters from Priscilla at Tomsk, at Tobolsk, and at Perm, also more recently written ones at St. Petersburg. All up to the date of the last was going on well. Priscilla had taking her charge to Devonshire. Having been reared in that county the old woman had a great belief in its virtues. They were at a quiet, but beautiful little watering-place on the north coast, and Priscilla averred that Pauline "was blooming as a rose, and seemed as sensible as Master Gilbert himself."

No wonder after hearing this good news I was eager to reach home—longing, not only to see my wife again, but to see her, as I had never yet seen her, with her mind restored. Would she remember me? How should we meet? Would she at last learn to love me? Were my troubles at an end or only begun? These were the questions which could only be answered when England was reached.

Home at last! How delightful to stand among one's own countrymen, and hear nothing but good intelligible English around one. I am bronzed with exposure to the wind and sun, my beard has grown to a great length; one or two acquaintances I met when I reached London scarcely knew me. In my present trim I could not hope that I should awaken any recollections in Pauline's mind.

By the aid of a razor and fresh apparel I was soon converted to a fairly good semblance of my former self, and then, without having apprised even Priscilla of my return, I started for the west, to see what fate had in store for me.

What is a run across England after a man has made such a journey as my recent one? Yet, that pitiful hundred and fifty miles seemed to me as long as a thousand did a month ago. The last few miles I had to go by coach, and, although four splendid horses spun us along, each individual mile seemed as long as a Siberian stage. But the journey was at last ended, and, leaving my luggage in the coach office, I sallied forth, with a beating heart, to find Pauline.

I went to the address given in Priscilla's letter. The house was a quiet little building, nestling on a wooded bank, with a sloping garden in front, full of late flowers. Honeysuckle twined round the porch, great sunflowers stared fiercely from the beds, and carnations sweetened the air. As I waited for the door to be opened I had time to approve Priscilla's choice of a resting-place.

I inquired for Mrs. Drew. She was not at home—had gone out with the young lady some time ago, and would not be back until the evening. I turned away and went in search of them.

It was early in autumn, but the leaf showed no signs of fading. Everything was green, fresh and beautiful. The sky was cloudless, and a soft balmy air fanned my cheek. I paused and looked around me before I decided in which direction to go. Far below my feet lay the little fishing village; its houses clustered round the mouth of the noisy, brawling stream which ran down the valley, and leaped joyously into the sea. On either hand were great tors, and behind them inland hills covered with woods, and in front of me stretching away and away was the calm green sea. The scene was fair enough, but I turned away from it. I wanted Pauline.

It seemed to me that on such a day as this the shady woods and the running stream must offer irresistible attrac-

Only a Peacemaker

Summonses were issued yesterday, at the instance of P. C. Pidgeon, against two men named Albert Jepson and John White, their offence consisting in fighting on the street on Sunday. White has disappeared, but Jepson was arraigned before the Police Magistrate this morning. He stated that White was fighting some one else, and that when he interfered to make peace he was struck at and was only acting in self-defence. He was therefore allowed to go.

Home from the Relaxing Lakes.

Messrs. E. B. Edwards and party, who have been for the last three weeks camping at the Ladies' Bay, on Juniper Island, Stony Lake, returned home yesterday, bearing the usual evidences of prolonged exposure to the sun and lake air. They report the fishing as not very good, though they managed to take about 20 maskinonge. Master J. Fairbairn was the proud captor of a 22 pounder, which gave him such a pull up that he thought he had a stump instead of a fish. The party also brought home some natural curiosities, the weather beaten roots of the red cedar, presenting a striking resemblance to stag's antlers. These properly polished make uniquely beautiful hat racks, etc.

A Family Fracas.

The Shuters are a family who live in the west end of the town, and whose domestic troubles have, on more than one previous occasion, been ventilated in the Police Court. This morning Mrs. Shuter and her husband again claimed the attention of Police Magistrate Dumble, the former charging her husband with assault. Some weeks ago a charge of non-support, which she preferred against him, was dismissed and since that time, although Mr. Shuter has been living in the same house, there has been an evident coolness between him and his better half. He, however, is apparently a forgiving man and desired to make matters up with the wife of his bosom. But her indignation was so deep that all his advances were received with scorn, and to escape them she sequestrated herself in her own room and barricaded the door with a chair. This made Mr. Shuter angry, and he commenced offensive operations on the door and carried the position by storm, but upon entering the room was met by his indignant spouse, not with open arms, but, he alleges, blows. A daughter, too, appeared on the scene, and a kind of triangular scuffle must have ensued, for the daughter was struck at by Shuter, who says he hit his wife in mistake, while from his account it would appear that he was roughly used by both. In court the complainant and defendant made things very lively, and caused much amusement among the listeners, and perplexity to the bench, by their cross charges of marital infidelity and neglectful conduct. The magistrate at last came to the conclusion that a fine of $1 would meet the requirements of the case, and imposed that penalty, giving Shuter ten days in which to pay it. The latter stoutly declares he will go to goal rather than pay it, and plaintively inquires, "what is the use of a wife that is no wife." Probably before ten days have elapsed he will have found the solution of his conundrum, and be less willing to make a visit to Nesbit's boarding house.

There will be a regular meeeting of the Board of Education to-night.

Life, Love and Death.

There were registered with the Division Registrar during the month of August, 10 births, 3 marriages and 15 deaths.

Repairing the Locks.

The rollers under the gates of the locks at the outlet of Little Lake having become deranged, it has been found necessary to raise the gates for the purpose of repair. Getting ready to make the repairs will take a longer time than the actual performance of the work, and it is probable that there will have to be a cessation of navigation for this week at least.

What they are Saying.

It's just ten years ago to-day.—The Lakefielders.

What we want to know is, what is the difference between the Scott Act and the Dunkin Act?—Cautious temperance people.

Prohibition is not a failure in Maine.—John A. Nicholls.

We'll have to pay a visit to Peterborough.—Moses Oates, Prof. G. Smith, et al.

What We may Expect.

Lots of business at the School Board meeting to-night.

Mrs. Susannah Peck's discourse on the Scott Act to make a better impression than John A. Nicholls'.

One of our journalistic bachelors to take unto himself a wife this week.

And be a sub-editor and wear his hair short ever after.

Prof. Richardson and Moses Oates to take the war-path after John A. Nicolls' scalp.

And to find that he wears a wig—metaphorically.

Bishop Jamot's Health.

The public will regret to be informed that His Lordship, the Bishop of Peterborough, is seriously ill. For the past week he has been most vexatiously afflicted with a distressing and persistent hicoough, from the effects of which rest or sleep, except under the influence of opiates, was impossible. The attack is due to great nervous prostration, brought on by over-work and intensity of zeal in the discharge of his episcopal duties. Contrary to injunctions of his medical adviser, during the week of the retreat of the clergy of his diocese, his lordship, though physically unfit for the task, delivered several addresses each day. Since Sunday, however, he has been confined to his apartments. Dr. O'Sullivan, his medical attendant, states that at midnight last night there was a decided improvement in his patient's condition, but a relapse into his former state took place this morning. There is reason to hope that the attack will yield to the remedies employed.

Women at Work.

A meeting was held in the Y. M. C. A, rooms yesterday afternoon, of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, the President, Mrs. W. Fitzgerald, being in the chair, and about 25 members present. After customary preliminaries, addresses relative to the Scott Act movement were delivered by Mr. Fessey, organizer for the county, and Dr. Fife, chairman of the town committee, After the conclusion of the addresses arrangements were made for the entertainment of Scott Act speakers who will visit the town. The following committees for the distribution of campaign literature was appointed: No. 1 Ward.—Mrs. W. Fitzgerald, Mrs. J. Stratton, Miss Irwin, Mrs. J. Alford, Miss Baguley and Miss Wright. No. 2 Ward—Mrs. R. H. Green, Miss Mary Sanderson, Mrs. T. Bradburn, Mrs. A. L. Davis, Mrs. Jas. Byrne and Miss Clarke. No. 3 Ward.—Mrs. W. A. Morrow, Mrs. D. Smart, Mrs. W. Lasher, Miss Bird, Miss Pethick and Miss Fraser. No. 4 Ward.—Mrs. J. S. Martin. Mrs. J. Kendry, Mrs. J. Moore, Miss Staples, Miss Mebarry, Miss Richardson. A meeting of this committee will be held on Monday afternoon at 4.30, in the Y.M.C.A. Rooms, for the purpose of assigning territory and discussing other matters relative to the prosecution of the campaign. After some further discussion of Union matters the ladies adjourned.

Probable Weather Promises.

The following forecast of the weather for this district for the 24 hours from 1 a. m. to-day, is received from the Toronto Meterological office:—Moderate to fresh west and north-west winds. Fine, slightly cooler weather.

The Way the Weather Has.

Mr. G. W. Morgan, druggist, supplies the following memoranda of the variations of the thermometer and barometer:—

Hastings.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

The social held under the auspices of the R. T. of T., and which was postponed from the 21st to 28th ult., took place on Friday evening last. The attendance was very fair, notwithstanding the unfavorable appearance of the evening. The edibles in the way of cakes, fruit and lemonade were all that could be desired, and after ample justice had been done them, an excellent programme was rendered, which an amusing speech, coupled with a recitation by the [illegible] After singing "God save the Queen," and pronouncing the bendiction, the company dispersed, well pleased with the evening's entertainment.

A party of young people assembled at Mr. A. M. Paton's residence here on Wednesday evening of last week. The guests were gracefully received, and soon were busy enoying themselves in various ways. This was—with the exception of the time when refreshments were served—kept up until midnight, when the company formed in a circle, sang "Auld Lang Syne," and dispersed. Every person present seemed bent upon having a good time, and none went away disappointed. Among the guests present were Miss Paton and Mr. Whitelaw, of Cobourg, Miss Davidson, of Peterborough, Mrs. White and Miss White, of Harwood.

Miss Aggie Parker, who has been residing with her uncle, Mr. H. M. Fowlds, for the past year, left for Chicago on Saturday last, whither her mother and sisters have removed. The good wishes of a large number go with her, as she made many warm friends during her stay here.

Miss Jessie Morrison left on Tuesday to resume her duties at Miss Williams of Norwood, after spending several weeks holidays here.

Miss Armour has resumed duty after a six weeks' holiday.

Mrs. Orr has returned home after several weeks absence; also Miss Lizzie Wicks, who has been away for several months past.

The windows of the Town Hall have been painted recently, which adds much to the appearance of that building.

"The Bible" was the subject of the Rev. Wm. Limbert's sermon in the Methodist Church, here, Sabbath evening last. The subject was well handled. The speaker showed that the Bible was a book of history, biology, poetry, geography, mathematics, or any other subject that one might wish to pursue or study, and not only could we study any or all of these from it, but we could also study the way of eternal life.

A Shark's Sagacity.

A German paper reports a singular example of the sagacity of sharks. A man fell overboard from a German ship. The place was known to be infested with sharks, but to the astonishment of the crew, not a single specimen appeared. The man managed to keep afloat, and a life-buoy was thrown to him. Unhappily he missed it, whereupon another member of the crew jumped in to the rescue. He had barely reached the drowning man when a huge shark rushed up like a flash of lightning, and, seizing both men in his jaws, dragged them under. The shark's conviction that if he would only be patient for a few minutes he would probably have two victims instead of one is certainly remarkable.—Brooklyn Eagle.

"I explain it all to you," said one of the partners in a furniture house in Western Michigan which had protested its paper. "You see I and my brudder Shake vhas bartners. We each draw $20 per week und we haf money left to bay all our debts und keep up stock. Shake he goes oafer to Chicago, und eaferypody asks him if we make some difidend und how moch. Vhen he comes home he says we doan' shtand opp mit odder houses if we doan' make some difidends. Dot look all right to me. We have $2,000 laid away, und I take half und Shake half. Vhen some drafts come Shake doan' like to bay, und I feels shust dot vhay, too. If you have some difidends, dot vhas all clear for you, und you doan' put him back in der firm. I vhas a little mixed oop, und I guess we like to sell oudt."—Wall Street News.

Bridgenorth.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Mr. W. B. Kelly has recently added a new shingle machine to his mill. It is now in running order and is turning out first-class shingles. A lath machine is also being fitted up in the same mill and will shortly be in running order.

Some time ago the Bridgenorth Baseball Club (which your Young's Point correspondent has so gracefully dubbed the "Clippers") sent a challenge to the newly organized (?) club at Young's Point to play a friendly game on Sept 5th. No answer has yet been received. This does not look much like business.

Mr. J. H. Brumwell raised the frame work of his saw mill last week.

The Reason Why.

The Governor of Herat being offended at the British Commission because they refused to give him money that he had asked for, opened the Commission's letters, fearing that his behavior would be reported.

PANTS.

How often does it happen that the general comfort and happiness of man depends on a good fitting pair of pants. Nothing will ruffle a man's temper more than to find when he tries on his latest new pair of pants that they are either too long or too short; that they pinch him so bad in one place that he dare not stoop, and are so large and baggy around the waist and knees that he is afraid he might be taken for the departed "Smith."

A SAFE THING TO DO

Young Men's Liberal Club.

We would again call attention to the adjourned meeting to be held in the office of Mr. E. W. Cox, in rear of the Telegraph office, on to-morrow, (Thursday) evening. Most of pleasure seekers are now home from their holidays, and it is to be hoped that there will be a good attendance to consider the reports of the several committees, appointed at the prelimenary meeting. Promising clubs have been formed in different parts of Ontario within the past month, and there is no reason why a flourishing club may not be organized in Peterborough.

LAKEFIELD'S DECENNARY.

How the Villagers by the Lake Spent Their Civic Holiday.

Cricket, Lacrosse and Aquatics

Yesterday Lakefield celebrated the tenth anniversary of her incorporation as a village. Whilst it has not, during the period intervening since its incorporation, made giant strides, yet its progress has been permanent and substantial. Very prettily situated, it offers special inducements to retired farmers and others who desire a pleasant and healthy place of residence. Its water power, almost dormant through disuse for many years, affords driving power for several manufactories and mills and could furnish the same motive force for hundreds of others. Very few places have the same natural and physical advantages as the village of Lakefield and if properly cultivated and advertised by our neighbors, we will see the day when Lakefield will count its inhabitants by thousands and not by hundreds.

The committee of management of the celebration spared no pains to make a success of the day. In the morning was played between "The English Eleven" and "The Canadians." Wickets were pitched about 10 o'clock and the Englishmen went to the bat. Norley retired first, beautifully caught in the long field by Watson. Macdonald followed suit soon after, being run out for 11 runs, carefully and nicely compiled. Craven knocked together 12 in short order, and was followed by Hammond, J. E., who made 15 runs, 4 of which were the result of a phenomenal hit over three or four fences. LeFevre and Irwin were the only others of the Englishmen who upheld the honor of the Old Countrymen. The total result of this innings was 66 runs.

M. Giroux and H. T. Strickland first handled the willow, as representatives of the Canadian team. The former, by several well-placed hits, totalled 8 runs and the latter 3. Rogers followed with three more runs and Stratton with 11 runs. Watson corralled 7 runs and R. C. Strickland concentrated 6 runs, when the national courage began to evaporate, owing to the steady fusillade of balls from the hostile bowlers and the remainder of the team gracefully retired for small figures. The total runs of the Canadian side was 39. The following is the score :—

THE LACROSSE MATCH.

The noon train from Peterborough brought up two strong teams from Peterborough, viz., the Riversides and the Cretes. Both sides were well matched and played good lacrosse. With a great deal of practice, care and science, either club will soon be able to tackle successfully the older Peterborough club. The following were the players :—

Riversides.	Cretes.
Ned Rogers,	Kincaid,
Higgins,	Parnell,
Ab. Mercier,	Connell,
J. Phelan,	Metherall,
D. Morgan,	Duncan,
Joe Begley,	M. Larone,
Carveth,	Huston,
F. Packenham,	Allan,
J. Crow,	Foot,
H. Neil,	King,
T. Giroux,	F. Larone
M. Kincaid, Capt.	R. Duncan, Capt.

The first game was started by the referee about two o'clock, and at first the play was excellent. A little slugging and bad feeling was evident occasionally,—the result of thoughtless playing—but on the whole the game was a good exhibition. After half an hour's play the Riversides took a game, Theodore Giroux making a pretty shot on the flags. The second and third games were more hotly contested. Giroux and Larone, especially, carrying off the bouquets. The Riversides won these games, also, in about ten minutes respectively. These clubs are intending again to meet on the Riverside Park, when it is expected that the Cretes will give a better account of themselves.

THE REGATTA.

About three o'clock large crowds wended their way up the river to the lake, where the regatta was held. A stiff breeze was blowing, which made the water rather lumpy, but otherwise, all things were propitious. The banks of the river were prettily lined with a moving mass of pleasure seekers, and the water was dotted with boats of all sizes and descriptions. The races were hotly contested and as they could be seen from start to finish, the excitement was sometimes intense. The following is

THE PRIZE LIST :

OPEN CANOE SAILING RACE, 1 MILE.—1st, Dr. Douglass, 2nd, Percy Strickland.

DOUBLE HUNTING CANOE, 1 MILE.—1st, Wallace and R. C. Strickland, 2nd, G. Nichols and F. Bell.

DOUBLE SKIFF RACE, 1 MILE.—1st, B. Eden and W. Strickland, 2nd, T. G. Bird and H. O'Neil.

THE ILLUMINATION.

It was intended to brilliantly illuminate the island at Lakefield and the surrounding shore in the evening. About seven o'clock the rain, which had been threatening all day began to descend and dispelled all chances of successful fireworks. Among others the residence of Dr. Bell, and the stores of Messrs. S. Henderson and T. J. Bird were handsomely lit up and decorated. During the evening quite a display of fireworks was shown in front of the store of Mr. Bird. The train left Lakefield for Peterborough about 10.30, carrying a large crowd well satisfied with the Lakefield bill of fare for the day.

Warsaw.

A Strawberry Item.

To the Editor of the DAILY EXAMINER :

At dinner one day in the strawberry season of the past summer the writer served out to each of a family of seven a full regulation dish of strawberries. Being very fine, they elicited some very complimentary remarks, and, when fairly under way of disposing of them, Mrs. Choat remarked that perhaps we might be interested in knowing just how many berries, all told, our dishes contained, and volunteered the information that there were 75, she having counted them when being prepared for the table. The berries were of the Sharpless variety, raised in the garden of T. Choat, Warsaw.

THE CROPS.

Now that the harvest is all over and the threshing machine is humming through the land we can speak more of a certainty regarding our crops. Excepting spring wheat there is nothing to note from my last report, but, of it, our worst fears has been fulfilled. From weevil, blight and rust the crop in this section will only average from 6 to 8 bushels per acre and mostly second quality, and a large amount will not be worth threshing. As there is some differences of opinion regarding rust, some attributing it to different agencies, I have always believed and yet see no reason to change my belief of frost being the principal cause. Looking back over the past summer we find a late seed time about three weeks later than usual, and a cold wet spring, but a rapid growth through the summer, the later part of July extremely hot, on the 3rd day of August a visit by a severe wind and rain storm, and on the 6th a sharp frost, causing the rusting of the wheat, also assisted by a fog on the 11th.

We had our first ice on the morning of the 27th when we could skim it off the water.

Four Italians with two trained bears are travelling this part of the country, their bearships are well trained in dancing and performing a large number of antic tricks.

The Cholera.

ROME, Sept. 1.—A Trevio despatch says there are no new cases of cholera there, and all the sick are recovering.

MADRID, Sept. 1.—There were 3,669 new cases of cholera and 1,120 deaths throughout Spain yesterday.

Business Troubles.

VIENNA, Sept. 1.—Reetler, a cloth merchant of Brunn, has failed with liabilities of $125,000.

PESTH, Sept. 1.—J. J. Joass, a cotton dealer, has failed with liabilities of $200,000.

Peace and its Results.

VIENNA, Sept. 1.—M. De Giers, the Russian minister of Foreign Affairs, conversing with a councillor, at Franzebad, about the scarcity of English visitors in the Bohemian spas, through fear of an Anglo-Russian war, said that peace was assured for many years, and he would wager that there would be double the number of visitors in 1886.

The Crops in Europe.

VIENNA, Sept. 1.—The European wheat crop is reported as follows on the basis of 100 :—Austria, 104 ; Hungary, 117 ; Prussia, 94, Saxony and Bavaria, 100 ; Baden, 97 ; Wurtemburg, 99 ; Denmark, 116 ; Sweden and Norway, 105 ; Italy, 70 to 85 ; Switzerland, 125 ; Holland and Great Britain, 95 ; Russia, 75 to 100 ; Roumania, 80 to 115 ; Servia, 110.

Persecution of the Poles.

LONDON, Sept. 1.—The Prussian Government has ordered all Russians and Austrian Poles to quit Danzig before October. Many old established merchants and tradesmen come under this order. The decree exempts settlers previous to 1843, temporary sojourners, and those who served, or whose sons have served in the Germany army.

A Dangerous Agitation.

LONDON, Sept. 1.—The Standard's Berlin despatch says :—Germany will not surrender the Carolines. There were imposing meetings in numerous cities of France and Spain on Sunday to protest against the action of Germany on the subject. The Mayors of Barcelona and Valencia have returned the German crosses with which they had been honored. Spain has received offers of moral and material support throughout the entire country.

The Rebel Prisoners.

How They are Employed at the Stoney Mountain Penitentiary.

A Winnipeg despatch says :—The rebel prisoners at Stoney Mountain, with the exception of Poundmaker and his attendant, Alex. Fisher, have been busily engaged in quarrying, carrying mortar and doing other out-door work in the Government buildings in progress of erection. Poundmaker is not working, but is kept with with an iron ball to his feet. Lieut.-Governor Dewdney visited him on Saturday, and had a long talk with him.

The weather keeps very cool, and harvesting operations are delayed.

A Constitution for Russia.

The New York Times' London correspondent says :—"In the train of the Kremsier pageant comes the statement in official diplomatic circles that the Czar is about to promulgate a Constitution. I am assured that this would have been done last year had not the likelihood of an Afghan trouble tied the hands of M. de Giers. My informant, who is an English statesman, and has facilities for knowing much of the inside workings of the various courts, says it was to stave off this reform that the Russian nobility, or war party, pushed the Asiatic troubles to the fore, and that Mr Gladstone and M. de Giers worked together in the interests of free institutions to checkmate them. If events should prove this, many mysterious things in Mr. Gladstone's movements last spring, would be explained to his infinite credit.

Winnipeg News.

WINNIPEG, Sept. 1.—Lord Lansdowne will shortly visit the Northwest, going as far as the Rocky Mountains. Arrangements are being made for his reception.

Mr. Hugh Sutherland, M. P., has returned to town, and is expecting a party of Englishmen to go over the route of the proposed Hudson's Bay Railway, and if the road can be built for $25,000 per mile, it is said the money will be forthcoming.

The "Alert" has arrived at York Factory.

Kelly, for a murder committed at the end of the track, was arrested at St. Vincent on Sunday.

The Riel appeal has been postponed, and will come up to-morrow.

The Hon. Thos. White arrives here the latter end of next week.

Ottawa Notes.

OTTAWA, Sept. 1.—The Government have sent physicians to the Indian reserves in the vicinity of Montreal to see that the Indians are properly vaccinated.

Mr. Archie Stewart, contractor for the Greece's Point locks, has a large claim against the Government for extras. Mr. Stewart was one of the subscribers to the Costigan testimonial fund.

Mr. Martin J. Griffin, late editor of the Mail, and Sir John's "joint" Librarian, has already got himself into a scrape, owing to his insolent manners. On Saturday, Mr. R. J. Wicksteed, assistant law clerk of the House of Commons, and a gentleman of high literary and social standing, entered Mr. Griffin's room for the purpose of looking at some books of reference, when the "joint" gentleman asked in a most insulting tone what he wanted. Mr. Wicksteed tried to explain his mission, but before he could do so he was ordered out. Mr. Wicksteed, who was an intimate friend of the late Librarian, Dr. Todd, does not intend to submit tamely to such an insult.

It is stated that in consequence of a recent attack on him by the Montreal Herald, Minister McLelan has ordered that that paper be removed from the list of those entitled to receive Government patronage.

A Shocking Tragedy.

A Well-to-do Farmer Assaults a Defenceless Woman—She Defends Herself With an Axe—Her Assailant in Frightfully Chopped and Cannot Live.

The township of Huntingdon was the scene of a shocking tragedy on Sunday, which will probably result in the death of a well-to-do and heretofore respectable farmer of that township. The particulars of the affair furnish ample material for a first-class temperance lecture.

It is stated that on Saturday, August 29th, Martin Archibald, who owns and occupies a well cultivated farm near Garner's hotel, in Huntingdon township, drove to Madoc, to transact some business. Whilst there he fell in with convival friends, and imbibed more freely than was his custom, so much so, indeed, that when he started for home late at night he was [illegible] the influences of strong drink.

About two o'clock on Sunday morning he stopped at a house occupied by Mrs. Mary Adams, which he had to pass on his way home. He tried to gain admittance, but was refused. He insisted upon being admitted, and the woman, who was alone in the house with her young son, became alarmed and threatened to assault him with an axe if he entered. Opposition only made him more determined, and he began a furious assault upon the door, which finally yielded to his blows. When the door was battered down. Archibald seized Mrs. Adams, when she made a determined struggle to escape from his grasp. The maddened man threw her to the floor, and the woman, seeing that she was powerless in his grasp, called for her son so assist her. The lad responded and struck Archibald with an axe, whereupon he released Mrs. Adams. The vindictive spirit of the injured woman was thoroughly aroused. In her anger and contempt she seized the axe from the boy, and attacked her now powerless adversary, inflicting twelve cuts, seven on his head and five on his shoulders. The gaping wounds were horrible beyond description, and the doctors say thah he cannot live.

When the woman had finished her horrible work, she went to a neighbor's house and told them about the affair, stating that she had killed Archibald. On returning to the house, it was found that life was not yet extinct.

Dr. Boulter, of Stirling, was summoned and dressed the wounds, but can give no hopes for his recovery. Archibald is about 50 years of age, and has a wife and four or five children who are above reproach. The unfortunate affair has created the wildest excitement in the neighborhood, and much sympathy is expressed for Mrs. Archibald and her family.—Intelligencer.

Belleville.

The Flint & Holton saw mill resumed operations yesterday morning. It will be remembered that their mill and planing factory were consumed by fire last February. As soon as the weather would permit, the work of reconstruction began, and has resulted in the saw mill being erected on the old site, which will have increased power and capacity over the mill consumed. The boilers, which did service before the fire, were found in good condition, and are still doing service. A fine 120 horse power engine, from the Hamilton Manufacturing Company, Peterborough, furnishes the power. The stone walls and the boiler are all there is to remind one of the old mill; all the other furnishings are new throughout.—Intelligencer.

FAMILY AFFECTION.

Solicitude for the welfare of one's relatives is, in the abstract, a most commendable trait of character, but when it is exercised at the expense of others who do not participate in the benefactions distributed, its propriety is open to question. The members of the present Dominion Government are models of careful guardians of the pecuniary interests of their families. The fattest berths and the most profitable places are bestowed upon the near relatives of Ministers of the Crown, a circumstance which nobody would object to if the salaries of the objects of Ministeria generosity were paid out of the pockets of the ministers themselves. When the people have to pay for the favouritism shown to Government pets, the affair takes an altogether different aspect. A case or two in point. The Minister of Customs has looked out for those of his household. Competent men have been compelled to stand aside while Hon. Mr. Bowell's son is appointed Appraiser of Customs at Winnipeg at a salary of $1,800 per year. Moreover, his son-in-law was given blind shares and a sinecure position as secretary, in the Prince Albert Colonization Company, to whose seizure of the lands of half-breeds on the Saskatchewan is immediately due more than to anything else, the outbreak of the Halfbreeds into rebellion. No matter what the consequences, the Minister's family must be provided for, a circumstance that was not forgotten by Mr. Bowell when he made his son's father-in-law appraiser of Customs for the Ottawa district over the heads of competent and deserving members of the party. Hon. Mr. Chapleau, Secretary of State, has the family feeling developed to such an extent that he forced his colleagues to reinstate his brother, who had been dismissed for betraying his official trust, and to appoint him to a Northwest shrievalty at a salary of $1,200 a year, with the little incidental allowance of an extra annual $600 as Superintendent of Public Works. And another brother has been shelved on the House of Commons staff. Sir Hector Langevin has so fully provided for his family that a gentleman who laid a wager that he could find a member of the Langevin family who was not appointed to a Government position, lost his bet. Sir Leonard Tilley has provided for all his relatives, who are of age, and will no doubt find places for the others as fast as they reach their majority. Hon. Mr. McLean, Minister of Marine, has also not been remiss in pensioning his family in the public purse. Hon. Mr. Caron, not having apparently any available children, heroically shouldered an uncle into the sepulchral seclusion of the Senate. Hon. Mr. White was more provident than his colleagues, for while he was only Minister of the Interior in prospectu, he worked it so that a "printing company," composed of his brother, his son and his nephew, got the benefit of thousands of dollars of illicit printing, while another son has been provided with a fat place in the Militia Department. Sir John himself is not behind-hand. He had a nephew who failed to pass the promotion examinations. A capable official was superannuated to provide a place for this young man, whose chief qualifications for office were what he did not know, and his relationship to the Premier. The members of the Dominion Cabinet may be extravagant, politically corrupt, and neglectful of the country's interest, but they have one redeeming quality—they look out for number one and for their "poor relations." And there is nothing selfish about their family affection, either. An indulgent people are allowed to have their share in this fine exhibition of feeling by contributing the funds for the enrichment of relatives of ministers of the crown. What does it matter if the debt of Canada is three hundred millions—an increase of two hundred and ten millions in eighteen years? What does it matter if the annual expenditure is about forty millions a year? What does it matter if we have to pay in interest on our national debt a sum equal to our total revenue twenty years ago? What does it matter, if the utmost extravagance of expenditure and waste characterize the administration of our public affairs? What does it matter if the people are taxed to the uttermost farthing to provide funds for the members of the Government to lavish on the members of their families? Perish such sordid considerations. Shall the exercise of the finer feelings of the heart of cabinet ministers be denied them, though the toiling masses have to pay to the last cent?

Hall Brothers have 600 logs stuck in the Chaudiere River, Que., the water being very low.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The Mail shows the real spirit of Toryism when it considers it a matter of reproach that the individual members of the Reform party do not allow their leaders to do their thinking for them.

It is claimed that the success of the Government candidates in East Durham and Cardwell is due to the fact of their being the exponents of the "definitive policy" of the Conservative party. There is, it must be conceded, a good deal of definitiveness in dollars and judiciously distributed pap.

Some idea of the addition which the new Franchise Act will make to the British voters' lists may be gathered from the new roll just made up in Midlothian—a constituency rendered famous by the stubborn contest between Gladstone and the Buccleugh family, in which the Premier gained the day. The number of voters in the constituency is now 13,315, an increase of 9,020.

Why Mr. Caron, Minister of Militia, received a knighthood is a colossal conundrum. Grip says it was for doing what he was paid to do—a most exceptional thing in Sir John's ministry. Hon. Mr. Laurier comes nearer the truth in saying that Hon. Mr. Caron received his knighthood "for crushing, at a cost of some seven million of dollars, a rebellion which he had helped to provoke."

The Conservative organ-in-chief claims that it is the mission of the Conservative party to "save Canada to the empire." Yet it was the Mail, which a few years ago declared that, if necessary, British connection must be sacrificed, if the policy of high taxation required the sacrifice—"so much the worse for British connection" was its rebellious threat.

A careful calculation of the chances might result in determining how soon we may have another rebellion in the Northwest. Sir John's recklessness and incompetency led to the first rebellion of '70. The same policy applied in a newer part of the country, precipitated the outbreak of 1885. If Sir John should live to repeat, as he is pretty sure to do, his policy of oppression and supercilious indifference to the rights of the people of the Northwest, the Rocky Mountain region may witness the next rising.

It is said the Dukes of Bedford, Westminster and Devonshire are the three wealthiest noblemen in England, and they are all three Liberals. Lord Hartington is the eldest son of the Duke of Devonshire. It is said, in case Mr. Gladstone fails to lead the Liberal party, Mr. Chamberlain will make a desperate effort to supplant Lord Hartington as leader. Mr. Bright, who still retains an immense influence over the older men of the Radical party, will give the weight of his influence in favor of Lord Hartington.

Prof. Brown, of the Experimental Farm, in referring to cattle raising, says that for beef production the Aberdeen-Poll, the Hereford and the Galloways are not the best. The Shorthorns are certainly likely to retain the first place. Professor Brown says the Jersey, Guernsey and Ayrshire are excellent dairy animals, but they cannot take the place of the direct or indirect beef-makers where beef-making is to be taken into consideration along with dairy products. The Aberdeen-Poll is a very fine animal, and many farmers will be disposed to raise them because of their being Poll cattle, and individual farmers may find them better than the Hereford or Shorthorns, but for the majority the Shorthorns will continue on the whole the most profitable.

Immense London.

The immensity of London is almost inconceivable. Its vastness and proportions cannot be grasped by any but the most mathematical of human minds. This has been adroitly illustrated by a journal anxious to defend it from the charges of wholesale corruption and immorality which have lately been adduced. The newspaper in question says the people are not so bad as they are painted, and that in proportion to population there is no more wickedness in London than in any large city on this continent, and not nearly so much as in the French and Austrian capitals. "Look at the size of this metropolis!" cries the writer. "The British capital is equal to seven St. Petersburgs, eight Viennas, Madrids or Berlins, nine Naples or Moscows, thirteen Lisbons, Amsterdams or Marseilles, twenty Hamburgs, Mexicos, Brussels and Copenhagens, and very nearly thirty Dresdens, Stockholms, Florences or Frankforts. If Liverpool, Manchester, Birmingham, Leeds, Sheffield, Bristol, Wolverhampton, Newcastle, Plymouth, Bradford, Portsmouth, Hull, Oldham and Sunderland were all thrown into one town, they would conjointly fall short of London in population. Here, within the circuit of a few miles, are as many people as in Canada and more than in the whole of Holland. London exceeds by something like three times the entire Norwegian nation, and by several thousands the Portuguese."

CONFEDERATE MONEY.

The Pink-Pissed Treasury Notes of a Surrendered Government—Money in too Much Abundance.

The confederate Government did not lack for money. In 1861 it issued $100,000,000, and until the last year of the war continued to send out bills of every convenient denomination, from $1,000 to 25 cents. There were green 5-cent postage stamps with the profile of Jefferson Davis on them, and these were sometimes used in making "change," but the man who did it was always pitied as a penurious, rascally fellow. In those days southern men turned up their aristocratic noses at "shinplasters," just as they do now at pennies. The different states of the confederacy had other money, paid it to state troops, and felt like solid, honest commonwealths.

Confederate money is handsome. Of course, the paper is inferior, but some of the designs are well executed. It has a blue back, on which are intricate curves and circles and curls, and its value denoted by a single word in letters an inch and a half tall. There is no uniformity in the designs. On some bills there will be imaginary heads and sketches—a woman, a pile of arks, a rush to battle. On others appear likenesses of confederate heroes and confederate state-houses; as Jefferson Davis on the 50's and Alexander H. Stephens on the 20's, the Nashville, Tennessee, state-house on the 10's, and the Richmond, Virginia, state-house on the 5's. The face of confederate money is colored pink around the likenesses. The first bills were simple notes, payable in six months. The second and all subsequent issues were made payable at different times "after a ratification of a treaty of peace between the confiederate states of America and the United States."

Confederate money was not long in going below par. During the war it was not the extortion of merchants which ran up prices to fabulous figures, but it was the depreciation of the currency. In some sections calico sold for $10 a yard, good shoes at $80 and $100 a pair. Fifteen dollars would purchase a spool of thread or a paper of pins. Medicines and all luxuries were as hard to get as husbands and natural protectors—they were not in the market for that sort of paper. A silver dollar was worth at least thirty confederate dollars. The confederacy understood that it had to protect its currency as well as their rights, and an act was passed making it treason for moneys to be exchanged for different values. There is something tender and pathetic in the willingness of the grey soldiers to receive confederate bills for pay. They knew its depreciation, but they loved the principles it represented, and principles do not, cannot, depreciate. "It took a hatful of the paper to buy a loaf of bread," said an old war-horse to the writer, "but bread bought with it tasted mighty sweet." "Great golly!" said another, "I was in mortal dread the whole paper supply of the country would give out (they issued so much of the stuff), and that we would have to do without periodicals and news. There were sharp men in the south who never had confidence in confederate money, and they never kept it as long as a week. They were always on the buy, bought everything (but negroes), and were glad to buy at high prices—at any price. Results commended their wisdom. When the war ended they were the proprietors, while others owned nothing, save piles of blue-back bills and negro tracks at the backyard gate.

Money accumulated so rapidly on some men that they kept it in large boxes, in barrels, and in bureau drawers. The write means confederate money. Silver and gold were unknown quantities. This was the sort of stuff they had to live on and take comfort in when days were dark and dreary—valueless notes, as miserable an eyesore as can be imagined.

In 1865 a law was passed by most of the southern states for the relief of trustees, administrators, and executors who might have in their possession confederate money realized from sales. By depositing the money in the office of the ordinary or probate judge of the county, and swearing that it was the amount received for trust property, the guardian or administrator was released from all liability. Like a two-edged sword this law cut both ways. It was a blessing to many honest men, and it led into temptation others who were not strong to resist. The ward's lands and houses went into possession of the fond guardian, who paid for it with a lie, kissed on the bible, and a number of worthless blue-back bills stuck in a pigeon-hole in the ordinary's office. An Enquirer writer was recently shown in Georgia a large amount of confederate money thus deposited; one lot of $50 bills (there were four hundred of them) seemed so bright and crisp that the eyes sparkled at the sight.

There has never been a craze among the curiosity collectors for confederate money. At old bookstores and small shops it is bought and sold once in a long while. The $1,000 bill is scarce, and readily finds buyers at $2 or $3 each; the $500 bill can be bought for twenty or thirty cents; the other denominations can be had for a song.

Soon after the war, men and women began to know for a certainty that their money was valuable only as paper. The ingenious housewives began to use it as money never before was used. Many families were compelled to move from fine homes to poor ones. They would have little furniture to take with them, but always a box of confederate money and some bonds. They would find their new home in a deplorable condition, and at once they would begin to improve its appearance by papering it with old journals and periodicals, and putting above and below a border made of confederate money.

Screens were made of bonds with money borders—in fact, everything susceptible of ornamentation received its supply of paste and pink treasury notes.

It was said of one that those he slew in his death exceeded in number those he slew in his life. It is true of the confederate treasury. In its life it carried on a dreadful war, and in its death it brought down high families and fine establishments.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

tions; so I found my way down the steep hill, and began walking up the riverside, whilst the merry stream danced past me, throwing its rich brown peatstained waters into a thousand little cascades as it shot over and foamed round the great bowlders which disputed its passage.

I followed its course for about a mile—now clambering over moss-grown rocks, now wading through ferns, now forcing my way through pliant hazel boughs—then in an open space on the opposite bank I saw a girl sitting sketching. Her back was toward me, but I knew every turn of that graceful figure well enough to feel sure she was my wife.

If I had needed extra assurance I had but to look at her companion, who sat near her and appeared to be dozing over a book. I should have recognized that shawl of Priscilla's a mile away—its like has never been known on earth.

Hard as I found it to do so, I resolved not to make my presence known to them. Before I met Pauline I wanted to talk to Priscilla and be guided by her report as to my future method of proceeding. But in spite of my determination I yielded to the temptation of drawing nearer—from where I stood I could not see her face—so I crept on inch by inch till I was nearly opposite the sketcher, and, half hidden by the undergrowth, I stood watching her to my heart's content.

There was the hue of health upon her cheek—there was the appearance of health in every movement, and as she turned and spoke a few words to her companion there was that in her look and in her smile which made my heart bound. The wife I returned to was a different being from the girl I had married.

She turned and looked across the stream. Carried away by my joy I had entirely emerged from my lurking place. With the river between us our eyes met.

She must in some way have remembered me. Were it but as in a dream my face must have seemed familiar to her. She dropped her pencil and sketch-book and sprung to her feet before Priscilla's exclamation of surprise and delight was heard. She stood looking at me as though she expected I would speak or come to her, whilst the old servant was sending words of welcome across the noisy stream.

Had I wished to retreat, it was now too late. I found a crossing-place and in a minute or two was on the opposite bank.

Pauline had not moved, but Priscilla ran to meet me and almost shook my hand off.

"Does she remember—does she know me?" I whispered, as I disengaged myself and walked toward my wife.

"Not yet; but she will. I am sure she will, Master Gilbert."

Breathing a prayer that her prophecy might come true, I reached Pauline's side and held out my hand. She took it without hesitation, and raised her dark eyes to mine. How did I refrain from clasping her to my heart!

"Pauline, do you know me?"

She dropped her eyes. "Priscilla has talked of you. She tells me you are a friend and that until you come I must be content and ask no questions."

"But do you not remember me? I fancied you knew me just now."

She sighed. "I have seen you in dreams—strange dreams." As she spoke a bright blush spread over her cheek.

"Tell me the dreams," I said.

"I cannot. I have been ill, very ill, for a long time. I have forgotten much—everything that happened."

"Shall I tell you?"

"Not now—not now," she cried, eagerly. "Wait, and it may all come back."

Had she an inkling of the truth? Were the dreams she spoke of but the struggles of growing memory? Did that bright ring which was still on her finger suggest to her what had happened? Yes, I would wait and hope.

We walked back together, with Priscilla following at a proper distance. Pauline seemed to accept my society as though it was a perfectly natural thing to do so. When the path grew steep or rugged, she held out her hand for mine, as though its support was her right. Yet for a long time she said nothing.

"Where have you come from?" she asked at last.

"From a long, long journey of many thousands of miles."

"Yes; when I saw your face you were always traveling. Did you find what you sought?" she asked eagerly.

"Yes. I found the truth. I know everything."

"Tell me where he is?"

"Where who is?"

"Anthony, my own brother—the boy they killed. Where is his grave?"

"He is buried by the side of his mother."

"Thank God! I shall be able to pray over him."

She spoke, if excitedly, quite sensibly, but I wondered she was not craving for justice to be meted out to the murderers.

"Do you wish for vengeance on those who killed him?"

"Vengeance! what good can vengeance do? It will not bring him back to life. It happened long ago. When, I know not; but now it seems years ago. God may have avenged him by now."

"He has, in a great measure. One died in a prison raving mad; another is in chains, working like a slave; the third, as yet, is unpunished."

"It will come to him, sooner or later. Which is it?"

"Macari."

She shuddered at the name and said no more. Just before we reached the house in which they lodged, she said, softly and beseechingly:

"You will take me to Italy—to his grave?"

I promised, only too glad to find how instinctively she turned to me to prefer the request. She must remember more than she gave herself credit for.

"I will go there," she said, "and see the place, and then we will speak of the past no more."

We were now at the garden gate. I took her hand in mine.

"Pauline," I said, "try—try to remember me."

A ghost of the old puzzled look came into her eyes; she paused, her disengaged hand over her forehead, and then, without a word, turned away and entered the house.

CHAPTER XV.

FROM GRIEF TO JOY.

My tale is drawing to an end, although I could, for my own pleasure, write chapter after chapter, detailing every occurrence of the next [illegible] ing every look, repeating every word that passed between Pauline and myself, but if I wrote them they would be sacred from all persons save two—my wife and myself.

If my situation was an anomalous one it had at least a certain charm. It was a new wooing, none the less entertaining and sweet because its object happened to be already my wife in name. It was like a landowner walking over his estate and in every direction finding unsuspected beauties and unknown mines of wealth. Every day showed me fresh charms in the woman I loved.

Her smile was a joy greater than I had ever pictured, her laugh a revelation. To gaze into those bright unclouded eyes and strive to learn their secrets was a reward that repaid me for all that I suffered. To find that her intellect, now restored, was fit to be matched with any one's—to know that when the time came I should be given not only a wife, beautiful in my eyes, above all women, but a companion and a sympathetic friend—how can I describe my rapture?

Yet it was a rapture not unmodified by doubts and fears. It may be that my character lacked that very useful trait called by some self-confidence, and by others conceit. The more I saw to love and admire in Pauline, the more I asked myself how I could dare to expect that so peerless a creature would condescend to accept the love and the life I wished to offer her. Who was I to win her? I was rich, it is true, but I felt sure that riches would not buy her affection—besides, as I had not told her that her own wealth was swept away, she fancied her fortune was as large as my own. She was young, beautiful, and, so far as she knew, free and amply provided for. No, I had nothing to offer her which was worthy of her acceptance.

I quite dreaded to look forward to the moment which must sooner or later come—the moment when I must, ignoring the past, ask her once more to be my wife. On her answer would hang the whole of my future life. No wonder I decided to postpone the ordeal until I felt quite certain that the result of it would be favorable to me. No wonder that when with Pauline, and realizing the value of the prize I aimed at, I grew quite humble and depreciatory of what merits I may have possessed. No wonder that at times I wished that I were gifted with that pleasing assurance which sits so well on many men, and, time and opportunity being given, seems to go a long way toward winning a woman's heart.

Time and opportunity at least were not wanting in my case.

I had taken up my quarters near to her, and from morn to night we were in each other's company. We wandered through the narrow Devonshire lanes, with their luxuriant banks of ferns on either side. We climbed the rugged tors. We fished with more or less success the rapid streams. We drove together. We read and sketched—but as yet we had not talked of love; though all the while my wedding-ring was on her finger.

It required all my authority to prevent Priscilla telling Pauline the truth. On this point I was firm. Unless the past came back of its own accord, I would hear her say she loved me before my lips revealed it to her. Perhaps it was the idea which at times came to me, that Pauline remembered more than she would own to, kept me steadfast in this resolution.

It was curious the way in which she at once fell into friendly, unconstrained intercourse with me. We might have known each other from childhood, so perfectly natural and unembarrassed was her manner when we were together. She made no demur when I begged her to call me by my Christian name, nor did she object to my making use of her own. Had she done so I cannot think in what form I should have addressed her. Although I had instructed Priscilla to call her Miss March, the old woman stoutly objected to this, and compounded matters by speaking to and of her as Miss Pauline.

The days slipped by—the happiest days my life had as yet known. Morn, noon and eve we were together; and I fear were objects of great curiosity to our neighbors, who no doubt wondered what relations existed between me and the beautiful girl at whose side I ever was.

I soon found that Pauline's natural disposition was gay and bright. It was too soon yet to expect it to reassert itself, yet I was not without hopes that before long that look, telling of sad memories, which so often crossed her face would fade away forever. Now and again a pleased smile lit up her face, and merry words slipped from her lips. Although when reason first returned to her, it seemed as if her brother's death had occurred but the day before, I felt sure that, after a while, she understood that years had passed since the fatal night. These years were to her wrapped in a mist; they seemed as dreams. She was trying to recall them, beginning at the beginning; and I need not say with what alacrity I lent my aid.

By common consent we avoided the future; but of the past, or all the past in which I was not concerned, we spoke freely. All the events of her early years she now remembered perfectly; she could account for everything up to the time when her brother was struck down—after that came mistiness; from which she emerged to find herself in a strange room, ill, and being nursed by a strange nurse.

Several days passed before Pauline questioned me as to the part I had played in her clouded life. One evening we stood on the top of a thickly wooded hill, from which we could just catch a glimpse of the sea, now reddened by a glorious sunset. We had been silent for some time, and who can say that

Music and Dancing.

It was doubtless due to the storm that sprang up last evening about the time for assembling at the entertainment of Misses Churchill and Strong, given in Bradburn's Opera House, under the auspices of the ladies of St. John's Church, that there was not as large an audience as the merit of the entertainmen would have been expected to call out. The elocutionery part of the programme was well represented by Miss Churchill, who, in her rendition of the half dozen readings she presented, sustained the high reputation she has achieved. She gave in an exceptionally excellent manner, Longfellow's ballad, "Hiawatha," in which her control over her full and sympathetic voice, was employed to the great delight of her audience. Her reading of Pope's "Vital Spark" was also an elocutionary gem, in which the assistance of Miss Strong, who sang at the same time behind the scenes, "Sweet Spirit, Hear My Prayer," produced a delightful effect Miss Strong as vocalist achieved a great success, in the treatment of the several numbers assigned her. The programme published in our impression of Saturday, was carried out in its entirety, except in Miss Strong's fourth number, in which "Some Day" was substituted. In the rendering of this Miss Strong was exceedingly happy, and the audience were so carried away with delight, as the rich qualities of her full contralto voice of unusual compass, became developed in the course of its rendition, that she was repeatedly recalled. Mr Hampshire, organist of St. John's Church, played the pianoforte accompaniments in a remarkably excellent manner, especially when it is considered that he did so without the previous practice with Miss Strong of a single bar of the difficult classical music performed. The entertainment was a very pleasant one and those who braved the elements last night were richly rewarded for their attendance.

ATHLETICS.

THE CARRIAGE SMITH'S GAME YESTERDAY.

The game between the employes of Messrs. Fitzgerald & Stanger and those of Messrs. Lockhart & Chowen was played on Riverside Park yesterday afternoon. In one respect it beats the record. Fitzgerald and Stanger's men, who were the victors, piling up the tremendous score of 64 runs. Their opponents only succeeded in getting fourteen times around the diamond; as may be judged from the score and the known muscle of the players, the batting was heavy, and the fielding weak, to hold on to a ball, even when caught, being a feat seldom accomplished.

Lacrosse.

BEAVERTON HEARD FROM AT LAST.

Mr. G. H. Giroux, Secretary of the Peterborough Lacrosse Club, has received a telegram from the Secretary of the Checkers of Beaverton asking if Thursday 10th inst. will be accepted as the date for the championship match. The propposition will be considered at a meeting of the club to be held at the Little Windsor to-morrow evening.

CRETES V. RIVERSIDE.

The return match between these clubs will be played on Monday afternoon at 4 p.m. in Riverside Park. The Cretes think they can retrieve their defeat of yesterday, and a lively game is likely to result.

MEETING OF THE PETERBOROUGH CLUBS.

A meeting of the members of the Foot Ball Club will be held at the office of Sec'y P.A.A.A., over the Post Office, on Thursday evening, at 7 o'clock. All members and those intending to join are requested to be present, as matters of importance will be brought up.

They Know Where to Come.

Parties in need of first class engines and boilers know that they can get just what is wanted by coming to the William Hamilton Manufacturing Company. This firm supplied the splendid 120-h.p. engine placed in Flint & Holton's new saw mill, Belleville, which is now in running order.

A Big Boiler.

The William Hamilton Manufacturing Company have just completed and delivered the boiler for the engine room of the Powell & Jones Stove Works. The boiler, which is of the very best description, measures twelve feet in length, and is four feet in diameter. It will be placed in position at once. Previous to being removed from Hamilton's foundry a photograph was made of it by Mr. Sproule.

Matrimonial.

We have much pleasure in recording an interesting matrimonial event, which took place in Cavan to-day. It was the marriage of Mr. Geo. A Mitchell, of Winnipeg, at one time a resident of Peterborough, to Miss Nellie, daughter of Mr. Joseph Armstrong, of Cavan. The bride was the recipient of a large number of elegant and valuable presents. At the conclusion of the ceremony the happy pair started for Winnipeg, which will be their future home. We join the numerous friends of the happy pair in the most cordial congratulations and best wishes for future happiness.

Obstructing an Officer.

William, Isaac, and Henry Hoskin were charged at the Police Court this morning with having obstructed Mr. Stapleton in the performance of his duty as a Bailiff. From the evidence of Mr. Stapleton it appears that William Hoskin sold to William McNern a three year old heifer, which was subsequently claimed by his son Isaac, who refused to allowed the sale to be consumated and the animal removed. McNern then secured a writ of replevin, and it was in the service of this that the obstruction complained of occurred. Mr. Stapleton, accompanied by two assistants, named Kemp and Flannery, on Friday evening went to the farm of William and Isaac Hoskins, about two miles out of town, and found the heifer in dispute grazing in a field near the house. The Bailiff and Kemp drove up to the house and Mr. Stapleton explained to William Hoskin that he held the writ and must do his duty by removing the heifer, but told Isaac that if he had a claim to the annimal he might, in order that his claim might not be prejudiced, object to the removal, but that he, the bailiff, would still take her away. It was also explained that the writ of replevin was accompanied by a bond of $50, to secure the defendants if, in a subsequent action, they sustained their claim on her. They, however, refused to allow the removal of the heifer, and made use of violent and threatening language, and used force in preventing Mr. Stapleton and his assistants from opening the gate to the road and removing the cow. Henry Hoskins, who lives near by, attracted by the noise, appeared on the scene, armed with a club, and joined in the offensive demonstrations against the bailiff and his men. They succeeded in frustrating the bailiff's intentions and that officer had to leave without the cow, which was afterwards seized on Saturday.

Mr. John Burnham, who appeared for the defence, contended that the bailiff should have allowed a period of 24 hours between service of the writ of replevin and the actual seizure. Mr. Wood, of Hatton & Wood, for the prosecution, urged that such notice was unnecessary in the case.

The Police Magistrate considered the charge fully proven against all three defendants and imposed a fine of $5 and costs, or in default of payment 30 days imprisonment.

BOARD OF EDUCATION.

A School for the North Ward.

School Attendance.

A meeting of the Board of Education was held last evening, Mr. Jas. Stevenson, chairman presiding. The following members were present:—Messrs. Kendry, Sawers, Dumble, Denne, Weir, Errett and Miller.

The report of Mr. H. Kay Coleman, Principal of Public School, was presented, showing the attendance on the opening of the school to have been as follows:—Mr. Coleman's room, 48; Mr. Beattie's, 56; Miss Nichols', 53; Miss Jenkins', 38; Miss Dowling's, 39; Miss Perry's, 48; Miss Matthew's, 42; Miss Johnson's, 51; Miss Graham's, 60; Miss Elsworth's, 44; Miss Errett's, 65. Total, 544.

The attendance at the High School was 103.

The accounts against the Board for expenses of Entrance Examinations, $58.75, and Teachers' Examinations, $24.80, were received and the Treasurer instructed to pay them.

Mr. Sabine's account of $16 for extra drawing lessons was referred to the Finance Committee.

An application was read from Mr. Long, master of the High School, asking for an increase of salary to $1,000, and after a brief discussion, on motion of Mr. Dumble, the request was acceded to.

The report of Mr. J. Stratton, in reference to changes in the scheme of teaching, recommending the consideration of them by the Supervisory Committee, with a view to devising modes of action, and stating that the pupils promoted had been recommended to get the new readers, while those not promoted would continue the use of the old until January, when all would get the new series, thus saving the expense of purchasing new books now and again in January, was received and referred to the Supervisory Committee, with power to act.

Mr. Sawers, seconded by Mr. Dumble, moved "that the Property Committee have the school building painted and pointed the same as small one if it can be done at reasonable price, and that it be left to the committee with power to act."—Carried.

The application of Miss M. E. Hunt, of Parkdale, Ont., for the position of lady teacher in the High School was read by Mr. Dumble, who said the lady's application seemed to indicate that she would be a suitable person, but as she held her teaching certificates from the Lower Province she could not be admitted to teach in Ontario unless admitted by an ad eundem examination.

It was decided to make further inquiries regarding Miss Hunt's candidature.

Mr. Sawers, seconded by Mr. Dumble, moved "that the fee charged at the Collegiate Institute to pupils from outside the county be $1 in place of $2 as heretofore."—Carried.

Mr. Errett thought that the services of Miss Cooper as teacher of drawing could be dispensed with by having the regular teachers give instructions in that branch. He believed they were capable of doing so. This matter was left in the hands of the Inspector.

Mr. Sawers, seconded by Mr. Kendry, then moved "that steps be taken for the erection of a North Ward school and that the matter be referred to a special committee to consist of Messrs. Kendry, Denne, Dumble, Weir, Wrighton and Sawers, who should report at the next meeting of the Board.—Carried.

The meeting then adjourned.

PANTS.

How often does it happen that the general comfort and happiness of man, depends on a good fitting pair of pants. Nothing will ruffle a man's temper more than to find when he tries on his latest new pair of pants that they are either too long or too short; that they pinch him so bad in one place that he dare not stoop, and are so large and baggy around the waist and knees that he is afraid he might be taken for the departed "Smith."

A SAFE THING TO DO

Riel's Appeal.

The Argument Must be Made in his Presence.

WINNIPEG, Man., Sept. 2.—There was a large attendance at the Court House to-day to hear the argument in the Riel appeal case. Lemieux and Fitzpatrick, of the Quebec bar, appeared for Riel, J. S. Ewart, Q.C., of this city, being associated with them. C. C. Robinson, Q.C., and B. B. Osler, Q.C., Toronto, appeared for the Crown. Counsel for prisoner contended that both Riel and the original record should be in court. After argument the court decided that the point was well taken and an adjournment was made until Friday, when Crown counsel agreed to produce prisoner.

There is great excitement in Winnipeg, and fears are entertained of a hostile demonstration on Riel's appearance.

A Northeast Passage.

The New Route for Canadian Goods Through Hudson's Bay Found Practicable.

WINNIPEG, Man., Aug. 31, 1885.—A messenger who has just arrived overland from York Factory, on Hudson's Bay, reports that the Government vessel Alert, sent out with provisions to the stations located along the Straits with the view of ascertaining the facts as to the navigable waters, arrived at York Factory safe and sound nearly four weeks ago. No ice whatever was encountered in the Straits or Bay, and the trip from the mouth of the Straits to York Factory was made in about five days. The messenger reports that the officers stationed at the different points of observation report very favorably as to the possibility of navigation for the summer season being sufficiently long to warrant the construction of a railway and the establishment of a route.

A Sufferer's Complaint.

To the Editor of THE EXAMINER:

DEAR SIR,—Being one of those who enjoyed the concert given in Bradburn's Hall Tuesday evening under the auspices of the ladies of St. John's Church, I was somewhat surprised at the inconsiderate conduct of some of the audience, of whom better things might have been expected. During the time that Miss Strong was singing, conversation was being carried on in tones distinctly audible in all parts of the hall, and which detracted much from the pleasure of listening to her. Persons who do not take sufficient interest in a musical programme to listen closely themselves, should at least remember that there may be some in the room who appreciate it, and not by their inconsiderate interruptions disturb their enjoyment. Hoping that this will be borne in mind at future entertainments, I remain,

Respectfully yours,
A LOVER OF MUSIC.

Hastings.

In Hastings on Thursday last a friendly match took place between a team of seven from Norwood and an equal number from Hastings, resulting in a victory for Norwood by 34 points, the totals being, Hastings 303, and Norwood 337. Distance, 200, 400 and 500 yards, seven shots at each range. The wind was not favorable for good shooting.

Burglars are busy in this town. Campbellford.

Last week the enormous drive of logs in our river came to an end. The close was a most exciting and dramatic one. John Smith, a river driver of renown, determined to run the slide, leap over the dam and scoot through the rapids on a single log. Scores of people looked on as John went through his performance. It was more exciting than any feat by the paid acrobat, for there was a spice of danger in it. It might have been a tradegy, but it ended all right, and John came to the shore none the worse for his journey.

Lover of the roundelay,
Fairies of the midnight hour,
Let us laugh the time away,
Let us dance in elvan bower;
For the merry moments fleeting,
Rich and ripe with friendly greeting,—
Flower and fruit in fragrance meeting,
Lend to love a mystic power.

But, woe's me! Marrying and giving in marriage seem almost to be things of the past in this dear, old, antiquated locality; and, indeed, it is not much to be wondered at when we reflect that most men feel and think as did Camden, when he declared, in his own homely, but terse language, "I will not buy a pig in a poke." As a rule, in the true sense of the word, men like to know what they are getting; now, however, that is out of the question, when so many of the fair ones, with bad taste, we honestly believe, persist in concealing the nobler, the more intellectual—aye, we will say it, the more angelic part of the human face.

Miss Eliza Londerville, of Hastings, is here on a visit to her namesake at present. One's heart warms to a sweet, fair, comely, common-sense face like hers, so rarely seen now-a-days—can't be seen.

Mr. Stephen and Philander Dudley, from near Colborne, paid our picturesque little town and ourselves a visit last week. We were glad to see their kindly faces once more. We also had the pleasure last Tuesday of a meeting and a chat with an old time acquaintance and friend of our boy days, James Masson, Esq., barrister, of Owen Sound. He gives his brother, Stewart Masson, Esq., of the firm of Stone & Masson, barristers, of Peterborough, a call on his way west.

Dr. Harrison chartered Mr. Burnett's steam yacht, Sunbeam, last Monday and kindly gave some visitors and friends a pleasant trip to Harwood on our delightful lake.

Alexander Gillespie, Esq., M.D., of Lindsay, gave his parents and friends a flying visit the end of last week.

Mr. English, of Allandale, had a sprig of Siberian Crab at the station on Tuesday evening, on about fifteen inches of which there were about 25 well-developed apples.

The harvest in this locality is drawing to a close and many farmers are busily engaged ploughing for fall wheat.

The work on Campbell & McNeil's block is advancing rapidly, the plasterers are already there and the brickwork is nearly completed.

Some fine muskalloonge are being caught in the river now. One lad came up with five the other day, after having been but a short time on the water.

The fate of Riel is a subject of much concern here at present, and many good Conservatives declare that if he does not get his well earned deserts as alloted by law, the Government will bear of it on some future day.

Seventeen Persons Drowned.

OSHKOSH, Wis., Sept. 2.—A horrible drowning accident occurred at the St. Paul railroad bridge at 6 o'clock this morning. The draw being open, 11 persons, 9 girls and 2 men, attempted to cross the open channel in a boat, were caught in the swell of a tug which passed through previously and the boat was upset, only five of them rescued. The bodies have all been recovered.

The Effingham Tragedy.

Horrible Double Murder Unearthed.

Late last fall a man named Alex. Easterby and his wife, living at Effingham, Haldimand county, about seven miles from St. Catherines, both mysteriously disappeared. At first no attention was paid to the matter, but later on the friends of the missing parties became suspicious that all was not right and began to search for them. A brother of the missing man named Howard recently made some startling revelations. He states that Easterby was continually quarrelling with his wife, Leafie, and finally killed her and buried the body in a garden adjoining the house, which was occupied by them. Another brother, named John, appears to have been an accomplice, and is now in custody. The brother Howard was engaged by John to assist him in removing the body of the unfortunate woman, and while doing this the brothers quarreled, and in the affray Howard was nearly killed. The brother, John, states that Alexander killed his wife and afterwards arranged to commit suicide, asking John if he did not kill himself outright to finish the job. Alexander shot himself, but did not kill himself, and he (John) cut Alexander's throat with a razor and buried the body in Miller's woods. Upon repairing to the spot pointed out by Howard and digging, the body of the woman was found buried about three feet from the surface.

ST. CATHARINES, Sept. 2.—It is now stated that the body of Alexander Easterby, the husband, who tried to commit suicide after burying his wife and was finally despatched by his brother John, has been found, and an inquest will be held.

The New Traction Engine.

From the Ontario Reformer, August 28th.

As we were going to press the New Traction Engine started with a Thresher for the town of Whitby, thence north towards Brooklin. It returned a short time since, having made 14 miles without any delay or accident. As an engine for drawing a threshing machine it has been clearly demonstrated that it has no rival on this continent.

The Negro as a Gossip.

The principal reason why papers edited and conducted exclusively by colored men and exclusively for the so-called benefit of the colored race have generally met with bad luck, and been so short lived, is that the negro has no need of a newspaper.

He is a born gossip, a natural newsgatherer, and whatever he may chance to see or hear is at once scattered to the four winds of heaven, through the medium of such of his own race as he may happen to meet.

A hasty telling, a picturesque embellishment, and away go the self-appointed couriers, happy in the possession of a bit of news that insures them a hearty welcome everywhere, and invests them with a dignity they could not otherwise hope to obtain.

Nothing pleases the negro better than a chance to talk, whether it be pulpit, cornfield, street corner, or any other place where two or three of his race are gathered together.

Tell him something important, and in less than twenty-four hours his neighbors for forty miles around have heard all about it, decorated with weird brilliancy of meaning the various passages it has traversed. No matter where the negro may be or in what occupation engaged, if he can have some one to talk to he is perfectly happy, and evolves a quantity of wisdom, ludicrous and otherwise, that would make old Col. Pinto, of the Athenian cavalry, turn pale with envy.

The negro is a gregarious animal also, and for him solitude has absolutely not a single charm.

He will at any time walk ten miles for company's sake, and a chance to air his social, political or religious opinions is considered by him a greater favor than a glass of whisky with white sugar thrown in.

He don't like to be forced to commune with himself, at least not till he gets to be a hundred years old; prefers stewed rabbit to a reverie and religiously believes that in the multitude of counselors there is safety.

Of the ten measures of talk that are supposed to have been thrown from heaven the negro got nine, and he makes constant use of them on each and every possible occasion.—Hamilton Jay in Detroit Free Press.

THURSDAY, SEPT. 3, 1885.

THE DICKSON EXEMPTION.

The Mayor, in accordance with a resolution passed at the last meeting of the Town Council, has called a public meeting to be held to-morrow evening in Bradburn's Opera House. The object of this meeting is to afford the taxpayers of Peterborough an opportunity of expressing their opinions in regard to the recently enacted by-law exempting from taxation, for a period of ten years from 1st January 1886, certain prospective improvements on the Dickson estate, and to obtain an expression of their feelings respecting exemptions in general. As the by-law has been the subject of much misconception and misunderstanding we publish its full text:

BY-LAW CCCCXCV.

A by-law to grant certain privileges and exemptions to the Dickson Company, of Peterborough, limited:—

WHEREAS, the said company have acquired the several water privileges on the River Otonabee, extending from the Dominion Mills on the north to Wilson's Woollen Factory on the south, and intend to develop the said privileges by erecting thereon factories of different descriptions, and it is advisable and in the interests of the town that the privileges, immunities and exemptions hereinafter mentioned should be granted to the said company;

And whereas, the total assessment of the said water privileges so acquired by the said company, and the lands in connection therewith amounts to the sum of $50,000.00;

The corporation of the town of Peterborough, by the Council thereof, enacts the following.

(1) That the aggregate assessment of the said several properties of the said company shall be and remain during a period of ten years from the first day of January next the sum of $50,000.00, and the assessor or assessors from time to time of the said town are hereby authorized and required to assess the said several properties at such sums respectively, so that the aggregate of their several assessments thereof shall not exceed the said sum of $50,000, notwithstanding the erection thereon of any building, or the placing in any of the buildings erected, or that may hereafter be erected thereon, of any machinery, provided, however, that the immunity hereby granted shall not apply to any part of the said property which shall be used for any purpose other than that of manufacturing, during the time of its being used for such other purpose.

(Signed), Geo. A. Cox,
Mayor.

From a careful perusal of the by-law, it will be seen that it does not contemplate the exemption from taxation of any portion of the Dickson estate as it at present exists, but only such additions of new buildings and machinery, or improvements of machinery in buildings already existing as may be made from time during the next ten years, and these only if used for manufacturing purposes. No portion of the revenue at present derived from the Dickson estate will be forfeited under the provisions of the by-law.

The readiness with which the proposal was met to exempt from taxation the stove works and lock factory, now in course of erection, shows that a majority of the townspeople are fully alive to the benefits likely to accrue from the establishing here of manufacturing industries, but ignorance or misconception of the character of the by-law in question has led to an attempt to have it repealed, the principal ground of opposition to it, so far as we can see, being a vague fear that advantage may be taken of it to establish along the river, with immunity from taxation, industries that may clash or come in competition with similar ones now in operation in other parts of the town and subject to assessment for taxation.

We must admit that to us this apprehension does not seem to be well founded. It is true that a building is at present being erected, which it is proposed to divide into small apartments supplied with power to drive machinery, but the object of this seems to be rather to afford a cheap and convenient power to such of our own townspeople as see fit to avail themselves of it than to induce outside parties to start in competition with them. It has long been remarked that this water power, one of the finest in the country, should be the means of attracting to Peterborough manufactories on a larger scale than any we now have; and its development in that way seems to us to be one of the first essentials for the continued growth and prosperity of the town. For this reason we incline to the opinion that the taxpayers would be wise if, instead of placing any obstacle in the path of the Dickson Company, they would actively second their efforts by making widely known the advantages to be obtained by manufacturers locating here. In this way we might secure the establishment of industries which should not only not "clash" with those we already possess, but whose wares should find a market in remote parts of the Dominion, and thus, in addition to increasing our tax-paying population by the number of operatives employed in them, derive from entirely foreign sources the profits, out of which would be paid the wages of these employees, a large proportion of which would necessarily be spent here. The city of Brantford not many years ago went to the expense of circulating in England a large number of pamphlets setting forth the advantages offered by that city to prospective manufacturers, and as a direct result of that enterprise they have now a cotton factory and a wincey factory, each employing a large number of hands. The same city has always been liberal in the matter of exemptions, and owes its present standing as a manufacturing city, in no small degree, to that fact. The day when Peterborough could rely for its support in growth on the immediately adjacent country has gone by, and to increase or maintain its present prosperity it is absolutely necessary that it should become a manufacturing centre; and, with our unsurpassed water power and unrivalled railway facilities, we should be able to place before capitalists and speculators advantages which no other town in Canada can offer. What will pay the Dickson Company will pay Peterborough, and, instead of in any way impeding any effort of theirs to induce the location of manufactories here, we think it would be a patriotic and common sense policy to second them and endeavour so to guide matters, that from the banks of their millrace should go forth manufactured goods to all parts of the Dominion, and even the adjoining States.

This is a matter well worth considering by the taxpayers, and as at the meeting to-morrow night the whole question will no doubt be ably handled from all points of view, we would advise all interested to attend, and to render their opinion after looking at the matter, not from a narrow or selfish standpoint, but keeping in sight what appears to be in the best interest of the town and the future progress and prosperity of the entire community.

Hall Works.

From the Ontario Reformer, August 28th.

The demand for New Model Threshers, Engines and Horse Powers, is so great that the Hall Works are working over time with 140 men to meet it. The Works open at half-past six a. m., and close at seven p. m., stopping only half an hour for dinner. If it were not for the admirable system adopted by the present management, even this extra time would not meet the demand for the New Model. We are informed that orders for the New Traction are being received by telegraph. We have no doubt but that when the great superiority of the engine is known, a still further increase on the force will be required.

Oshawa cannot but be benefited by the introduction of so very important an improvement in the use of steam power.

Winter.

Take winter as you find him, and he turns out to be a thoroughly honest fellow, with no nonsense in him and tolerating none in you, which is a great comfort in the long run. Winter, too, is, on the whole, the triumphant season of the moon, a moon devoid of sentiment, if you choose, but with the refreshment of a purer intellectual light, the cooler orb of middle life. Who ever saw anything to match that gleam, rather divined than seen, which runs before her over the snow, a breath of light, as she rises on the infinite silence of winter night. I think the old fellow has hitherto has scant justice done him in the main. We make him the symbol of old age or death, and think we have settled the matter. As if old age were never kindly as well as frosty; as if it had no reverend graces of its own as the noisy impertinence of childhood, the elbowing self-conceit of youth, or the pompous mediocrity of middle life! —J. R. Lowell.

A New Traction Engine.

Mr. Ryan and Mr. F. W. Glen, M. P., visited Eaton, N.Y., last week, for the purpose of making final arrangements with Messrs. Wood, Taber & Morse, for the control of their new Traction Engine in Canada, and we are pleased to say that in the interest of Oshawa they succeeded. Messrs. Wood Taber & Morse were the first manufacturers in the United States, to build Portable Engines on wheels, some thirty-five years ago, and have turned out more of this class of engines than any other firm there since their introduction. Their engine has been the model for nearly every large builder in the United States and Canada. The first Oshawa Engine was purchased from them. An immense sum of money has been expended upon experiments with Traction Engines during the past ten years, and thousands of them, such as they were, have been sold, but Mr. Glen has refused to recommend any heretofore introduced to the customers of the Hall Works. Messrs. Wood, Taber & Morse have spent ten years in perfecting the New Traction, and have now for the first time offered it to the public as a desirable and complete machine. It was put in operation for Messrs. Ryan and Glen, and a series of severe tests applied. It drew up a hill, the grade of which was 1,100 feet to the mile, five engines which weighed together 11 tons, stopped in the middle of dug 16 inches deep under each road wheel and the engine started, and without any difficulty came out of the holes. The hind wheels were backed off the roadside so that they were at least 2½ feet lower than the front wheels. A scantling 6 inches square was then placed before the front wheels, and when steam was let on the engine at once passed up over the scantling. One of these engines travelled 34 miles over as hilly a road as the base line from Oshawa to Bowmanville in one day, drew a water and coal wagon, and only consumed half a ton of steam coal. A 12-horse power traction of this kind can draw from Oshawa station to the town 25 tons as fast as a team walks with two tons. Can easily draw ten tons from the port to the town. Heretofore the traction machinery has been applied to the rear wheels of the engine only. Messrs. Wood, Taber & Morse are the FIRST IN THE WORLD TO SUCCESSFULLY APPLY IT TO ALL FOUR WHEELS. The engine can be turned around by the driver in less space than is required to turn a farm waggon with a team of horses, goes backward as easily as forward—can bring down a sharp grade safely as heavy a load as it can take up. Its value to the threshermen can hardly be over-estimated. At present he buys an engine and thresher, two teams of horses and employs two men, and gladly works for $12 per day. If he could be employed all the year he would be pleased to work for less. Now he can dispense with the horses and harness during the threshing season and at its close he is ready to do any class of heavy teaming—for instance, he can draw four loads of coal of ten tons each from the harbor to the town, which, at 30c. per ton, is $12. It costs 60c. to team it at present. He requires no barn, a shed without a floor 10 ft. high and 8 ft. wide is all he needs. In place of oats or hay he has a pile of coal or wood. Carefully used the engine will last for ten years, about as long as the average team of horses can endure to do constant and heavy work. No one can foresee the very great change that this wonderful advance in Traction Engines will create in transporting very heavy freight short distances. It will drive the horse from the plough at an early day, in fact there is no end to the ways in which it can be made to do the heavy labor which is now performed by horses. Mr. Glen informs us that Messrs. Wood, Taber & Morse had 112 Portable Engines painted and ready for shipment in their shops and yards besides those in process of construction. They were being shipped to all parts of the United States, South America and Mexico. The new Traction will be shown at the Toronto Industrial Exhibition.—Reformer, Aug. 21.

Chapter XV—Continued.

our thoughts were not more in unison than any words we could have spoken whilst our strange and uncertain relations continued. I looked at the western sky until the glowing tints began to fade, then turning to my companion I found her dark eyes gazing at me with almost painful earnestness.

"Tell me," she said, "tell me what I shall find when that lost time comes back to me?"

Her fingers, as she spoke, were playing with her wedding-ring. She still wore it, and the diamond keeper I had placed above it; but she had not as yet asked me why it was on her hand.

"Will it come back, Pauline, do you think?" I asked.

"I hope so—or stay; should I hope so? Tell me, will it bring me joy or sorrow?"

"Who can say—the two are always mingled."

She sighed and turned her eyes to the ground. Presently she raised them to mine.

"Tell me," she said, "how and when did you come into my life—why did I dream of you?"

"You saw me so often when you were ill."

"Why did I wake and find your old servant taking care of me?"

"Your uncle gave you into my charge. I promised to watch over you during his absence."

"And he will never return. He is punished for his crime—for standing by when the poor boy was murdered."

She pressed her hands to her eyes, as if to shut out the light.

"Pauline," I said, wishing to change the current of her thoughts, "tell me how you saw me in dreams; what you dreamed of me?"

She shuddered. "I dreamed that you were standing by me—in the very room—that you saw the deed. Yet I knew that it could not be so."

"And then?"

"I saw your face many times—it was always traveling, traveling through clouds. I saw your lips move, and you seemed to say, 'I am going to learn the truth'—so I waited patiently till you returned."

"You never dreamed of me before?"

It was growing dusk, I was uncertain whether it was the deepening shade from the trees which made her cheeks look darker, or whether it was a blush. My heart was beating madly.

"I cannot tell! I don't know. Don't ask me!" she said in a troubled voice. Then she turned.

"It grows dark and chilly. Let us go in."

I followed her. It was so completely the rule for me to spend the evening with her that I did not even wait for an invitation. It was our custom to play and sing together for an hour or two. Pauline's first expressed desire after her recovery had been for a piano. Believing herself to be an heiress she had felt no scruple in asking for all she wanted, and my instructions to Priscilla being that no money was to be spared in ministering to her comforts, a piano had been sent from the nearest town.

All her skill had returned to her. Her voice had come back even stronger and more sweet than of old. Again and again she held me entranced as she had held me once before, when I little expected the fearful ending to her song, or that my fate and the singer's were so closely interwoven.

I was surprised, therefore, when this evening she turned on the doorstep and said: "Not to-night. Leave me, please, for to-night."

I urged no objection. I took her hand and bade her farewell until the morrow. I would go and wander by starlight and think of her.

As we parted she looked at me strangely, almost solemnly.

"Gilbert," she said, speaking in Italian; for Priscilla was now standing at the open door—"shall I pray for the past to return or that I should never remember it? Which will be the best for me—and for you?"

Without waiting to hear my reply, she glided past Priscilla, who stood waiting for me to follow her.

"Good-night, Priscilla," I said, "I am not coming in."

"Not coming in, Master Gilbert! Miss Pauline will be vexed."

"She is tired and not quite well. You had better go to her. Good-night."

Priscilla came out to the doorstep and closed the door behind her. There was something in her manner which told me she meant on this particular occasion to resume what she could of that authority she had been delegated to exercise over me during my tender years—an authority I did not dare to dispute until long after I had been invested with jackets and trousers. I have no doubt but she would have liked to seize me by the collar and give me a sound shaking. As it was she was obliged to content herself with throwing a world of sorrowful indignation into her voice.

"She may easily feel ill, poor young lady, when her husband lives at one house, and she at another. And here's everybody round-about trying to find out what relation you two are to each other—asking me all sorts of questions and I mustn't say you are husband and wife."

"No—not yet."

"Well, I'm going to, Master Gilbert. If you won't tell the poor young lady, I shall. I'll tell her how you brought her home and sent for me to take care of her—how you tended her and waited on her all day long—how you shut yourself up for her sake, never seeing an old friend's face. Oh yes, Master Gilbert, I'll tell her all; and I'll tell her how you went into her room and kissed her are you started on that fool's journey, wherever it was. She'll remember everything fast enough then."

"I command you to say nothing."

"I've heeded too many commands of yours, Master Gilbert, to mind breaking one for your sake. I'll do it, and take the consequences."

Feeling that the explanation, if made by Priscilla, would not only sweep away a great deal of romance, but also might precipitate matters and make them far more difficult to adjust to my own satisfaction, I was bound to prevent her carrying out her threat. Knowing from old experience that although the good soul could not be driven, she could be led, I was obliged to resort to cajolery. So I said, as one asking a boon—

"You won't if I entreat and beg you not to, my old friend. You love me too much to do anything against my wishes."

Priscilla was not proof against this appeal, but she urged me to proclaim the true state of affairs as soon as possible.

"And don't be too sure, Master Gilbert," she concluded, "as to what she remembers or doesn't. Sometimes I think she knows a deal more than you suppose."

Then she left me, and I went wandering about thinking as to what meaning to attach to Pauline's parting words.

"Which will be the best for me—and for you?"—to forget or to recall? How much did she forget—how much did she recall? Had those rings on her hand not shown her that she was a wife? Could she help suspecting whose wife she was? Even if she remembered nothing about our strange hurried marriage, nothing about our subsequent life together, she found herself after that interval of oblivion, as it were, under my charge: found that I knew all the tragic circumstances of her brother's end, that I now returned from a journey of thousands of miles, undertaken to learn the fatal particulars. Although she might not be able to account for it, she must by this know the truth. Keeping the ring on her finger showed that she did not dispute the fact that, somehow, she was wedded. Who could be her husband save me?

Yes, by the evidence the situation offered, I determined that she had arrived at the right conclusion; and the hour was at hand when I should learn if the knowledge would bring her joy or sorrow.

To-morrow I would tell her all. I would tell her how strangely our lives became linked. I would plead for her love more passionately than ever man yet pleaded. I would prove to her how innocently I had fallen into Ceneri's schemes—how free from blame I was in wedding her whilst her mental state was such that she was unable to refuse consent. All this she should learn, and then I would hear my doom from her lips.

I would urge no plea based upon my legal right to my wife. So far as I could make her she should be free. Nothing should bind her to me except love. If she had none to give me I would treat myself from her, and at her wish see if steps could not be taken to annul the marriage—but whether she elected to remain my wife in name, to become my wife in reality, or to sever every tie, her future life, with or without her knowledge, should be my care. By this time to-morrow my fate should be known.

Having settled this I should have retired to rest; but I was in no mood for sleep. Again and again I recalled her last words and commenced one of those weighings of hopes and fears which always means self-torture. Why if Pauline had guessed the truth, had she not asked me about it? How could she spend hour after hour with me, knowing she was my wife yet not knowing how she became so? Would her words admit of the interpretation that she dreaded what she had to learn? Did she wish for freedom and continual forgetfulness? So, on and on until I made myself quite miserable.

Many a may on the eve of learning whether his love is to be accepted or rejected has been racked as I was that night, but surely no lover save myself ever lived, who was to receive the momentous answer from the lips of a woman who was already his wife.

The hour was late when I returned from my solitary walk. I passed Pauline's window, and standing gazing up at it I wondered if she, too, were lying awake and thinking and deciding about our future lives. Ah well, to-morrow would put us both out of suspense!

The night being still and warm her window was open at the top. Before I turned away a fancy seized me. I picked a rose from a bush in the garden and managed to toss it through the open sash. She might find it in the morning and guessing from whom it came might wear it. It would be a good omen.

The blind shivered as the rosebud struck it; then, fearing discovery, I turned and fled.

The morning broke fair. I rose with hope in my heart and scouted the fears of the night. At the earliest moment I could hope to find her I started in search of Pauline. She had just gone out. I ascertained in which way, and followed her.

I found her walking slowly, with her head bent. She greeted me with her usual quiet sweetness, and we walked on side by side. I looked in vain for my rose; and was fain to comfort myself by thinking it must have fallen where she could not see it. Nevertheless, I was troubled.

And there was worse in store for me. Her hands, ungloved and with the fingers interlaced, were carried in front of her. I was walking on her left side, and I saw that the hand nearest me was denuded of its rings. The golden circlet which had shone until now like a beacon of hope, had disappeared. My heart sank. The meaning was only too clear; when coupled with her words of last night, who could fail to understand it? Although she knew herself to be my wife she wished to throw the yoke aside. Pauline loved me not—the truth which was gradually creeping from the misty past would bring her sorrow—now that she remembered, she wished to forget. The rings were cast aside to show me, if possible, without words, that she was not to be my wife.

How could I speak now? The answer had been given before the question had been put.

She saw me looking at that little white hand of hers, but simply dropped her lashes and said nothing. No doubt she wished me to spare her the pain of an explanation. If I could nerve myself to it, perhaps the best thing would be to leave her as speedily as possible—leave her to return no more.

Moody and despondent as I felt at the discovery just made, it was not long before I found a great change in Pauline's manner. She was not the same. Something had come between us, something which entirely dispelled the old friendly intercourse; changing it into little more than conventional politeness. Shyness and constraint now made themselves manifest in every word and action—perhaps, in mine also. We spent the day together as usual, but the companionship must have been irksome to both, so greatly was its footing changed for the worse. That night I went to bed wretched. The prize I had striven for seemed to be snatched away just as I had hoped to win it!

So several days passed. Pauline made no sign, or certainly none I could construe favorably. I could bear this state of things no longer. Priscilla, whose sharp eyes saw that something was amiss, pestered me beyond endurance; and spoke her mind so roundly that I began to suspect she had already executed her threat of telling Pauline everything; and I felt inclined to attribute my failure to the old woman's officiousness in making a premature revelation. All might have gone well had I been given another week or a fortnight to win my wife's heart. I began to believe that she was growing unhappy; that my presence troubled her. Not that she evinced any wish to avoid me; indeed, she came so surely at my beck and call as to suggest a shadow of the obedience she had always given during those days upon which I now dreaded to dwell. But I felt she would be happier and more at ease in my absence. So I resolved to depart.

I knew that my only way was to carry out my determination at once. Having made the resolve, I would act upon it next day. I packed up my things in readiness. I arranged by which coach to go. I should have three hours in the morning to give Priscilla my final instructions and to bid my wife adieu forever.

I could not go without explaining some things to her. I need not pain her by alluding to our relationship, but I must inform her that she was not the heiress she believed. I must tell her she had plenty to live upon without saying that I, her husband, would supply it. When this was arranged, farewell forever!

As soon as I had finished my pretense at a breakfast, I walked across to the house where Pauline lodged. As yet she knew nothing of my purpose. I held her hand rather longer than usual, and by a desperate effort forced words to my lips.

"I am come to say good-bye. I go to London to-day."

She answered not a word, but I felt her hand tremble in my own. Her eyes I could not see.

"Yes I have loitered here long enough," I continued, attempting to speak easily; "a great many things call me to town."

Pauline was not looking in the best of health this morning. Her cheek was paler than it had been since my arrival. She looked languid and depressed. Doubtless my presence had worried her. Poor girl, she would soon be relieved of that!

Seeing that I paused for her to speak she found her voice, but even that seemed to have lost some of its freshness and tone.

"When do you go?" was all that she said. Not a word about my return!

"By the mid-day coach. I have still some hours left. As it is the last time, shall we walk to the Clearing together?"

"Do you wish it?"

"If you have no objection. Besides, I want to speak to you about yourself—about business matters," I added, to show that she need not fear the interview.

"I will come," she said, quitting the room hurriedly.

I waited. Presently Priscilla appeared. She was looking daggers at me—undeserved, at least from her. Her voice was harsh and raspy, bringing back to my mind a familiar sound of early childhood, when I had committed some petty crime which excited her ire.

"Miss Pauline begs you will walk on and not wait for her. She will join you at the Clearing presently."

I took my hat and prepared to do as commanded. Priscilla had said nothing which showed she knew of my approaching departure, but as I was passing out of the house she said, in a tone of withering scorn.

"Master Gilbert, you are a bigger fool than I thought you were."

Such an observation, even from an old servant, could not be passed by. I turned to remonstrate. Priscilla simply slammed the door almost against my nose.

I walked away—the thing in the face of my other troubles was not worth a thought. Of course I could not expect Priscilla to enter into my feelings and appreciate the delicacy of my position. Besides, I must see her and have a long talk with her before I left.

The Clearing, as we called it, was a place on the hillside, not far away. We had stumbled upon it, almost by accident, during our walks. A seldom trodden path through the wood led to a spot from which the trees and undergrowth had been cleared. From it there was a delightful view of the opposite hills and the stream winding through the valley. It was a favorite resort of mine. Here I had sat for hours talking to Pauline and here in my dreams I had poured forth the words of love I longed to speak—and here I was to say good-bye forever!

My frame of mind was a sad one when I reached the Clearing. I threw myself down on the sloping ground and turned my eyes up the path by which she must come. A fallen trunk at my back formed a rest for my head—the trees around were rustling in the soft breeze—the monotonous rush of the stream below was soothing and lulling—a few white clouds sailed slowly across the sky. It was a drowsy, dreamy, beautiful morning. I had scarcely slept for the last two or three nights. Pauline lingered. Is it any wonder that my eyes closed and for a while all sorrow and disappointment were chased away by the sleep I so sorely needed?

Was it sleep? Was I—

Use the Telephone.

Friends and patrons of the EVENING EXAMINER are requested to use the telephone in communicating items of news which may come under their notice. We should be glad to avail ourselves of any information transmitted in that way before 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Piano Tuning.

Mr. Geo. J. Gumpricht is in town. Orders left at Mr. T. Menzies' bookstore, or at Messrs. Taylor & McDonald's drug store, will be promptly attended to.

Scott Act Committees.

A meeting of the Ward Committees will be held at the head quarters this (Thursday) evening at 8 o'clock. The Central Committee will also meet at the same time and place.

Prob'e Weather Promises.

The following forecast of the weather for this district for the 24 hours from 1 a. m. to-day is received from the Toronto Meterological office:—Fresh to strong south-west and west winds; fair weather, with local showers towards evening, or at night; stationary or slightly higher temperature.

Ready for the Golden Grain.

Mr. W. J. McBain's storehouses are being remoddled to put them in readiness for the fall grain trade. The present building is being extended sixteen feet on the Charlotte street front. The extension will be used as an office and the old office utilized for storing grain, making an additional storage capacity of about 3,000 bushels. The fact of Mr. Geo. Elliott being in charge of the work, is the best guarantee that the work of extension will be neatly, rapidly and substantially done.

Spectacles.

Mr. John McKee, druggist, George street, has been appointed agent for the celebrated spectacles and eye glasses of the well-known optician, B. Lawrence, and the latter may congratulate himself on having secured a live and energetic representative. In a few days Mr. P. H. Morris, the veteran optican, late of the firm of Lazarus & Morris, will be in town for a short time, as the representative of Mr. Lawrence. His visit will afford those needing spectacles an opportunity of being well fitted with Lawrence's spectacles by a skilful specialist, as Mr. Morris is. His advice will be exceedingly valuable on the important subject of selecting suitable aid to sight.

New Business.

Hunter street is becoming a considerable business street and Lynch's fine new block will soon be a busy business hive. Mr. T. E. Flaherty has leased one of the new shops and will shortly open out a complete stock of clothing and gents' furnishings—all the stock new and fresh and of the best. Mr. Flaherty has for some time had charge of the clothing department of Messrs. T. Dolan & Co., for a long time he had a leading position in the large firm of A. T. Harshaw & Co., Napanee, and in a leading business house in Belleville. He has the requisite knowledge of the trade and business-go to make his new enterprise worthy of the generous patronage of the public, which we hope it will receive.

Horticultural Exhibition.

The annual exhibition of the Peterborough Horticultural Society will be held in the Water street Parlor Roller Skating Rink on Tuesday next, Sept. 8th. The secretary, Mrs. J. D. Collins, will be in attendance at the exhibition rooms on Monday afternoon from three to five o'clock for the purpose of receiving and recording entries. It is desirable that intending exhibitors will embrace this opportunity of making their entries before the morning of the exhibition. The season has been favorable to the growth and development of fruit and flowers and a fine display in both departments may be expected next Tuesday. It is to be hoped the successful efforts made by the society during the past summer in securing the opening of a delightful resort like the Court House Park for the benefit of the public, will receive due appreciation by the public, and that the latter will reciprocate by liberally patronizing and encouraging the exhibition of the society. A society with so much public spiritedness deserves every encouragement both moral and substantial.

THE PETERBOROUGH-CHECKER CHAMPIONSHIP GAME.

The Peterboroughs will decide at a meeting to be held at the Little Windsor hotel this evening, whether they will play the Checkers for the championship on the 10th, inst., as that club propose.

RIVERSIDES VS. CRETES.

The Cretes held a meeting last evening, and decline to play the return match with the Riversides on Monday afternoon. They won't play sooner than in two weeks.

OTTAWAS VS. CORNWALLS.

At Cornwall yesterday in the match between the Cornwalls and Ottawas, for the intermediate championship banner, the former team proved victorious, taking three goals to one obtained by the Ottawas.

Baseball.

DAWSON'S VS. PETERBOROUGH.

The Dawson's, base ball team, of Hamilton, Ont., who were announced to play a game with the home nine, at Riverside Park to-day, failed to arrive on the noon train. Another disappointment for the boys.

THE COBOURG BATSMEN.

The Port Hope Times has the following:—"Cobourg Athletic base ball club has seven left hand batters on their team. Perhaps that accounts for the Port Hopers getting "left" in the recent match."

Perhaps our boys can tell whether this is "right" or not.

Roller Skating.

RACING AT THE LANSDOWNE.

The backward race for boys at the Lansdowne last evening was won by a lad named McFarlane, against two other competitors. There were no entries for the other race.

Campbellford Cheese Market.

A cheese market was held yesterday afternoon at Campbellford. The factorymen offered for sale 130 boxes of July make, and 1,000 of August. No offer was made for the July cheese, and the highest offer for August was 7⅞ cents, which was refused, and the meeting adjourned, the buyers and sellers being apart.

On the Defensive.

The opening of the Scott Act campaign by the heavy artillerist, John B. Nicholls, on Monday evening has apparently roused the hotelkeepers and others interested in the licensed victualling business to the necessity of defensive action. A meeting of hotel men was held last evening at the Oriental Hotel, at which committees were struck and the preliminary steps taken in organizing an offensive and defensive alliance in opposition to the Scott Act. Another meeting will be held in a few days' time, and a strong organization seems likely to result.

Artistic Portraits.

Mr. Thomas Workman has just finished three fine portraits in oil. One is a half-bust life size portrait of the late Mrs. John Garvey, another is one of W. Cumming of Montreal, son of Mr. Wm. Cumming, town collector, and the third subject is Mr. H. H. Lee. All three portraits are "speaking" likenesses, and in artistic treatment and finish are fully equal to the excellent productions that leave the easel of Mr. Workman. Persons desiring first rate portraits in oil need not go to Toronto or Montreal so long as Mr. Workman wields a brush in Peterborough.

Changed Their Minds.

Some time ago when it was proposed at a meeting of the Board of Education to reduce the amount of fees collected from scholars outside the county, attending the High School here, the proposal met with much opposition, and the prevailing opinion seemed to be that it would be better to increase it to $5, and so keep outsiders away altogether. The gentlemen composing the Board have evidently experienced a change of heart, for at their meeting held Tuesday night a resolution, brought forward by one of the gentlemen previously most opposed to reduction, was carried with only one dissentient voice, reducing the amount of the fee to $1.

Enterprising Hotel Men.

The Daly Brothers, proprietors of the popular Grand Central Hotel, believe in being fully abreast of the times. The house has long been noted among travellers as one of the best in Canada, and the enterprising proprietors have recently renovated and refurnished the greater part of it in the most approved modern style, the furniture and appointments being of the highest quality and most fashionable design. In the office, two, improvements have been made, the office counter, which was formerly open to the room, having been surmounted by a handsome hardwood screen, tastefully carved and panelled, and which adds greatly to the business-like appearance of the room. Nor have the Messrs. Daly, while ministering to the increased comfort of their guests within the house, neglected the outside attractions necessary to call attention to their comfortable hostelry. An artistic sign, "The Grand Central," has been painted the entire length of the front, bringing prominently before the notice of the travelling public a hotel which, for convenience and comfort, is unsurpassed in the Dominion. A new twelve-foot sidewalk has also been laid down in front of the Grand Central, which now looks as bright and shining as a new dollar.

Smiths Market.

Peaches, Plums, Pears, Grapes, Oranges, Lemons, Apples, Cherries, Garden Raspberries, Melons, Currants, Gooseberries, and all kinds of green vegetables. Ripe Tomatoes one dollar per box, twenty pounds in the box. Fresh Fish, Hams and Bacon.

Smokers will further their own interest by insisting upon having the "Cable," or "El Padre" brands of cigars which have stood the test for a quarter of a century, and yet allow greedy and unscrupulous dealers to persuade them to take other brands which pays them a larger profit, the consumer being a loser thereby. 13d-25w

Personal.

Mr. Jas. Saulter, of Toronto, formerly of Peterborough, is in town.

Mr. A. W. Litchard, representing Messrs. D. Appleton & Co., New York, is in town.

Mr. John Kennedy, eldest son of the late Col. W. N. Kennedy, is in town on a visit. He has been attending the Royal Military College, Kingston, with a view to preparing himself for a commission in the army.

Mr. Thos. Diamond, son of Mr. A. N. Diamond, grain dealer, town, is at present enjoying a cruise on the St. Lawrence in his yacht "Dolphin," which is kept, when not in use, in Napanee Harbour.

First Instalment of New Goods

From Liverpool to Peterborough in 15 days. Fair, VanEvery & Co. have received the first shipment of their fall importations, per steamship Montreal, comprising Floor Oil Cloths, Scotch Wincyes, French Dress Goods, French Kid Gloves to match, English Rubber Goods in great variety, Mourning Goods, Crapes, &c. Visit the Golden Lion for variety and cheapness.

Don't be Duped.

Peterborough Prime Cheese.

A Large Number of Buyers and Sellers, but Small Sales.

The regular meeting of the Peterborough Cheese Board was held in the Chamber yesterday afternoon, Mr. J. M. Drummond presiding, and the business being conducted by the Secretary, Mr. Warren Taylor. The following gentlemen were present on the look-out for purchases:—Messrs. B. Green, W. H. Wrighton, and W. Cluxton, town; J. Flavelle, Lindsay; Cook, Belleville; C. E. Bartlett, Napanee; and Kirkpatrick, head of the firm of Kirkpatrick, Cookson & Co., of Montreal. This is the largest attendance of buyers that has been present at the market since it started.

The following factories were represented, and offered for sale the quantities of cheese appended:—

There was no disposition on the part of the buyers to make rash offers, and the sellers, on the other hand, were not disposed to jump at their offers, and considerable dickering took place before any sales were effected. Mr. B. Green at length secured the last half for July of the following factories at 7 3-16c.: Keene, 200 boxes; Lakehurst, 30; Mariposa, 120; South Douro, 55; and Fairdale, 100. The same gentleman purchased the first half August of the following factories at 7⅞c:—Myrtle, 85; Lakehurst, 25; Downeyville, 84; Mariposa, 81; West Ops, 70; South Ops, 30; North Ops, 71; South Dummer, 130; Westwood, 200; and South Douro, 50.

No other sales were effected. The Liverpool quotation was given as 39 shillings.

DEADLY DYNAMITE

Terrific Explosion Near Lakefield.

One Terrible Ton Explodes

And Blows Two Men and Two Horses into Atoms.

"We'll Be Back To-Night."

"Don't be too Sure of That, We May

Be Blown to Kingdom Come."

The Biggest Fragment Left, A Man's Breast-Bone.

Six Children Fatherless.

At twelve o'clock this morning we received a telegram from our Lakefield correspondent, stating that a wagon load of dynamite that was being conveyed to the works on the Burleigh Canal, exploded about a mile from the village. A reporter of THE EXAMINER was at once despatched to the scene of the accident. It was found that two men, whose names could not be learned, were teaming a load of twenty boxes of dynamite from Perth. When within about two miles of the village of Lakefield, from some cause that will never be known, for the only persons concerned were

LITERALLY BLOWN TO ATOMS,

the explosion occurred with a terrific force. This happened about 10.30 o'clock, at the north-west corner of lot 12, in the 6th concession of Douro, opposite the farm of Mr. William Moher, occupied by Mr. Thos. Nolan. Here a number of men were engaged in threshing, about 400 feet from the SCENE OF THE ACCIDENT.

Just previous to the accident Mr. Thomas Nolan, while conveying wheat from the machine where it was threshed to the barn, a short distance away, met the men, seated on a spring seat in front of the wagon, driving a fairly good team of gray horses. The place where he met them was near the top of a hill they had just begun to descend. In going down hill the horses broke into a light trot. They reached the bottom of the hill in safety, but when they had come to a marshy spot about 100 yards from where Mr. Nolan met them, a sound like a volley of a rent the heavens, and then the two men and their team had literally disappeared. Mr. Michael Hourighan, who witnessed the explosion from the top of the straw stack where he was at work, was the first on the spot, followed by Mr. James McCliggott, ex-Depnty Reeve of Douro, and others engaged in the threshing operations, and they were awestruck at the terrible sight that met their eyes at

SCORE OF THUNDER CLAPS

THE SCENE OF THE EXPLOSION.

The scene of the accident was at the foot of a hill at a point where the road is surrounded by swampy ground covered by stunted bushes and undergrowth. The force of the terrific concussion made an excavation in the road and the surrounding swamp fully 150 feet wide and at places not less than ten feet deep. Not a fragment of the waggon excepting the tongue is to be seen, but the horses, which were hurled fifty feet from the spot are lying one on each side of the road in the swamps, torn and mangled beyond description. The shoes were actually torn from their hoofs by the violence of the explosion, the harness was stripped in shreds and scattered far and wide, and the horses were actually turned quite round by the force of the explosion. The tongue of the wagon was lying in the road where it had been thrown, fully 100 yards from the spot where the explosion took place. The only signs of the two unfortunate men at first discernible were infintesimal fragments of their clothing blackened and burned and strewn in all directions. A short search in the bushes around, however, soon brought to sight ghastly proofs of the terrible fate of the men, although in fragments so small th at some difficulty was experienced in finding them. In one place, more than a hundred yards from the spot, the remnant of a hand torn from the arm, was picked up, still further away a mangled fragment of flesh was lying, which seemed to have been torn from one of the men's breasts; and on the left hand side of the road, some sixty or seventy feet into the swamp, and fully sixty yards from the scene of the explosion, the scalp of one of the victims, covered with black hair, was found, taken clean from the head. Other of the horrible end of the poor fellows were found in the shape of charred and blackened pieces of their clothing, boots, and bodies, but scattered so far and apart, and so small in size that they gave no clue whatever as to who the men were, even had any one been there to identify them, which of course there was not. Words fail to convey any conception of the tremendous force that it must have taken to cause such results. The force of the explosion spread these dreadful marks of its course in a radius of fully 150 yards from the centre, and as only a small quantity of them have at present been unearthed, it is altogether likely that it will be found that they were blown to even twice that distance.

TERRIBLE EVIDENCES

THE VICTIMS.

The men who were driving the wagon are said to have been named Morton and Simmons, and to have lived in Tweed, from whence they were conveying the dynamite to Burleigh Falls. One of the men accompanied a similar load through a year ago. They stopped last night at Mrs. Smith's Neebing Hotel, and Mrs. Smith, who keeps the house, says that one of them told her he was a married man and had at home five girls and one boy, and that he was related by marriage to James Rae of Tweed. They got their breakfast about eight o'clock this morning, each of them having taken three drinks before doing so, but Mrs. Smith says they were not at all the worse for drink. [illegible] Mrs. Smith that they would be back and stop over with her to-night, when the other replied, either with a presentiment as of the impending calamity, or in careless banter, "You had'nt better be too sure of that,

WE MAY BE BLOWN TO "KINGDOM COME,"

for all you know." The hostler at Mrs. Smith's hotel heard the men in conversation between themselves, speaking of some trouble they had had with one of the boxes which they said was not full, and from the way they spoke, inferred that they believed there was danger in the condition of it. The waggon contained twenty cases of the explosive, each of which is believed to have contained one hundred pounds. The hostler thought, after they had left the hotel, they were driving rather fast considering the nature of the load, and Mrs. Mahoney, who lives about two miles from the scene of the accident, remarked the same thing as they passed her house. The latter lady thought from the appearance of the load that the men were egg peddlars.

VISITORS AT THE SCENE.

Large crowds from Lakefield and the more immediate vicinity soon gathered around the scene of the explosion, and are searching the surrounding swamp for portions of the victims, and every few minutes reveals some fresh and more sickening token of the terrible fate which befel them.

At the time our reporter left the scene of the accident no official steps had been taken towards collecting and burying the ghastly remains, but what can be recovered will no doubt be brought together and accorded Christian burial.

SOUNDED LIKE AN EARTHQUAKE.

The sound of the explosion was plainly heard for a circle of five miles from the scene of the disaster and was described by those who heard it as if an earthquake had taken place. In the immediate vicinity windows were shattered and the gable end of an adjacent barn blown in by the concussion, while the thresher at Mr. Moher's farm was lifted from the ground by its tremendous force.

Range and Rifle.

Last of the Monthly Matches—Mr. Duncan Cameron Brings Down the Ontario Medal.

The last of the summer's series of monthly matches of the Peterborough Rifle Association was shot on the range yesterday afternoon. There was a good deal of interest in this match as it decided the winner of the Ontario medal, the victor to have the highest aggregate score in any three of the four matches. Mr. Duncan Cameron is the happy custodian of the medal now, with the top score of 143 points, Mr. James Stothart coming next with a score of 131. At the match yesterday the weather was unfavorable to big scoring, a very high south-westerly wind sweeping in gusts across the range. The following is the score at the match yesterday, the ranges being 200, 500 and 600 yards, five rounds at each range:

	Points.
R. H. Smith	48
D. Cameron	43
Geo. Fitzgerald	38
W. H. Hill	37
F. Hall	37
Wm. Bell	35
Dr. R. W. Bell	29
W. G. Matthews	22
F. G. Haultain	22
W. Hunter	20
A. Blade	20
W. A. Mason	16

The annual matches will take place in October, and the regular practices will take place as usual, on Thursdays.

Agrarian Outrages.

DUBLIN, Sept. 3.—There was a series of outrages Tuesday night in the lowlands of Tulla, County Clare. The houses of a man named Grogan and another were surrounded at midnight by armed men, who fired into them, and posted notices threatening the inmates with the death of a dog if they paid their rents. Similar notices were posted on the doors of houses of many other tenants in the same town.

Montreal Matters.

MONTREAL, Sept. 3.—There were 35 cases of smallpox reported yesterday and eight authenticated. Four deaths occurred from the disease. There were two deaths in the Civic Hospital up to noon to-day.

Georgina Dubea, a young girl, while trying to escape from a drunken row on the street, fell into a hole and received a compound fracture of her leg and other injuries, and is in a very precarious condition.

Young Mens' Liberal Club.

Organized Last Night—Officers Elected.

The movement for the organization of the Young Men's Liberal Club is extending pretty generally throughout Ontario, and the young Liberals of Peterboro' fell into line last night by organizing a club under most promising auspices. The various committees appointed at the preliminary meeting presented their reports. The report of the committee on nominations was presented, and after due consideration, was adopted, without any amendment of importance. The following are the OFFICERS ELECTED.

HON. PRESIDENT.—W. Paterson, jr.
PRESIDENT.—J. R. Stratton.
VICE-PRESIDENT.—James Henry.
SECOND VICE-PRESIDENT.—A. McFarlane.
SECRETARY.—R. E. Wood.
TREASURER.—Jos. Griffin.
EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.—J. P. Eastwood, John McGrath, Geo. Stenton, D. Bellegham, F. Kingan, Wm. Pratt, F. Weir, T. G. Gillespie, S. Clegg, W. G. Yelland, E. W. Cox, A. Moffat, M. H. Quinlan.

The committee on rooms reported that they had been successful in procuring suitable quarters. Mr. Geo. A. Cox had kindly placed at the disposal of the club commodious rooms on the second floor of the Darcy block. These rooms will immediately fitted up in an elegant and comfortable manner for the use of the members. The space at the disposal of the club admits of a reading room and recreation rooms. These will be furnished and equipped in a manner to make them comfortable and cosy quarters for the members of the club to spend their fall and winter evenings in.

The Committee on Constitution and By-laws submitted a draft of the same, but it was referred back to the Committee with instructions to revise certain of the clauses.

Previous to adjournment the question of sending delegates to represent the club and the town at the Young Men's Liberal Convention to be held in Toronto on September 15th and 16th, instant, was considered, and a suitable number of delegates was appointed. The spirit of earnestness and interest displayed in connection with the formation of the Peterborough Young Men's Liberal Club augurs well for its future success and efficiency, and it will, no doubt, exercise a powerful influence in promoting the progress of the principles of true Reform in this riding.

A CORRUPT RAILWAY DEPARTMENT.

Senator McInnes, a Conservative, and a gentleman who is a warm supporter of the present Macdonald administration has written a letter in which he describes the Dominion Department of Railways as a seething sink of corruption. The letter which was addressed to the editor of the Mainland Guardian, New Westminster, B. C,, reads thus:

EDITOR GUARDIAN.—It has just come to my knowledge that in consequence of a certain telegram I sent Mr. Lundbon, of Port Moody, last May announcing that a tender for the erection of a ten-stall engine-house at Port Moody had been accepted—has not only created considerable dissatisfaction, but that I have been actually accused of sending a fraudulent telegram in order to further my private interests. I have only to say the accusation is a malicious falsehood, and only worthy those evil-minded creatures who conceived the base idea.

The information I telegraphed Mr. Lundbom about the engine-house was obtained from a high and reliable official in the Department of Railways. I believed then, and believe now, that the government decided to accept the lowest tender for the building of an engine-house at Port Moody, and not until the government were in the act of officially announcing the fact, did the Canadian Pacific Railway company prevail on them not to award the contract.

I am pained to say that I believe the Department of Railways is absolutely under the control of the C. P. R. company—that the Department of Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway company appear to be one, and both seething sinks of corruption.

The prevailing opinion throughout the eastern provinces is that the main line of the C. P. R. is destined to fall into the hands of the government within the next two years—an opinion a combination of circumstances forces me to concur in. When that occurs—and occur it must—the Coal Harbor bubble will burst and vanish forever. Port Moody will then assume her true position—a position her great natural advantages entitle her to—to be the western terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

THOS. R. MCINNES.

These charges, remarks the Ottawa Free Press, made by a senator—a Conservative senator—a supporter of the present administration, are too serious to be dismissed in this manner. The duty is incumbent upon Senator McInnes to prove—as probably he will—these charges against the Government and against John Henry Pope, the acting Minister of Railways. The charges are familiar as coming from Liberal journals; but it is certainly a novelty for a Conservative senator to take such a bold stand!

EDITORIAL NOTES.

In 1877, the export of wheat from the United States was larger than it was any year before or has been since. There were that year exported 186,000,000 bushels. Since 1881, when Jim Keene's famous corner broke down, the decrease has been marked. Last year the export was only 111,000,000 bushels. The production of corn increased from 1,320,000,000 bushels in 1875 to 1,810,000,000 in 1884, the exports increasing from 30,000,000 bushels in the former year to 100,000,000 bushels in the latter. The great decrease in exports of wheat from the States is clearly traceable to the competition of Australia, Russia and India, and the development of railway facilities in those countries durin the last three or four ears.

The Dominion Government, says the Hamilton Times, has been shamed into appointing a Commission to investigate the charge of jobbery, wilful waste and wholesale thieving which are alleged to have characterized the conveyance of supplies for the troops during the recent expedition. Were the composition of the Commission such as to inspire public confidence in its findings, the taxpayers of Canada might hope that the men who were responsible for the rascality perpetrated would be brought to book and given the full benefit of the law. But unfortunately the commission is not such as to inspire faith in its proceedings; and even the Montreal Herald—controlled by an ex-Tory Minister—is forced to the conclusion that its composition is "not quite that which a Minister desiring to entirely clear himself should have proposed." This is another way of saying that the chief object of the commission will be to whitewash the Minister at all hazards—a deduction which is borne out by the concluding sentence in the article from which we have quoted. Here it is: "We understand that the commission is to be under the direction of the Minister of Militia, and as the most damaging accusations are levelled against him, it is manifestly improper that he should be the master of his judges."

EL PADRE" and "CABLE" CIGARS, for sale, at G. W. RUBIDGE'S. 27-3mos

The New Order-in-Council.

We have been requested to publish the following from the Canada Citizen, a temperance journal:

"An Order-in-Council was published some time ago in the Canada Gazette, providing that distillers may remove liquor into Scott Act counties in ten-gallon quantities, and there has been in some journals a great outcry that this regulation has materially weakened the Scott Act. We regret that there should be any misunderstanding in this matter, and that friends have been misled by the statements made, into imagining that anything has been done that will prevent the carrying out of the Act as successfully as before. The Scott Act totally prohibits the sale of liquor in counties in which it operates, except by licensed wholesalers and druggists. It did not and does not prohibit the purchase of liquor elsewhere and the bringing of it into Scott Act counties. It was thought that it would be unfair to allow a vote in one county to prohibit the sale of liquor in another, hence the Scott Act in any county does not interfere with what the residents of that county may do in other places. It was also considered that the Scott Act being a law to prevent the public sale should not be so framed so as to interfere with private conduct, and it cannot stop a man from bringing into the county liquor for his personal use. As a matter of fact persons in Scott Act counties can, and do purchase liquor in other places and bring it home. Hitherto distillers have not been permitted to take out of bond at any time less than 40 gallons of liquor. No person coming from a Scott Act county would be likely to purchase so large a quantity, hence the few purchasers from these places, who still buy liquor, have dealt exclusively with other dealers than distillers, and the new clause simply permits distillers to sell to such purchasers in ten gallon quantities.

Under the former state of affairs a purchaser of 10 gallons of liquor would be compelled to go to a wholesale dealer, who, in his turn purchased the larger quantity from the distiller. Now the ten gallon purchaser can go to the distiller direct. It must be borne in mind that there is no change whatever in the law affecting the bringing of liquor into or selling liquor in Scott Act counties, and the Act is absolutely unimpaired by the new regulation.

A Destructive Fire.

An Old Industry of Belleville Consumed Wednesday Night—The Axe Factory in Ruins.

One of the oldest industries in Belleville was consumed by fire Wednesday night. About 11 o'clock, W. Holland and Joseph Moorman, in crossing the upper bridge, noticed flames bursting through the roof of the axe factory on Mill street, and promptly gave the alarm. The fire, which originated in the rear end of the main building, used as a forging shop, was too far advanced to be brought under control, and the fire brigade had to confine their labors to protecting the surrounding property. The burning building was

SATURATED WITH OIL,

and being a frame structure, went like powder. In an incredibly short space of time it was level with the ground. A number of workmen were engaged about the works Wednesday night as late as 10 o'clock. When they left the premises there was no signs of flames. The fire is supposed to have originated near the angle in the building. There were two barrels of black oil in the shop and when the flames reached them shot up into the air, and by the time it was consumed the building was in ruins. The part burned was occupied by the forging, polishing and tempering shops and is a total loss, together with all the machinery and stock that it contained. The proprietors, Messrs. Wm. Lott and Richard Potter, estimate their losses at from $8,000 to $10,000. Insured in the Northern for $3,000. The brick office and stone store-house were saved.

The property was originally owned by the late E. Burrell. Under his skilful management the factory attained an enviable prominence, and was at one time valued at $20,000. Last spring it was purchased by the present owners at public auction, and was doing a fair business, giving employment to some 25 or 30 men.

Messrs. Lott & Potter state that they intend to rebuild with as little delay as possible. The new factory will have about the same capacity as the old: from 500 to 600 axes per day.

A Remarkable Boy.

"Say," said the editor's smart little son, as he entered a store, "do you keep knives?" "Oh, yes," responded the storekeeper, "we have kept them for years." "Well," returned the boy, starting for the door, "you ought to advertise, and then you wouldn't keep them so long."—Norristown Herald.

Mounting a Dromedary.

This is accomplished as follows: A Bedouin by divers jerks first succeeds in coaxing or forcing the animal down on his knees, with a snap like that of a double-bladed jack-knife. While one holds his head away to keep him from biting, another ties his forelegs together, and then to secure them stands upon them to secure them, inviting you to mount and fix yourself in the execrable saddle. In the meantime the dromedary is uttering the most agonizing cries of distress. Suddenly the Bedouin looses the strap and bounds from the animal's legs; another terrible grunt and you discover that you are on top of this living machine, waiting patiently further developments, with your hands grasping the horns in front and rear. The animal raises his forequarters with a bound, and this sticks the front horn in your stomach, while you are pressing upon it to keep it in a horizontal position; that done, up goes the hindquarters with another jerk, and this time the rear horn sticks you in the back. You are only too glad to get the rear punch in token of the completed business. While the animal was opening his hinges I was thoroughly impressed with the dizzy hight of [illegible]. It is best not to strike these beasts too much, for if beaten they are certain to stand still and deliberately turn their long necks and try to bite a piece out of your legs. It then becomes necessary to stick to them in order to avoid their fury, until, by gentle patting, they are made to move on amicably again. Their walk is rough, but they trot with comparative ease, carrying the head up and tail straight in the air, and look very gay as they rapidly move along. With your sack of water and leather thong they can, without much inconvenience, travel from fifty to eighty miles a day. But in making this swift passage through the heated air, reflected from the burning sands, you are literally roasted, and this rubbing and twisting your loins and galling your hands in the effort to hold on, makes dromedary-riding a painful operation to those not accustomed to it.—From General Loring's "Confederate Soldier in Egypt."

When Russia Was a Republic.

The Cossacks of "Little Russia," in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, were governed by a president called the Koshevoi, whose election, however, instead of occurring at stated intervals, took place whenever his predecessor was killed in battle, or deposed by the popular vote if he failed to give satisfaction. The Koshevoi's election and inauguration formed one ceremony, the details of which were characteristically primitive. When the claims of two candidates appeared tolerably equal, the question was decided by a "free fight," between the respective parties. The president-elect was presented with a heavy club as a symbol of power, and then raised upon a shield above the heads of his followers in token of his official exultation. The inauguration was then completed by smearing his face with mud, which the elder warriors carefully wiped off again, contrary to the practice of modern communities which, although still prone to throw dirt at their rulers, are much more apt to rub it in.

To render new wainscoting and oak furniture dark and give it an antique appearance, ammonia, says a high authority, is the cleanest, best and cheapest material that can be used. The liquid stains commonly used raise the grain of the wood, whereas, in the use of ammonia, it is simply the fumes that color, and do it so completely that it is difficult to tell whether the wood is really new or old.

[illegible] Yes, because one must sleep in order to dream. Ah! if that dream were reality, life would be worth having. I dreamed that my wife was beside me, that she took my hand and pressed her lips to it passionately, that her cheek was almost touching mine, that I could feel her soft sweet breath. So real did it seem that I turned on my hard rustic pillow toward the dream, and then of course it vanished.

I opened my eyes. In front of me stood Pauline. Those grand dark eyes of hers no longer veiled by the lashes, but open and looking into mine. I saw them but for a second, but that was long enough for the look I had surprised to send the blood throbbing through my veins—to make me spring to my feet—to embolden me to take her suddenly and swiftly in my arms—to cover her sweet face with kisses, ejaculating the only words that one can find at such a time, "I love you! I love you! I love you!"

For no man yet has seen in a woman's eyes the look I saw in Pauline's unless that woman loves him above all the world.

No words can describe the rapture of that moment—the revulsion of my feelings. She was mine, my own forever. I knew it; I could feel it every time my lips touched hers. The bright blush which spread from her cheek to her neck proclaimed it—her suffering without resistance my passionate caresses confirmed it—but let me hear it from those sweet lips!

"Pauline! Pauline!" I cried; "do you love me?"

A trembling which I knew was of joy passed over her.

"Do I love you! love you!" she said, and hid her blushing face on my shoulder. The words, the action, was enough, but presently she raised her head and pressed her lips to mine.

"I love you—yes, I love you, my husband!"

"When did you know? When did you remember?

For a moment she answered not. She broke from my embrace; then, opening the bosom of her dress, drew forth a blue ribbon which hung round her neck. Upon it were threaded the two rings. They seemed to sparkle with joy in the bright sun.

She detached them and held them toward me. "Gilbert, my love, my husband, if you will that I shall be your wife, if you think me worthy of it, take them and place them where they should be."

And then once more, with many a kiss, many a vow, I placed the rings upon her finger and knew that my troubles were at an end.

"But when did you know—when did the memory come back?"

"Dearest," she whispered, and her voice sounded like music. "I knew it when I saw you standing on the river bank. It came to me all at once. Till then all was dark. I saw your face and knew everything."

"Why did you not tell me?"

She hung her head. "I wanted to find out if you loved me. Why should you do so? If you did not we could part, and I would set you free if possible. But not now, Gilbert; you will never get rid of me now."

Her thoughts had been the same as mine. No wonder I had misunderstood her. The idea of her waiting to see if I loved her seemed so preposterous!

"You would have saved me days of grief if I had known you cared for me. Why did you take off the rings, Pauline?"

"Day after day passed and you said nothing. Then I took them off. They have been next my heart ever since, waiting for you to give back when you chose."

I kissed the hand on which they shone. "Then all is clear to you now, my own wife?"

"Not quite all, but enough. The truth, the love, the devotion—all this, my husband, I can remember—all this I will repay, if my love can do it."

Our wooing may close with these words—let all the rest be sacred. The trees around alone know what passed between us, as their kindly shade fell on us where we sat and interchanged our words of love whilst hour after hour of our second and real wedding day slipped by. At last we rose, but lingered yet awhile, as though loth to leave the spot where happiness had come to us. We looked round once more and bid farewell to hill and valley and stream; we gazed long in each other's eyes, our lips met in a passionate kiss; then we went forth together to the world and the new sweet life awaiting us.

We walked as in a dream, from which we were only recalled by the sight of houses and people.

"Pauline!" I whispered, "can you leave this place to-night? We will go to London."

"And afterward?" she asked, wistfully.

"Can you ask me? To Italy, of course."

She thanked me with a look and pressure of the hand. We were now at her home. She left me, passing Priscilla, whose honest eyes were now glowering at me. Priscilla had called me a fool; I must be revenged.

"Priscilla," I said, gravely, "I am going by this evening's coach. I will write when I get to London."

I had my revenge in full. The good old soul almost fell weeping at my feet.

"Oh, Master Gilbert, don'tee, go, sir! That poor young lady, Miss Pauline, what will she do? She loves the very ground you tread upon."

I had bargained for reproaches, not sentiment of this kind. I laid my hand upon her shoulder.

"But Priscilla, Miss Pauline—Mrs. Vaughan, my wife, goes with me."

Priscilla's tears came more copiously than before, but they were tears of joy.

Ten days later and Pauline stood beside her brother's grave. By her own wish she visited it alone. I waited at the gate of the cemetery until she rejoined me. Her face was very pale, her eyes showed traces of many tears, but she smiled as she met my anxious glance.

"Gilbert, my husband," she said, "I have wept, but now I smile. The past is past. Let its darkness be dispersed by the brightness of the present and the promise of the future. Let the love I bore my brother be carried into the greater love I give my husband. Let us turn our backs on the dark shadows and begin our lives."

Have I more to tell? One thing only. Years afterward I was in Paris. The great war had been fought out to the bitter end. Traces of the conflict between the two races had almost vanished, but those of the second and internecine contest were visible everywhere. The Gaul himself had destroyed what the Teuton spared. The Tuileries, with sightless, empty eyes gazed sadly toward the Place de la Concorde, where stood the statues of the fair lost provinces. The Vendome column lay prostrate. The fair city was charred and blackened by the incendiary torches of her own sons; but the flames had been some time extinguished and ample revenge had been taken. A gay young officer, a friend of mine, took me to see a military prison. We were chatting and smoking in the open air when a small body of soldiers appeared. They were escorting three men, who walked with fettered hands and bowed heads.

"Who are they?" I asked.

"Blackguard Communists."

"Where are they taking them?"

The Frenchman shrugged his shoulders. "Where they ought all to be taken—to be shot, the brutes!"

Brutes or not, three men who have but a minute to live must be objects of interest if not sympathy. I looked closely at them as they passed us. One of them raised his head and stared me in the face. It was Macari!

I started as his eyes met mine, but I am not ashamed to say the movement was caused by no feeling of compassion. Ceneri, in spite of myself, I pitied, and would have aided had it been possible, but this ruffian, liar and traitor should have gone to his doom, even if I could have saved him by lifting a finger. He had passed long ago out of my life, but blood still boiled when I thought of him and his crimes. I knew not how he had lived since I last saw him—knew not whom or how many he had betrayed; but if Justice had been slow in claiming him, her sword had at last reached him and his end was close at hand.

He knew me—perhaps he thought I had come there to gloat over his punishment. A look of bitter hate crossed his face. He stopped and cursed me. The guard forced him on. He turned his head and cursed me until one of the soldiers smote him in the mouth. The act may have been cruel, but there was little mercy shown to Communists in those days. The guard and their prisoners turned round an angle of the building.

"Shall we see the end?" said my friend, flipping the ash off his cigar.

"No, thank you."

But we heard it. In ten minutes the rattle of rifles sounded, and I knew that the last and guiltiest of Anthony March's murderers had found his deserts.

I remembered my promise to Ceneri. With great trouble I managed to get a message sent which I believed would reach him. Six months afterward a letter stamped with innumerable hieroglyphical postmarks was delivered to me. It told me that the prisoner to whom I had written had died two years after his arrival at the mines. So the lesser criminal had not the satisfaction of knowing the fate of the man who had betrayed him.

My tale is told. My life and Pauline's began when we turned from that cemetery and resolved to forget the past. Since then our joys and griefs have been the same as those of thousands. As I write this in my happy country house, blessed with wife and children, I wonder if I could ever have been that blind man who heard those fearful sounds and who saw afterward that terrible sight. Could it have been I who rushed from one end of Europe to the other to set at rest a doubt which I blush at even harboring? Could it have been Pauline, whose eyes now shine with love and intelligence, who lay for months, even years, with the sweet bells of her intellect jangled and out of tune?

Yes, it must be so; for she has read every line I have written, and as we peruse and revise this last page her arm steals round me, and she entreats insisting that I shall record her utterance:

"Too much, too much of me, my husband, not enough of what you did and have always done for me!"

With this, the only difference of opinion that exists between us, my tale may end.

THE END.

A Wig-Maker's Romance.

A Washington wig-maker tells the following story: "There was a fashionable wedding in this city not long ago where a beautiful young girl married an old man and did not know it. And what is more, she lives with him now and has not found him out. The groom was a handsome man, and was looked upon as a young man in society, in which he figured quite prominently. He had a youthful face, was quick and erect, and by coloring his hair, which was snow white, he easily passed with the youngest. With his affable manner and gallantry he won the heart of the young girl he married from a number of other suitors, many of them young and handsome. The girl was very young, and a belle.

"Just before the wedding took place the man came here and had his own hair cut off and a wig made. Dyeing his hair had worked very well while he was courting, but when it came to getting married he knew he could not use dye without his wife finding it out, so he adopted a wig to get out of the difficulty. The idea of his young wife finding out that he was an old man nearly set him wild, and when he had gotten well settled under his wig he was the happiest man I ever saw. On his wedding day he was as frisky as a boy, and no one suspected his secret. This happened some months ago, and the bride has not yet found out that he is an old man and wears a wig, and she will probably never find out until old age asserts itself so strongly that it can no longer be concealed. They live here in the city now, and the secret is known probably to none save the groom and his hair-dresser.

"He Has Come Back."

Without, the wintry sky is overcast;
The fleecy descend—Borne hail and rushing rain;
Whilst over and anon the raving blast
Disturbs the casement-pane.
Within, our darling beats an angrier air
With piteous outstretched arms and tossing head;
Whilst we, bowed low beside his laboring bed,
Pour all our hearts in prayer.

Is this the end? The tired little hands
Fall by his side, the wild eyes close at last—
Breathless he sinks; almost we hear his sands
Of being ebbing fast.
When, O miraculous! he wakes once more,
Love glowing in his gaze, and while there slips
"Mother, dear mother!" from his trembling lips—
"Dear mother!" o'er and o'er.

He has come back, our little fairy child—
Back from his wanderings in the dreadful dark;
Back o'er the furious surge of frenzy wild,
The lost dove of our Ark—
Back, feebly back o'er the dire flood's decrease,
His white wings flutter, only our God knows how,
Bearing aloft the blessed olive-bough
Of His compassionate peace.

The Kinkead Hills.

What are known as the Kinkead Hills, in Jackson County, are being brought into notice on account of their peculiarities. Their tops form the highest land in the State. Some six miles from the Mississippi river, near their southern slope, a break occurs showing an appearance as if the hills had been suddenly forced apart, forming an outlet for the waters behind them. The only rocks found in this vicinity for miles around are marble, red sandstone, and conglomerate, with a single exception. Near the fissure in the hills, a few rods from a country school house on the farm of Mr. Henry Austin, lies a great slab of gray sandstone. The Murphysboro Era of a late date describes this rock, which it does not doubt "is a genuine relic of prehistoric times." No other rock of a similar description is found within a radius of fifty miles. It has a slight pink tinge, is a level slab in shape of an oblong square, with a surface about 180 feet square and four feet thick. It lies in a dense forest, with old oaks, bushes, and other hard woods growing near it. The children from the school near by had played in its neighborhood for years, when they one day found that under the soil of their play ground lay a huge rock. "Upon removing the covering of soil, composed wholly of decayed leaves which must have been ages in accumulating, the face of the rock was found to be covered with human footprints, turkey and coon tracks, while in the center and at the north end are carvings and tracings, evidently the work of a man. The footprints are twenty-seven in number, comprising those of men, women, and children; all are well developed, perfect in form, and from half to one inch deep, the steps being made in true Indian style—straight without the least turn of the foot, toes open, the big toe showing plainly aside from the others as perfect as if the work of but yesterday."—Galesburg Republican.

By the will of the late Stephen Williams, of the Roxbury division of Boston, the Hampton Normal School, of Hampton, Va., will receive $20,000.

Music is the sound which one's children make as they romp through the hotel. Noise is the sound which other people's children make under the same circumstances.—Boston Post.

Miss Adelina Patti sang "Home, Sweet Home" in St. Louis the other evening, and wept like a child. St. Louis orchestras, by the way, are enough to make anybody weep—Boston Post.

A Baptist minister was asked how it was that he consented to the marriage of his daughter to a Presbyterian. "Well, my dear friend," he replied, "as far as I have been able to discover, Cupid never studied theology."—Leadville Herald.

An Iowa editor wrote an obituary of one of his subscribers, at the request of the widow, in which he inadvertently spoke of the deceased as having gone to a "far happier home." The widow is out gunning, and the editor has fled for his life.

The genius that introduces to the notice of the married world a game in which both sides can win every time has a fortune awaiting him. Until this is done married people who desire to indulge in euchre or croquet should take the precaution to choose other partners.—Philadelphia Times.

The Arabs are a "gritty" people; they have plenty of sand and won't "take water" very often. They don't often get it. They have good memories for their past wrongs; they remember every outrage that has been committed against them, for they are great on dates.—San Francisco Post.

"How are you, Smith?" asked a Fourth avenue man of a friend he had not seen for nearly a year. "How are all the girls? Are you as sweet upon Miss Jonas as you used to be?" "Oh, no. I left that off several months ago." "Have you had a quarrel?" "No; I married her last August."—New York Graphic.

A Missouri farmer refused to look at a sample sewing machine recently, as he always "sowed wheat by hand." He is related to the man who did not want a threshing machine on his farm. "For," said he, "give me a harness-tug or a barrel-stave, and I can make my family toe the mark according to law and Scripture."

A Georgia editor is responsible for the remark that "the happiest moment in a young lady's life is when she has a real, live sweetheart." There may have been a person here and there who supposed that the most felicitous time of her existence was when she had a dead sweetheart, but the Georgia editor has disabused their minds of that impression.—Norristown Herald.

The Supreme Court of Massachusetts has decided that telegraph companies have a right to erect lines upon public highways without making compensation for the privilege, on the ground that such use is of a public character, similar to that for which the highway was originally taken. This does not agree with the decisions of the Supreme Court of Illinois and the Court of Appeals in New York, both of which have held that the owners in fee are entitled to compensation in such cases.

Parlor Roller Rink Re-opening.

This excellently conducted place of recreation, which has been closed for the holidays, will be re-opened some time during the coming week—as soon as possible after the exhibition of the Horticultural Society, which is to be held there next Tuesday.

Prob's Weather Promises.

The following forecast of the weather for this district for the 24 hours from 1 a. m. to-day is received from the Toronto Meterological office:—Moderate west and southwest winds; generally fair weather, ; not much change in temperature.

Mrs. Peck's Lecture.

Mrs. Pech has given great satisfaction as a lecturer wherever she has been, and it is safe to say that a better lady lecturer has never been in Canada. The lecture will be given in the Opera House, commencing at 8 o'clock.

Fruits and Flowers.

All interested in the culture of fruits and flowers are reminded of the exhibition of the Peterborough Horticultural Society, which takes place in the Parlor Roller Skating Rink, Water street, on Tuesday next, Sept. 8th. Entries may be made with the Secretary, Mr. J. D. Collins, at the exhibition hall on Monday next from three to five o'clock.

Saved Army.

General Lindsay, who has been visiting the different stations in the eastern division during the past six weeks, is expected to return to head quarters this evening. Staff Captain Wyatt and wife, who are on their wedding tour, will visit Peterborough tomorrow, and take part in the meetings during their stay here. They proceed east on Monday to take charge of a station.

Spectacles.

Testimonial from S. R. Earle, Secretary and Manager of the Belleville Gas Co.:

BELLEVILLE, Nov. 24, 1883.

B. Laurance, Esq., Oculist and Specialist:

DEAR SIR,—I have been under treatment and fitted with spectacles by the leading oculists of Toronto and Montreal, but I am better pleased with the selection made by you. I consider your spectacles a first-class article in every sense of the word.

Yours truly,
S. R. EARLE.

Dire Destitution and Generous Relief.

Not long since a man and his wife came to town to seek employment, and stayed at an hotel during their search. They were unable to get work which they could do, and in the interval of waiting, their funds not only became exhausted, but they ran in arrears of board bill so far that they would not be kept any longer at the hotel. They were, therefore, forced to leave the house without other clothing than that on their persons, it being retained as security for their board bill. Without money, without friends, without clothing sufficient to shield them, they were forced to sleep at nights in the Court House Park. This they did three days and three nights, with no other protection from the chilling winds and frost than was afforded by the shrubbery under which they took refuge. Yesterday, these facts coming to the knowledge of a charitably disposed citizen, whose purse, fortunately, permitted him to carry out the noble impulses of his heart he at once paid the board bill, amounting to $20, released the woman's clothing and procured her employment, and the man was, similarly dealt with. While it is exceedingly sad that such a case of extreme destitution should occur in our town, it is pleasant to know that we have amongst us a citizen, willing to come forward and so nobly contribute to its relief. Happy and deserving of all honor is the citizen who shows himself worthy of the possession of wealth by an act of charity like that above recorded.

ATHLETICS.

Foot Ball.

ANNUAL MEETING AND ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

The annual meeting of the Peterborough Foot Ball Club was held last evening at the office of the P.A.A.A., and the following officers elected for the ensuing year:—President, Dr. Geo. Burnham; Vice-President, H. Hammond, Esq.; Secretary, P. E. S. Cooper; Captain, P. P. Myles; Committee, C. A. Lawford, P. P. Myles, A. St.A. Smith. The Ontario Association cup will be played for between Peterborough and Kingston on or before October 10th, and the local kickers are going to get down to practice at once. The match will be played on the Association grounds here.

Lacrosse.

THE MIDLAND DISTRICT CHAMPIONSHIP TO BE PLAYED FOR ON THURSDAY NEXT.

A meeting of the Peterborough Lacrosse Club was held last evening at the Little Windsor Hotel, when the proposition of the Checkers, of Beaverton, to play for the championship on the 10th instant came up for consideration. It was decided to accept that date, and the boys will accordingly go to Beaverton on the 10th. Arrangements will be made to run an excursion at a return fare of $2, and as this match will be of great interest, the club will no doubt be accompanied by large numbers of their admirers. It is to be hoped that, as the time for preparation is short, the boys will spare no effort to get into the best of trim, and will not let their visit be for naught. If they play as they did in the recent match against the U. S. champions there is little doubt of their return in triumph. Boys! if you bring back that cup there's a big reception ahead of you. Don't spare any effort to put yourselves in shape to win it.

BRANTFORDS V. BRANTS.

These old time antagoniats meet at Paris, Ontario, on Saturday, and as they could find no man near home that both could agree on as referee, they applied to Mr. H. LeBrun to furnish them with one. Mr. Percy Myles, of the Peterboroughs, accordingly left town for Paris this morning, and will act in the capacity of referee. They may rest assured of a square deal.

TEAM FOR THE CHAMPIONSHIP TUSSLE.

The following are the names of the the players who will compose the team to play Beaverton for championship on Thursday Sept. 10th:—W. Rudkins, J. Joyal, P. Miles, R. Hall, M. Halpin, R.H. Fortye, R. Kelly, J. Sheehy, A. Yelland, J. Henderson, C. Rutherford, W. Scott, G. Giroux, spare man.

Practice to-night on Riverside Park, and every night till date of match.

The P. A. A. A. Semi-Monthly Games.

RACING IN THE RAIN.

The semi-monthly athletic meeting of the Peterborough Amateur Athletic Association was held yesterday afternoon, but the unfavorable weather deterred competitors from turning out, and absolutely precluded the attendance of any number of spectators.

The first event was the 100 yards' dash, won by Geo. Orde from Elliott and Cooper at the last meeting. Orde and Elliott alone faced the starter on the present occasion, and Orde won by about two yards, after a good race for about two-thirds of the distance.

The bicycle race, one mile, brought out three men, Might, Sanderson and Karsch. The first named won by several yards, Sanderson being second, while after a couple of laps Karsch abandoned the contest.

The quarter mile was between Geo. Orde, Bank of Commerce, and Morris, Bank of Ontario, and resulted in another victory for the former, who ran his opponent out.

The mile race brought to the scratch Lawford, Bank of Montreal, and Morris, Bank of Ontario. They started in a pelting shower of rain, and ran several laps in close company, when Morris gave up the struggle, leaving Lawford to trot through the driving rain alone. The latter stuck to his task, and finished up in good form, but drenched to the skin.

The athletes are holding themselves in reserve for the annual games of the association which are to be held on the 28th. A large number of valuable prizes for amateurs are offered, and a large and successful meet is expected.

What We Would Like to See.

A little fine weather.

The Belleville axe factory rebuilt in Peterborough.

A thorough registration of births, marriages and deaths.

The smallpox stamped out in Toronto and Montreal.

Goldwin Smith pay that expected visit to Peterborough.

The Gun Club meeting "go off" successfully next Monday night.

What they are Saying.

Come and see my dandy new shoe shop.—Jos. Griffin.

I'm "Benedick, the married man."—The young editor.

What about my new fall bonnet?—Everybody's wife.

About a dollar and a half.—A regular brute.

Let us club our guns.—The crack shots.

Wha daur say I dinna ken whaur to find the bulls-ee noo?—Duncan Cameron.

What We May Expect.

A big crowd at the exemption meeting tonight.

Mrs. Susannah Peck to have lots of listeners,

And the ladies to be proud of their sex.

Belleville's burnt axe factory to be rebuilt.

The lacrosse boys to begin to practice.

The milliners back from the city, with loads of new millinery,

And "at prices to suit the times."

Gun Club.

A meeting will be held at the Grand Central Hotel on Monday evening next, at eight o'clock, for the purpose of forming a Gun Club. The object of the club will be to practice trap shooting at clay pigeons, and getting up matches with other clubs. As there are a great many crack shots in Peterborough it is hoped there will be a large attendance.

Smiths Market.

Peaches, Plums, Pears, Grapes, Oranges, Lemons, Apples, Cherries, Garden Raspberries, Melons, Currants, Gooseberries, and all kinds of green vegetables. Ripe Tomatoes one dollar per box, twenty pounds in the box. Fresh Fish, Hams and Bacon.

Smokers will further their own interest by insisting upon having the "Cable," or "El Padre" brands of cigars which have stood the test for a quarter of a century, and yet allow greedy and unscrupulous dealers to persuade them to take other brands which pays them a larger profit, the consumer being a loser thereby. 13d-25w

The Daily Examiner.

SATURDAY, SEPT. 5, 1885.

What We Would Like to See.

The town full of level-headed Irishmen like Tom Cahill.

The beat of last night's meeting.

A by-law that the lawyers and parliamentarians could not dissect.

How Lawyer Edmison would act if he really was excited.

That $25 that Councillor McNaughton wanted to wager.

The assessment roll straightened out a bit.

And the workingmen getting a fair show.

What they are Saying.

Why wasn't Mr. James Stevenson at the exemption meeting last night.—The people.

Oh! he's got all the exemption he cares about.—The ratepayers.

Mr. Carnegie should try his hand at running for the Council.—Chairman Cahill.

He would get badly left if he did.—An echo from No. 1 Ward.

The heaviest ratepayers were on my side of the house.—Mr. D. W. Dumble.

I should say so, rather!—Dr. Kincaid.

What We May Expect.

Both the Carnegie and Dumble sections to claim a great moral victory.

Peterborough to remain at a standstill if some very honest folks have their way.

Some changes in the Council next January.

And somebody to get left.

The Mayor to attend the next exemption meeting in a coat of mail.

Tommy Beavis to say that there was dirty divils in the Council Chamber last night.

And to refuse point blank to clean it out.

They walked slowly down Howard street, arm in arm. There were no June roses—no balmy breezes—but a good deal of soft talk on his part and a great deal of sighing on hers. He had never loved before, he said—didn't know there was any difference between love and cheap N. O. molasses. He had been a cynic and skeptic and an unbeliever in women all his life, but now his little Birdie had—

Well, about that time Birdie's hat was clawed off backwards, her hair clawed around sideways and a parcel of dress goods, fur-lined circular and bare-headed Birdie skipped the gutter without stopping to talk back.

The lover? Well, he did the best he could. That is, he leaned up against the fence and let the clawer claw and kick until out of breath, and then he said he had better go home and see if the children were all right. What happened after they got there will never be known. Together they left the scene in silence, and an hour later a policeman halted at sight of the wrecked hat, locks of false hair and damaged ribbons and whispered:

"'Nother of those mysterious disappearances! Somebody's Birdie has been here!"—Detroit Free Press.

A Crowded Meeting Discuss the Subject.

The Dickson By-law.

An Eloquent Address by Mr. Dumble

Obstructionists Burk the Count

Mayor Cox's Energetic Endeavours

To Build up the Town

The Finale a Fiasco.

Owing to the fact that Bradburn's Opera House had beemp reviously engaged for Mrs. Pech's lecture by the Scott Act Committee, the public meeting called for last evening to discuss the question of repealing the by-law exempting portions of the Dickson estate from taxation, was held in the Council Chamber. It had been anticipated that owing to the fact of another meeting taking place simultaneously in the same building there would not be a very large gathering, and at first the only idea was to call the meeting to order and adjourn, but when eight o'clock came there was quite an audience gathered, which, as the time wore on, was augmented, and when the Scott Act meeting was dismissed so many crowded into the Council Chamber that not an inch of sitting or standing room was unoccupied.

The Mayor opened proceedings by explaining the recent occurrences in the Council Chamber which had led up to the present gathering, and stated that as he was to some extent interested in the matter under discussion and in some degree responsible for the by-law which occasioned it, and desired to speak thereon, he would be glad if the meeting would appoint a chairman other than himself.

Mr. Cahill was accordingly proposed and accepted the chairmanship.

The first gentleman to speak was Mr. Lech, who said that he was sorry that he did not share the sentiments of the Mayor in regard to the question under consideration. Thirteen or fourteen years ago he had expressed his feelings when the exemption of the Auburn Woolen Mills was up for consideration and he had not since changed his mind. It had been argued that companies with large capital but it was not for that object they started, but to benefit themselves, something which they generally managed to do. Small manufacturers with small capital also benefited the place as well as themselves, or if they didn't would soon pick up and leave the town. The lender of borrowed money benefited himself as well as the borrower, his mind was fixed on that idea. How, he would ask, had he been dealt with in regard to this question of exemption? He contended that when he came to the town he instituted a new industry, and although he had the utmost difficulty in raising the amount of his taxation there had been no exemption for him. Even now he felt he had a right to claim it, but all he asked for was equal rights. The Lindsay Agricultural Works had been quoted as a reason why Peterborough should do as had been done there in exempting that factory for all time. He thought the people of Lindsay must be very desperate when they granted exemptions to the second and third generations. If we took that town as an example we might have thrown away money on railways as they had done. It was no reason because one place was foolish that another should be. He had always been against exemptions of every kind, but would modify his feelings in favor of the stove works, but he held that where the Dickson Company had been taxed only on $50,000, they should have been assessed at $150,000, for the assessors could not take oath that the value of the property was less.

BENEFITED THE TOWN,

Mayor Cox said it was thought by some that the entire Dickson estate was included in this by-law. That was not the case, but only the property of the Dickson Company, which followed up the river bank from Wilson's Mills to the Dominion Mills, and on which there were no dwelling houses, and even if there were they would not be exempted. The by-law exempted simply buildings that might be erected hereafter for manufacturing purposes, or machinery put into the buildings already there. If Mr. Lech thought the taxation of the Dickson estate should be on $150,000 the same principle might be applied to other property in the town. That estate was the highest assessed of any in the town as compared with the valuation. Mr. Lech's house was assessed for $8,500, his store for $4,500, and his stock at $1,500; $14,000 for house store and stock. He believed that Mr. Lech's stock alone was actually worth more than that amount, and so Mr. Lech's house and store were practically exempt from taxation, as his stock alone was worth more than the whole sum he was assessed at. This might be used to argue that in Mr. Lech's case the assessors had perjured themselves.

Mr. Lech here interpolated the remark that he had been here 25 years, but had not yet been able to retire from business.

The Mayor continuing, said that if anyone had a right to complain, it was the workingman, whose houses, worth only $1000, were assessed at $800, while those of richer men were assessed far lower proportionately; this was what he complained of; it was not those who had

GROUNDS OF COMPLAINT

that were crying out, but those who had none. He esteemed it a fortunate thing that such a large meeting had assembled to discuss this question and have it set right. He was quite willing to see all property assessed at its correct value, and would concur in the repeal of every by-law for exemption and the assessing of all property at its real value, and the Dickson company, too, would be quite content if this were done. But they had a right to complain when they said to the people, if you will give us encouragement we will erect buildings on that raceway to attract industries here, all we ask you to do is to say that you will not increase our assessment for ten years. If some manufacturing company filled these buildings, it would largely augment the revenue of the town instead of decreasing it, so that there was not very much reason to complain of the Dickson company. He wished it understood that his own interest in the company was only one-seventh of the stock which he had taken solely for the purpose of encouraging the erection of manufactures in the town, and he honestly and firmly believed that it was in the interest of the town. There was great difficulty in inducing people to take stock in an enterprise of this kind. We had wealthy men in town whose capital was LOCKED UP IN THEIR OWN BUSINESS.

These could not be expected to take any stock in such ventures, but there were also very many people of capital here who could afford to invest $1,000 in that way, even if they lost it, but very few were willing. He, with Mr. Stevenson, had canvassed the town thoroughly, in an endeavour to get subscriptions of stock for the lock works, and the only persons who [illegible] any, were Messrs. Carnegie, Hilliard, Sherwood and Burnham. Any one investing money in these ventures stood a good chance of losing it, and anyone who was willing to come forward and risk a little capital to build up manufacturing industries, was, at least, entitled to be told that the buildings he erected should not be taxed the moment they were completed. That was all this company had asked, and all that had been proposed to give them under the terms of the by law. But while the stove and lock works were exempt, there seemed to be a particular drive at the Dickson Company.

It had been said that if this property were exempted, a planing mill would be immediately started in opposition to Mr. Baptie, or a waggon factory in opposition to Messrs. Yelland and Douglas or someone else. You could not make any move forward without a chance of interfering with some one. He certainly did not wish to do any harm or injustice to any of these gentlemen, whom he heartily wished every success, but it was impossible to follow a progressive policy without running athwart someone's path to a greater or less extent. He contended that even if these men were injured to some little extent, the corresponding advantages they would enjoy would be infinitely greater. The increasing of our town to if we did have a few more waggon shops or planing mills more, would be a benefit rather than an injury to these men in the very same business, because their property would be so increased in value that it would more than counterbalance any temporary loss they might suffer. If we were to go ahead we must do something of that kind. He had figures to show that the very people who were complaining most in this matter were the ones who had the least grounds for doing so. These, however, he would not at the present time use, but would reserve till later in the evening.

Mr. Lech said that some time ago, when he wanted to sell his property, $12,000 was all he could get bid for it, although people wanted it very badly. On property on London street, for which he paid only $1,200, he was assessed at $1,600, and when he offered it for sale could he only get $1,750; he thought that was taxing pretty close up to the mark.

Mr. McClelland said that two months ago at a meeting of the Council, when this question was before them, he had moved a resolution which meant simply that the Council were unanimous on the question of

GIVING ENCOURAGEMENT

and fostering new industries and to that extent he fathered the resolution. At the next meeting the by-law was considered clause by clause, and he then saw that it was very sweeping and dangerous, for it included a great deal we did not know anything about, and he raised objections to various clauses of it, and the result was its being thrown out that night. The matter was referred to a meeting of the Finance Committee, which discussed it, bringing in a report in effect that upon application being received by the Council for the exemption of new industries, the Council would recommend such exemption. The same night the clerk was instructed to prepare the by-law exempting the stove works. At a following meeting that by-law was passed and instructions given for the preparation of another to exempt the lock works, and Mr. Cox knew that the Council would, on application from the Dickson or any other company on the Dickson race, upon fair considerations grant such exemption. That was the shape in which the question was left about a month ago, when this by-law was brought in and passed through with very little opposition he understood. It was a dangerous by-law, whose effect was to create a great injustice to other industries of men who had borne the heat and burden of the day. Among these he might name the two Hamilton firms, Mr. Hilliard, and many others who had as much right, if this by-law were sustained, to ask for the same privileges Where or who were the taxes to come from he would ask? He could not see how Mr. Cox arrived at $50,000 for he made it $67,000; he could not understand it. He could not understand how, if Mr. Cox believed that the taxation of the town

OUGHT TO BE DOUBLE,

why it was he could ask to have the assessment of this property placed at $50,000 for the next ten years to come. He saw trouble ahead for the assessors, who were sworn to make a fair valuation. How at the end of ten years could they say, on oath, that $50,000 was a fair valuation of this property. We could not dictate to the assessors what they should return the valuation of the property at. Legal opinion had been given that the law was bad. He would consider himself remiss in the interests of the people who elected him if he allowed the by-law to be passed over the head of the ratepayers. He did not believe the occupants of the buildings would receive the benefit of the exemption anyhow, it would only enable the Company to ask higher rents. He knew other properties had been increased largely in rent since Mr. Cox came into possession of them.

Mayor Cox rose and requested Mr. McClelland to name the properties he referred to.

Mr. McClelland said he had heard that Dolan's store, on the corner of George and Hunter streets, was going to be raised $300.

Mr. Dolan, who was in the room, in answer to Mr. Cox, stated, that this was untrue.

MOST EMPHATICALLY,

Mr. McClelland, cornered in this, still doubted if the tenants of the Dickson property would share any of the benefits. These were his reasons for opposing the measure.

Mr. D. W. Dumble expressed the great pleasure he felt in seeing so many citizens assembled at a meeting like the present. We had not, he thought, enough of such meetings to consider matters of interest to the town. Citizens were wont to remain up late at night and scratch their heads in consideration of their private affairs; joint stock companies held their meetings every few days, and yet town matters were hardly thought anything of. He considered these matters to be of paramount importance. Here, to-night, we had been told that the town assessment roll was about three millions, while the real value of the property assessable was five or six millions. Such matters were worthy of grave consideration, and we should bring to such deliberations much wisdom and patience, for it was a work we had to do for ourselves. We did not come here with any personal feeling;—he did not think Mr. McClelland or any other councillor had any but the purest motives, and believed they did their duty, according to their best ability, to the community. But we could not always strike at what was best to be done. The present matter was one of expediency and not of morals:—which course would be best in the interest of the community; and when the question of protection was discussed in Parliament, and one-half supported it and the other half free trade, it was no wonder that we were not a unit on this question of exemption. Let us then consider whether the Conservative doctrine was

BEST FOR THIS COMMUNITY,

let us learn now. Mr. Carnegie might possibly inspire us with such love for it that he would have no trouble at the next election. [Laughter.]

In the first place we must drop all feeling and bitterness and not for a moment consider anything that may be said here personally, and leave the room with as kindly feelings as we entered it. We had often before discussed municipal interests, and on such occasions wanted to know what was best for the welfare of the town. One matter was the railway; and $200,000 had been voted to bring a railway into town. The spending of money in the building of the missing link of that railway gave prosperity for the time being in our town and threw into this community a large amount of money. With that prosperity the name of our town spread over the country, and as people passing through our town still saw it flourishing the remark was made by them, "What a fine town Peterborough is." Of late years, in consequence, lots of people had come here, and a spirit of hope and buoyancy had caused many to put their money into enterprises and buildings and improvements. Success engendered success; the movement giving employment to laborers had brought in people to live and settle and build, and prosperity continued brought still further prosperity. Mr. Cox, through good fortune and management, had become a man of a

GREAT DEAL OF INFLUENCE

in the town; a man, who, by his encouragement and means, could accomplish much for the community; a man who had already done much, and who, knowing and meeting the requirements of the community, and knowing what it would be, had made handsomely. We had had men who counted their wealth by millions, and he would ask the audience if any of them had spent it in such enterprises as would give employment to our people, money to our traders and prosperity to our town. Mr. Cox had looked around him to see in what way he could best succeed in increasing the wealth of which he was already possessed and at the same time increase everybody else's wealth, helping himself and the community together. Was not that true? (Applause.) Then, under these circumstances, we should, one and all, be prepared to meet Mr. Cox, or anybody else, with the best support we were able to give. For a long time we hoped that prosperity would come where railways had come, and hoped it would continue, but while we were a town with a good surrounding country, that country had been developed, and was not likely to have any perceptible increase to add to the growth of the town. The lumber trade, once an important element of our prosperity and success, was fast leaving us, and we looked round to see from whence our future growth was to come. For years past all eyes had been turned to the Dickson mill race, and we had said, there is a water power that if it were developed would give birth to industries employing hundreds, aye, thousands of mechanics and be

THE BACKBONE OF PROSPERITY

for all time to our town. (Loud applause.) Some had said, I am willing to be taxed that the town may buy that property and be liberal in renting out powers to an extent beyond what any individual owner could. That project had been seriously discussed and considered by some of our wisest and most judicious men as a fit and proper investment for the town to make. It had been said by some that the Dickson Company had not been liberal enough. He himself had for a long time thought so, and that the Dicksons were not as liberal as they might be. But now he knew more about it, and that the estate was encumbered for many years to such an extent that nothing but the greatest industry and persevering toil enabled them to work it out of debt. This all showed that we should be careful in the charges we made. During the last few years Mr. Hazlitt had showed him offers made to rent water power at figures far below anything he had supposed he would ask, and he knew a mill running by water power to-day, the whole rent of which was less than Mr. Denne paid for fuel for his mill, so that he did not think we had been altogether just in charging Mr. Hazlitt with being narrow in the management of that estate. When we were under a railway monopoly people would not come here at any figures, and it was only after we had the second line that our water power became valuable to induce manufacturers to come and locate here, and we were now in a better position to induce manufacturers to come among us than ever before. This being so, what was our duty? Mr. Cox had recently induced the opening up of a manufactory in this town which it was hoped would be of great importance, and employ many skilled artizans. The same gentleman had been instrumental in bringing here a stove factory from a distance, taking almost

ALL THE RISK HIMSELF,

and putting his money into it in order to further the growth of the town. Could we look on that conduct without giving him credit? We would have mechanics here who would want to rent houses and who would patronize our merchants. That was what we had been aiming at; it was our only help, and if we did not utilise the advantages we had and rise equal to the occasion, we should forever hold our peace and forbear to charge anyone with illiberality. How much tax would we have got if the town had purchased the property to rent it at nominal rates? If it remained undeveloped for the next twenty years how much revenue would we realise from it? What could be gained by such a policy? He would not advocate an injustice to anyone, but it would not do to look at things from a narrow point of view, but the welfare of the whole must be studied. But he believed that if ten waggon factories were put on the race it would not hurt any waggon maker in this town, but would do them good. In Manitoba at every station might be seen lying wagons imported from one great factory at South Bend, Ind., that had built up a name and reputation. A town

LAST NIGHT'S MEETING.

It is unnecessary to remind the public that the meeting called for last evening was for the purpose of dispassionately discussing the question of the exemption from taxation of any new buildings the Dickson company may erect on the limits specified in the by-law. Instead however of the meeting taking that character it was by the questionably fair efforts of a few interested obstructionists, converted into one of the noisiest and most unruly gatherings imaginable. There can be little doubt that the majority of the responsible ratepayers present were in favor of sustaining the action the council had taken. A few who could not subordinate their personal feelings and aims to a calm consideration of a subject involving the interests of the town, are responsible if there was a failure at last night's meeting to secure the object for which Mayor Cox called it, namely, to elicit a fair expression of public opinion on the subject under consideration. It must, at least, be conceded that the discussion brought out the fact that the Dickson exemption by-law is one that is in the interest of the town, and that the council will best serve that interest by keeping faith with the Dickson Company, and declining to repeal it.

The Spanish-German Trouble.

PARIS, Sept. 3.—The Government has issued an order prohibiting anti-German demonstrations in France by the Spanish residents.

The Peace of the World.

VIENNA, Sept. 3.—The New Freie Presse says an Anglo-Chinese alliance would open up a new phase of the Russian question and guarantee the peace of the world. This much is certain, England's decadence is still far distant.

Herat Wants English Garrisons.

LONDON, Sept. 3.—Three Candahar regiments were recently ordered to proceed to Herat, but they refused to go. The natives of Candahar openly wish the English to occupy that city.

Horrible Drowning Accident.

OSHKOSH, Wis., Sept. 3.—A horrible drowning accident occurred at St. Paul railroad bridge this morning. The draw bridge open, 11 persons, nine girls and two men, attempted to cross the channel in a boat, were caught in the swell of a tug and upset. Only five of them were rescued.

Disgracing His Uniform.

OTTAWA, Sept. 3.—The Citizen this morning directs the attention of the Government to the case of Lieut. Mackay, of the 65th Batt., who took part in a banquet at Papineauville, at which the toast of Riel and Dumont was drunk. It says that Lieut. Mackay has disgraced his uniform, and that his name should be at once dropped from the militia list. Lieut. Mackay should not be expected to otherwise than follow the example of his commanding officer, Lieut. Col. Ouimet, the Tory M. P. for Laval, who publicly declared a few days ago that he intended to be in Parliament, as he had been in the Northwest, the friend of Riel and the Metis, but no Tory organ has had courage to find fault with Ouimet. Why blame the lieutenant and not the colonel?

Great Head of a Rat.

Two Austin gentlemen, Colonel Yerger and Sam Bass, were talking about the comparative intelligence of animals.

"I think that a horse is the most intelligent animal, remarked Colonel Yerger.

"No, sir, the horse is not. The rat is the shrewdest and smartest little animal I know of. It has a wonderful power of discrimination. The rat never sets fire to a store by nibbling at matches until everything is insured for more than its value. A rat who is in that line of business is sharper than a fire insurance agent with a sixty-ounce brain and thirty years' experience."—Texas Siftings.

A. L. Shephard, of Dallas, Texas, visiting at Hartford, Conn., lost a roll of greenbacks amounting to $3,800. He mentioned his loss at the Allyn House, and a stranger who was present said he had found a sum of money which he would restore to the owner on proper identification. Mr. Shephard described his missing package in detail and the stranger handed over to him the entire sum. Mr. Shephard offered him a $100 bill, but he declined to take it. He finally consented to accept $50. "I am broke," he said, "or I wouldn't take anything.

EXEMPTIONS.

with a reputation was better than a one-horse place that made goods never heard of beyond their own town line. In Toronto and all great cities men did not fear competition, but men of the same trade got just as close together as they could. And if we thought that one more waggon maker or planing mill would destroy this town we had better shut up at once, and say no more about developing it. The presence of one manufacturer induced another to start. One man would start a business, employing a number of men. These would come with their families, and some other man would see their girls and start some work at which they could be employed, and another would want to employ the labor of their children. Oshawa was known

ALL THROUGH THE COUNTRY

by reason of her manufactures. Hard times might come, but still they had their industry. Cobourg had a factory which broke down half a dozen companies, but the factory itself had always remained. If we wanted to keep the town as it was let us say so, but not whine for growth and prosperity and still refuse to help that growth and prosperity on. If we had men among us who were willing to spend their money, let us say God speed you, and go on. It was said that the tenants would not get the benefit of the exemption, but the estate would grow rich on it. He doubted if Mr. Hazlitt got six per cent. on it. At all events it was not a wise policy for us to be small or carping, we all thought the water privileges could be developed and employ thousands of men. Then let us sink the idea of revenue from the property and get the mills and men there and keep up our shops and businesses; it was'nt the tax would make a big town, but the increase of population and the employment of extra labor. (Loud applause.) He did not believe in asking a man to go down on his knees begging every year. Let us have a policy of liberality and encouragement. (Applause.)

Mr. Carnegie, while professing to be in harmony to a great extent with the last speaker, was opposed to the by-law in its present form, considering it too sweeping, and, after a speech of considerable length, during the course of which Mayor Cox took an opportunity of expressing the entire willingness of the company to have set to the privileges granted, proposed the following resolution:—"That this meeting, while favoring the policy of fostering and developing manufacturing industries within the town, is of opinion that the by-law passed by the Town Council, exempting the Dickson Company from any advance of fifty thousand a year, the present assessment, for ten years, should be repealed, and also that the Council, when granting exemptions from taxation in full, or in part, should deal with each manufacturing enterprise separately, and shall attach to them such conditions as will insure the town's receiving a return therefor."

LINES AND LIMITS

During the discussion between Mr. Carnegie and Mr. Cox, the by-law was read by the latter.

Mr. Dumble now rose to say that having heard the by-law read he was of opinion that its wording had been too loose, and he would suggest that it should have been so framed as to convey legally the meaning which was conveyed in a comment of the EXAMINER of Thursday, which, in its present condition, he thought it did not.

Mr. Cox said the by-law had been prepared by Mr. Poussette, but that any amendment defining more clearly the ground covered would be quite acceptable.

After considerable further discussion, in the course of which Councillors Douglas and Yelland explained their views on the matter (which have before been published in the EXAMINER), Mr. Dumble said there was much in Mr. Carnegie's motion worthy of consideration, but that he would submit another motion, because he did not think it was encouraging for the company to contemplate large undertakings when there was an uncertainty about the future. Once people took stock in the thing they could not get out of it. In the resolution he would move there was

SOMETHING DEFINITE,

and they would not have to go back to the Council every year, asking as to what they would do. He thought whatever was done should extend over some definite period of time; the next ten years. He would therefore move the following:—

"That this meeting recommend the Council to repeal the by-law exempting the Dickson Mill Race property, and pass a new by-law to exempt for ten years any building erected on the said property for manufacturing purposes during the next ten years, together with the land and power on such erection, and to describe the said property with metes and bounds."

Mr. William Croft stated his desire to become the seconder of Mr. Carnegie's motion.

Councillor Douglas again expressed his undying hatred of any business that would come in and compete with existing ones.

Mr. Denne said that although he had asked for exemption he didn't expect to get it. He was in favour of industries that did not interfere with older ones, and disapproved of giving a big enterprise the advantage over a little one. He disapproved of the by-law.

Mr. Hazlitt defined his position as an opponent on principle of exemptions, but if other enterprises that had not spent one-half what his did, and that never would, were to be exempted, he considered that he would not be getting equal rights in asking the same privilege.

Councillor Hartley said he was not one of those who passed a by-law

THEY KNEW NOTHING ABOUT.

He was in favour of encouraging new industries, and was now, as he had always been, in favor of the by-law.

Councillor Yelland arose amid cries of "Question!" and occupied the floor several moments without promulgating any original idea on the subject. He didn't believe it was right to bring in and exempt new industries that would drive out the old.

In response to loud calls Dr. Kincaid arose and said he did not wish to make a speech at such a late hour. He thought they should get down to business. He rose for the purpose of seconding Mr. Dumble's resolution. If he could judge the feelings of the audience they were all in favor of exemption, the only question being the shape it should take. He felt that this was a very important meeting for the town for many reasons. He thought no good citizen should throw obstacles in the way of the town's progress, and he hoped sectional jealousy would be wiped out and the people rise in their might and give an independent vote on this question in order to strengthen the hands of the Council, for, in spite of the reflections cast upon them, he believed they were acting conscientiously in this matter. He thought it was their desire that the by-law should be amended and the present was the time for them to say so by their vote. He believed Mr. Dumble's notion met every requirement.

After Mr. Carnegie had again spoken a few minutes,

Councillor Cahill requested a hearing which was accorded him. It would be a good thing, he said, for Messrs. Carnegie, Edmison and other grumblers at the Council if they could themselves for a time become Councillors. Fault was frequently found with that body and they met with very little encouragement. Some one came up and found fault with them and the consequence was that we got

A HALF DOZEN LAWYERS

and members of Parliament who could of course drive a coach and four through any by-law ever drafted. If the Council went ahead and made another by-law these gentlemen would have no difficulty in performing the same feat with it. What, he would ask, were we going to gain by this by-law, or were we going to gain anything? Mr. McClelland had profoundly inquired, "Who is going to pay the taxes?" Why the same people who always paid them, to be sure; why they would not be reduced if a thousand factories were built and exempted, and all would be the better of it, and for his part, he hoped to see the factories. Not long since, Messrs. Carnegie and McClelland had come before the council asking for a grant of $500 for the agricultural fair in the town. The ground of their request was that the fair would bring a great many people here, who would spend a deal of money. The council made a grant of $300; Mr. McClelland had boasted that he succeeded in getting the council to give that amount. That sum would more than represent the difference of increased value in the Dickson property, and he would ask his audience,

AS SENSIBLE MEN,

which was likely to prove most beneficial, an agricultural show or a factory on the Dickson raceway? (Cries of hear, hear! and, let's have both!) Yes, he was quite willing to have both. He thought it was a good thing for the town and that no man here would be called upon to pay one cent more taxes on account of that by-law, but, on the contrary, less. He would give a case in point. A gentleman owned a lot in the vicinity of the stove works which the speaker wanted to buy some time ago, and for which he now had to pay $150 more in cash than he would have done before those works went up. The owner of that lot was a clear $150 into pocket on account of that factory being erected, and he himself expected to turn a penny on the transaction, too. And the same thing would happen at the race way. If these gentlemen stopped all their works what would the consequence be? It would be a bad thing for the town. So far as competition was concerned it would be hard to find any industry that did not compete with some one more or less. He hoped the audience would vote both motions down, if this thing went back to the Council there would be no telling where it was going to stop, and the men who were trying to build up the town's interest would get disgusted and likely drop the whole thing.

An attempt was then made to take a show of hands on the motion but the large number of people in the hall rendered this ineffectual. It was then proposed that the house should divide, those in favor of Mr. Carnegie's motion to the west; those for Mr. Dumble's to the east. The meeting had been very disorderly during the latter part of the evening, and the division seemed to be the signal for

LETTING LOOSE PANDEMONIUM,

Each side of the house, with derisive cries, claimed to have carried, although in all fairness, if only bona fide taxpayers had been counted, Mr. Dumble's motion had the majority, on Mr. Carnegie's side being a number of callow youths, who were never the owners of a plug of tobacco, let alone a vote. Chairman Cahill made superhuman efforts to secure a count by each side filing out, but this the Carnegie section, knowing it would go against them, would not do. Mayor Cox ascended the stairs and tried to address the excited throng. Mr. Edmison took personally some of the mayor's remarks, and, gesticulating wildly, seemed likely to choke with anger. Councillor John McNaughton, white with excitement, mounted a chair and attempted a harangue, while little Tommy Beavis, the janitor, with a scared look on his face, ran here and there looking for a convenient knot-hole to crawl through, "out of the hurly burly." Chief Johnston, clad in all the stern majesty of the law, appeared on the scene, and was within an ace of running in the irate Councillor McNaughton, who seemed bereft of everything except an all-consuming desire to yell like a demon. To restore order was impossible, and at last the perspiring Councillor descended from the chair, mopping the perspiration from his forehead with a big bandana, and the crowd, with cheers for the Queen and Dumble's resolution, left the room without any result of the three hours' haranguing having been gained.

TALMAGE'S LONDON SERMON

A Sermon Delivered in London, Eng., by the Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D. D., Sunday, August 16th.

The Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage preached on August 19th, in John Wesley's great church, "City Road Chapel." After the hymn, "Jesus Lover of My Soul," and a Scripture lesson from I. Samuel, chapter 17, Mr. Talmage announced his theme, "Unappreciated Services," and his text from I.Samuel, chapter 36, verse 24:

"As his part is that goeth down to the battle, so shall his part be that tarrieth by the stuff."

Twenty thousand people were present. The weather was beautiful, and the streets leading to the church were lined with vehicles and pedestrians. So enormous was the crowd that Dr. Talmage was compelled to preach outdoors after his sermon in the church. Extraordinary enthusiasm prevailed. He said:

If you have never seen an army change quarters, you have no idea of the amount of baggage—twenty loads, fifty loads, a hundred loads of baggage. David and his army were about to start on a double quick march for the recovery of their captured families from the Amalekites. So they left by the Brook Besor their blankets, their knapsacks, their baggage, and their carriages. Who shall be detailed to watch this stuff? There are sick soldiers, and wounded soldiers, and aged soldiers, who are not able to go on swift military expeditions, but who are able to do some work, and so they are detailed to watch the baggage. There is many a soldier who is not strong enough to march thirty miles in a day and then plunge into a ten hours' fight, who is able with a drawn sword lifted against his shoulder to pace up and down as a sentinel to keep of an enemy who might put the torch to the baggage. There are two hundred of these crippled and aged and wounded soldiers detailed to watch the baggage. Some of them, I suppose, had bandages across the brow, and some of them had their arm in a sling, and some walked on crutches. They had fought in many a fierce battle for their country and their God. They are now part of the time in hospital, and part of the time on garrison duty. They almost cry because they cannot go with the other troops to the front. While these sentinels watch the baggage the Lord watches the sentinels.

There is quite a different scene being enacted in the distance. The Amalekites, having ravaged and ransacked and robbed whole countries, are celebrating their success in a roaring carousal. Some of them are dancing on the lawn with wonderful gyration of heel and toe, and some of them are examining the spoils of victory—the finger-rings and ear-rings, the necklaces, the wristlets, the headbands, diamond starred, and the coffers with coronets and cornelians and pearls and sapphires and emeralds, and all the wealth of plate and jewels and decanters, and the silver and the gold banked up on the earth in princely profusion, and the embroideries and the robes and the turbans and the cloaks of an imperial wardrobe. The banquet has gone on until the banqueters are maudlin and weak and stupid and indecent and loathsomely drunk. What a time it is now for David and his men to swoop on them! So the Syrians were overthrown in their carousal by the Israelites. So Chedorlaomer and his army were overthrown in their carousal by Abraham and his men. So our northern forces were defeated at Fredericksburg, because one of the commanders was drunk. Now is the time for David and his men to swoop upon these carousing Amalekites. Some of the Amalekites are hacked to pieces on the spot; some of them are just able to go staggering and hiccoughing off the field; some of them crawl on camels and speed off in the distance. David and his men gather together the wardrobes, the jewels, and put them upon the backs of camels and into waggons, and they gather together the sheep and the cattle that had been stolen, and start back toward the garrison. Yonder they come! Yonder they come! The limping men of the garrison come out and greet them with wild huzza. The Bible says David saluted them. That is, he asked them how they all were. "How is your broken arm?" "How is your fractured jaw?" Has the stiffened limb been limbered?" "Have you had another chill?" "Are you getting better?" He saluted them.

But now came a very difficult thing, the distribution of the spoils of victory. Drive up those laden with camels now. Who shall have the spoils? Well, some selfish soul suggests that these treasures ought all to belong to those who had been out in active service. "We did all the fighting, while these men stayed at home in the garrison, and we ought to have all the treasures." But David looked into the worn faces of these veterans who had stayed in the garrison, and he looked around and saw how cleanly everything had been kept, and he saw that the baggage was all safe, and he knew that these wounded and crippled men would gladly enough have been at the front if they had been able, and the little general looked up from under his helmet and says: "No, no, let us have fair play;" and he rushes up to one of these men and he says: "Hold your hands together;" and the hands are held together, and he fills them with silver. And he rushes up to another man who was sitting away back and had no idea of getting any of the spoils, and throws a Babylonish garment over him, and fills his hand with gold. And he rushes up to another man who had lost all his property in serving God and his country years before, and he drives up some of the cattle and some of the sheep that they had brought back from the Amalekites, and he gives two or three of the cattle and three or four of the sheep to this poor man, so he shall always be fed and clothed. He sees a man so emaciated and worn out and sick that he needs stimulants, and he gives him a little of the wine that he brought from the Amalekites. Yonder is a man who had no appetite for the rough rations of the army, and he gives him a rare morsel from the Amalekitish banquet, and the two hundred crippled and maimed and aged soldiers who tarried on garrison duty get just as much of the spoils of battle as any of the two hundred men that went to the front. "As his part is that goeth down to the battle, so shall his part be that tarrieth by the stuff."

The impression is abroad that the Christian rewards are for those who do conspicuous service in distinguishing places—great martyrs, great patriots, great preachers, great philanthropists. But my text sets forth the idea that there is just as much reward for a man that stays at home and minds his own business, and who, crippled and unable to go forth and lead in great movements and in the high places of earth, does his whole duty just where he is. Garrison duty is as important and remunerative as service at the front. "As his part is that goeth down to the battle, so shall his part be that tarrieth by the stuff."

The Earl of Kintore said to me in a railroad train: "Mr. Talmage, when you get back to America I want you to preach a sermon on the discharge of ordinary duty in ordinary places, and then send me a copy of [illegible] and English clergymen coming to my country brought from the Earl of Kintore the same message. Alas! that before I got ready to do what he asked me to do the good Earl of Kintore had departed this life. But that man felt sympathetic with those who had ordidary duties to perform in ordinary places and in ordinary ways.

A great many people are discouraged when they hear the stories of Moses and Joshua and of David and of Luther and of John Knox and of Deborah and of Florence Nightingale. They say, "Oh, that was all good and right for them, but I shall never be called to receive the law on Mount Sinai, I shall never be called to command the sun and the moon to stand still, I shall never be called to slay a giant, I shall never preach on Mars Hill, I shall never defy the Diet of Worms, I shall never be called to make a Queen tremble for her crimes, I shall never preside over a hospital." There are women who say, "If I had as brilliant a sphere as those people had, I should be as brave and as grand; but my business is to get the children off to school and to hunt up things when they are lost, and to see that dinner is ready, and to keep account of the household expenses, and to hinder the children from being strangulated by the whooping-cough, and to go through all the annoyances and vexations of housekeeping. Oh! my sphere is so infinitesimal and so insignificant I am clear discouraged." Woman, God places you on garrison duty, and your reward will be just as great as Florence Nightingale, who, moving so often night by night with a light in her hand through the hospitals, was called by the wounded the "Lady of the Lamp." Your reward will be just as great as that of Mrs. Hertzog, who built and endowed theological seminary buildings. Your reward will be just as great as that of Hannah More, who, by her excellent books, won for her admirers Garrick and Edmund Burke and Joshua Reynolds. Rewards are not to be according to the amount of noise you make in the world, nor even according to the amount of good you do, but according to whether you work to your full capacity, according to whether or not you do your full duty in the sphere where God has placed you.

Suppose you give to two of your children errands, and they are to go off to make purchases, and to one you give $1 and to the other you give $20, do you reward the boy that you gave $20 to for purchasing more with that amount of money than the other boy purchased with $1? Of course not. If God gives wealth or social position or eloquence or twenty times the faculty to a man that He gives to the ordinary man, is He going to give to the favored man a reward because he has more power and more influence? Oh, no. In other words, if you and I do our whole duty, and you have twenty times more talent than I have, you will get no more Divine reward than I will. Is God going to reward you because he gave you more? That would not be fair, that would not be right. These two hundred men of the text who fainted by the brook Besor did their whole duty; they watched the baggage; they took care of the stuff, and they got as much of the spoils of victory as the men who went to the front. "As his part is that goeth down to the battle, so shall his part be that tarrieth by the stuff."

There is high encouragement in this for all who have great responsibilities and little credit for what they do. You know the names of the great commercial houses of these cities. Do you know the confidential clerks—the men who have the key to the safe, the names of the men who know the combination lock? A distinguished merchant goes forth at the summer watering-place, and he flashes past, and you say, "Who is that?" "Oh, replies some one" "don't you know? That is the great manufacturer." The confidential clerk has his week off. Nobody knows him, and after a while his week is done, and he sits down again at his desk. God will reward his fidelity just as much as He recognizes the work of the merchant philanthropist whose investments this unknown clerk so faithfully guarded. Business men know the names of the presidents and prominent directors of the great railroads; but they do not know the names of the engineers, the names of of the switchmen, the names of the flagmen, the names of the brakemen. These men have awful responsibilities, and sometimes through the recklessness of an engineer or the unfaithfulness of a switchman, it has brought to mind the faithfulness of nearly all the rest of them. Such men do not have the recognition of their services. They have small wages and much complaint. I very often ride upon locomotives, and I very often ask the question, as we shoot around some curve or under some ledge of rocks, "How much wages do you get?" and I am always surprised to find how little for such vast responsibility. Do you suppose God is going to recognize that fidelity? The head of some railroad company going up at death to receive from God his destiny was no better known in that hour than was known last night the brakeman who on the railroad was jammed to death amid the car couplings. "As his part is that goeth down to the battle, so shall his part be that tarrieth by the stuff."

Once for thirty-six hours we expected every moment to go to the bottom of the ocean. The waves struck through the skylights and rushed down into the holds of the ship and hissed against the boilers. It was an awful time, but by the blessing of God and the faithfullness of the men in charge we came out of the cyclone and we arrived at home. Each one before leaving the ship thanked Captain Andrews. I do not think there was a man or woman went off that ship without thanking Captain Andrews, and when years afterwards I heard of his death I was impelled to write a letter of condolence to his family in Liverpool. Everybody recognized the goodness, the courage, the kindness of Captain Andrews, but it occurs to me now that we never thanked the engineer.

He stood away down in the darkness amid the hissing furnaces doing his whole duty. Nobody thanked the engineer, but God recognized his heroism and his continuance and his fidelity, and there will be just as high reward for the engineer who worked out of sight as the captain who stood on the bridge of the ship in the midst of the howling tempest. "As his part is that goeth down to to the battle, so shall his part be that tarrieth by the stuff."

A Christian woman was seen going along the edge of a wood every eventide, and the neighbors in the country did not understand how a mother with so many cares and anxieties should waste so much time as to be idly sauntering out evening by evening. It was found out afterwards that she went there to pray for her household, and while there one evening she wrote that beautiful hymn famous in all ages for cheering Christian hearts:

"I love to steal awhile away
From every cumbering care,
And spend the hours of setting day
In humble, grateful prayer."

Shall there be no reward for such unpretending yet everlasting service?

Clear back in the country there is a boy who wants to go to college and get an education. They call him a book-worm. Whenever they find him—in the barn or in the house he is reading a book. "What a pity it is," they say, "that Ed. cannot get an education;" His father, work as hard as he will, can no more than support the family by the product of the farm. One night Ed. had retired to his room, and there is a family conference about him.

The sisters say: "Father, I wish you would send Ed [illegible] will work harder than we ever did, and we will make our old dresses do." The other says; "Yes, I will get along without any hired help; although I am not so strong as I used to be, I think I can get along without any hired help." The father says: "Well, I think by working nights I can get along without any assistance." Sugar is banished from the table, butter is banished from the table. That family is put down on rigid, yea, suffering economy that the boy may go to college. Time passes on. Graduation day has come. Think not that I mention an imaginary case. God knows it happened. Commencement day has come, and the professors walk in on the stage in their long gowns. The interest of the occasion is passing on, and after a while it comes to a climax of interest as the valediction is to be introduced. Ed. has studied so hard and worked so well that he has had the honor conferred upon him.

There are rounds of applause, sometimes breaking into vociferation. It is a great day for Ed. But way back in the galleries are his sisters, in plain hats and faded shawls, and the old-fashioned father and mother—dear me, she has not had a new hat for six years; he has not had a new coat for six years—and they get up and look over on the platform, and they laugh and they cry and they sit down, and they look pale, and then they are very much flushed. Ed. gets the garlands, and the old-fashioned group in the gallery have their full share of the triumph. They have made that scene possible, and in the day when God shall more fully reward self-sacrifices made for others, he will give grand and glorious recognition. "As his part is that goeth down to the battle, so shall his part be that tarrieth by the stuff."

There is high encouragement in this subject also, for those who once wrought mightily for Christ and the church, but through sickness or collapse of fortune or advanced years cannot now go to the front. These 200 men of the text were veterans. Let that man bare his arm and show how the muscles are torn. Let him pull aside the turban and see the mark of a battle-axe; pull aside the coat and see where the sphere thrust him. Would it be fair for these men, crippled, weak, and old, by the brook Besor, to have no share in the spoils of triumph? Do you think my Lord is going to turn off His old soldiers because they are weak and worn? Are they going to get no part in the spoils of victory? Just look at them. Do you think those crevices in the face are wrinkles? No, they are battle scars. They fought against sickness, they fought against trouble, they fought against sin, they fought for God, they fought for the church, they fought for the truth, they fought for Heaven. When they had plenty of money their names were always on the subscription list. When there was any hard work to be done for God they were ready to do the heaviest part of it. When there came a great revival they were ready to pray all night for the anxious or the sin-struck. They were ready to do any work, endure any sacrifice, do the most popular thing that God demanded of them. But now they can not go further. Now they have physical infirmities, now their head troubles them. They are weak and faint by the brook Besor. Are they to have no share in the triumph? Are they to get none of the treasures, none of the spoils of conquest? You must think that Christ has a very short memory if you think He has forgotten their services.

Fret not, ye aged ones. Just tarry by the stuff and wait for your share of the spoils. Yonder they are coming. I hear the bleating of the fat lambs and I see the jewels glint in the sun. It makes me laugh to think how you will be surprised when they throw a chain of gold over your neck and tell you to go in and dine with the King. I see you backing out because you feel unworthy. The shining ones come up on one side, and the shining ones come up on the other side, and they push you on, and they push you up, and they say, "Here is an old soldier of Jesus Christ," and the shining ones will rush out towards you and say, "Oh, yes, she was with me in the last sickness." And then the cry will go round the circle: "Come in, come in, come up, come up; we saw you away down there, old and sick and decrepit, and discouraged because you could not go to the front, but 'As his part is that goeth down to the battle, so shall his part be that tarrieth by the stuff.'"

There is high consolation, also, in this for aged ministers. I see some of them here today. They sit in pews in our churches. They used to stand in pulpits. Their hair is white with the blossoms of the tree of life. Their names are marked on the roll of the general assembly, or of the consociation "Emeritus." They sometimes hear a text announced which brings to mind a sermon they preached fifty years ago on the same subject. They preached more Gospel on $400 a year than some of their successors preached on $4,000. Some Sunday the old minister is in a church, and near by in another pew there are a husband and a wife and a row of children. And after the benediction the lady comes up and says, "Doctor, you don't know me, do you?" "Well," he says, "your face is familiar, but I can not call you by name." "Why," she says, "you baptised me and you married me and you buried my father and mother and sisters." "Oh, yes," he says; "my eyesight isn't as good as it used to be." They are in all our churches—the heroes of 1820, the heroes of 1832, the heroes of 1857. By the long grave trench that cut through half a century they have stood sounding the resurrection. They have been in more Balaklavas and have taken more Sebastopols than you ever heard of. Sometimes they get a little fretful because they cannot be at the front. They hear the sound of a battle, and the old war-horse champs his bit. But the sixty thousand ministers of religion this day standing in the brunt of the fray shall have no more reward than those retired veterans. "My father, my father, the chariots of Israel and the horsemen thereof." "As his part is that goeth down to the battle, so shall this part be that tarrieth by the stuff."

Cheer up, men and women of unappreciated services. You will get your reward, if not here, hereafter. When Charles Wesley comes up to judgment and the thousands of souls which were wafted into glory through his songs, shall be enumerated, he will take his throne. Then Wesley will come to judgment, and after his name has been mentioned in connection with the salvation of millions of souls brought to God through the Methodism which he founded, he will take his throne. But between the two thrones of Charles Wesley and John Wesley there will be a throne higher than either, on which will sit Susannah Wesley, who, with maternal consecration in Epworth rectory, Lincolnshire, started these two souls on their triumphant mission of sermon and song through all following ages. Oh, what a day that will be for many who have rocked Christian cradles with weary foot, and who patched worn-out garments and darned socks, and out of a small income made the children comfortable for the winter. What a day that will be for those to whom the world gave the cold shoulder and called them nobodies, and begrudged them the least recognition, and who, weary and worn and sick, fainted by the brook Besor! Oh, that will be a mighty day when the Son of David shall distribute among them the garlands, the crowns, the sceptres, the chariots, the thrones.

And then it shall be found out that all who on earth served God in inconspicuous spheres receive just as much reward as those who filled the earth with uproar of achievment. They shall understand the height, the depth, the length, the breadth, the pil- [illegible]

DEADLY DYNAMITE

Terrific Explosion Near Lakefield.

One Terrible Ton Explodes

And Blows Two Men and Two Horses into Atoms.

"We'll Be Back To-Night."

"Don't be too Sure of That, We May

Be Blown to Kingdom Come."

The Biggest Fragment Left, A Man's Breast-Bone.

Six Children Fatherless.

Owing to the great demand for copies of the EXAMINER of yesterday, containing the account of the Lakefield dynamite explosion, notwithstanding that 400 extra copies were issued, we republish it this evening with additional particulars we were not able to get into type for yesterday's edition.

At twelve o'clock last Friday we received a telegram from our Lakefield correspondent, stating that a wagon load of dynamite that was being conveyed to the works on the Burleigh Canal, exploded about a mile from the village. A reporter of THE EXAMINER was at once despatched to the scene of the accident. It was found that two men, whose names could not be learned, were teaming a load of twenty boxes of dynamite from Perth. When within about two miles of the village of Lakefield, from some cause that will never be known, for the only persons concerned were

LITERALLY BLOWN TO ATOMS,

the explosion occurred with a terriffic force. This happened about 10.30 o'clock, at the north-west corner of lot 12, in the 6th concession of Douro, opposite the farm of Mr. William Moher, occupied by Mr. Thos. Nolan. Here a number of men were engaged in threshing, about 400 feet from the SCENE OF THE ACCIDENT.

Just previous to the accident Mr. Thomas Nolan, while conveying wheat from the machine where it was threshed to the barn, a short distance away, met the men, seated on a spring seat in front of the wagon, driving a fairly good team of gray horses. The place where he met them was near the top of a hill they had just begun to descend. In going down hill the horses broke into a light trot. They reached the bottom of the hill in safety, but when they had come to a marshy spot about 100 yards from where Mr. Nolan met them, a sound like a volley of a rent the heavens, and then the two men and their team had literally disappeared, Mr. Michael Hourighan, who witnessed the explosion from the top of the straw stack where he was at work, was the first on the spot, followed by Mr. James McCliggott, ex-Deputy Reeve of Douro, and others engaged in the threshing operations, and they were awestruck at the terrible sight that met their eyes at

SCORE OF THUNDER CLAPS

THE SCENE OF THE EXPLOSION.

The scene of the accident was at the foot of a hill at a point where the road is surrounded by swampy ground covered by stunted bushes and undergrowth. The force of the terrific concussion made an excavation in the road and the surrounding swamp fully 150 feet wide and at places not less than ten feet deep. Not a fragment of the waggon excepting the tongue is to be seen, but the horses, which were hurled fifty feet from the spot are lying one on each side of the road in the swamps, torn and mangled beyond description, The shoes were actually torn from their hoofs by the violence of the explosion, the harness was stripped in shreds and scattered far and wide, and the horses were actually turned quite round by the force of the explosion. The tongue of the wagon was lying in the road where it had been thrown, fully 100 yards from the spot where the explosion took place. The only signs of the two unfortunate men at first discernible were infintesimal fragments of their clothing blackened and burned and strewn in all directions. A short search in the bushes around, however, soon brought to sight ghastly proofs of the terrible fate of the men, although in fragments so small that some difficulty was experienced in finding them. In one place, more than a hundred yards from the spot, the remnant of a hand torn from the arm, was picked up, still further away a mangled fragment of flesh was lying, which seemed to have been torn from one of the men's breasts; and on the left hand side of the road, some sixty or seventy feet into the swamp, and fully sixty yards from the scene of the explosion, the scalp of one of the victims, covered with black hair, was found, taken clean from the head. Other of the horrible end of the poor feflows were found in the shape of charred and blackened pieces of their clothing, boots, and bodies, but scattered so far and apart, and so small in size that they gave no clue whatever as to who the men were, even had any one been there to identify them, which of course there was not. Words fail to convey any conception of the tremendous force that it must have taken to cause such results. The force of the explosion spread these dreadful marks of its course in a radius of fully 150 yards from the centre, and as only a small quantity of them have at present been unearthed, it is altogether likely that it will be found that they were blown to even twice that distance.

TERRIBLE EVIDENCES

THE VICTIMS.

The men who were driving the wagon are said to have been named Morton and Simmons, and to have lived in Tweed, from whence they were conveying the dynamite to Burleigh Falls. One of the men accompanied a similar load through a year ago. They stopped last night at Mrs. Smith's Neebing Hotel, and Mrs. Smith, who keeps the house, says that one of them told her he was a married man and had at home five girls and one boy, and that he was related by marriage to James Rae of Tweed. They got their breakfast about eight o'clock this morning, each of them having taken three drinks before doing so, but Mrs. Smith says they were not at all the worse for drink. When about starting off they remarked to Mrs. Smith that they would be back and stop over with her to-night, when the other replied, either with a presentiment as of the impending calamity, or in careless banter, "You had'nt better be too sure of that,

WE MAY BE BLOWN TO "KINGDOM COME,"

for all you know." The hostler at Mrs. Smith's hotel heard the men in conversation between themselves, speaking of some trouble they had had with one of the boxes which they said was not full, and from the way they spoke, inferred that they believed there was danger in the condition of it. The waggon contained twenty cases of the explosive, each of which is believed to have contained one hundred pounds. The hostler thought, after they had left the hotel, they were driving rather fast considering the nature of the load, and Mrs. Mahoney, who lives about two miles from the scene of the accident, remarked the same thing as they passed her house. The latter lady thought from the appearance of the load that the men were egg peddlars.

VISITORS AT THE SCENE.

Large crowds from Lakefield and the more immediate vicinity soon gathered around the scene of the explosion, and are searching the surrounding swamp for portions of the victims, and every few minutes reveals some fresh and more sickening token of the terrible fate which befel them.

At the time our reporter left the scene of the accident no official steps had been taken towards collecting and burying the ghastly remains, but what can be recovered will no doubt be brought together and accorded Christian burial.

SOUNDED LIKE AN EARTHQUAKE.

The sound of the explosion was plainly heard for a circle of five miles from the scene of the disaster and was described by those who heard it as if an earthquake had taken place. In the immediate vicinity windows were shattered and the gable end of an adjacent barn blown in by the concussion, while the thresher at Mr. Moher's farm was lifted from the ground by its tremendous force.

The Latest Particulars.

Mr. George Esterbrook, Manager of the Tweed Powder Mills, from whence the load of dynamite exploded yesterday was consigned, arrived in town last evening, and at once drove out to the scene of the disaster. Before leaving he stated to a representative of the EXAMINER, that the load of dynamite contained one ton, and that Simmons was the teamster, while Morton was sent in charge of it. It was the duty of the latter to have seen that any of the packages that became loosened in transit were repacked. Mr. Esterbrook says that if any were loose, as the men represented at Smith's hotel they were, it was liable to cause the explosion. On their arrival at Nolan's hill, Douro, one of the men got out and with a log blocked the waggon two or three times on the down grade and on arrival at the bottom was heard to make the remark that the hill was not as bad as he expected; he resumed his seat with his companion and a few moments later, in answer to an enquiry as to his load, he said "20 cases of dynamite." Mr. Esterbrook is much cut up about the unfortunate affair; for the loss of the load, which was valued at $800, and the team, he seems to care little, but as both men were married and fathers of families, he naturally takes their terribly sudden cutting of much to heart. The explosion was heard at Tweed, which is fifty-five miles distant.

Large numbers of visitors from all parts, wended their way to the scene of the disaster last evening, and many morbid minded seekers after sensation, returned bearing with them some ghastly souvenir of the terrible accident, in the shape of shreds of flesh or fragments of bone.

DYNAMITE DANGER.

The calamitous dynamite explosion that took place in Douro last Friday, though of a most lamentable nature, occurred under circumstances that reduced its destructive effects to a minimum; if the explosive had occurred in passing through Lakefield, one shudders to contemplate what the destruction of property and life would have been. Or a load of dynamite passing through George street and exploding, would spread death and destruction over acres of thickly built and thickly populated ground. Yet this is a danger to which the town has been exposed more than once during the past year. At different times the explosive has passed through the town in its latent form, and the slightest mishap would have flashed its destructive energy into action with the most frightful consequences. The duty of our town council is plain. A stringent by-law absolutely prohibiting the storage in, or conveyance of dynamite through the town, should be passed and rigidly enforced. If the construction of the Trent Valley Canal should continue to be prosecuted, immense quantities of dynamite will be required, and it is probable that a large proportion will, in the natural course of commerce, pass through the town. This should be absolutely prohibited, and prevented. Of course it is necessary that the explosive should be removed from the factory to the scene where it is required to be used, but it must not pass through Peterborough and should not be allowed to pass through any but the most thinly settled districts and over the most unfrequented ways. It will, of course, put shippers to extra trouble and expense. If they are not allowed to pass through the town with their deadly consignment they must go round the town. Better a longer journey with the danger to life confined to the parties driving the load and the danger to property confined to a few feet of country road, than risk the destruction of hundreds of lives and of vast quantities of property, by carrying so dangerous and destructive an explosive as dynamite through the crowded thoroughfares of a town. The council should take action at once. The highway route, having by the late accident shown itself to be dangerous, the next shipment of the explosive to replace that destroyed by the recent accident, may be sent by rail and through Peterborough. There is no time to be lost.

The Government loan of $5,000,000 to the Canadian Pacific Railway, made at the last session of Parliament, was paid on Tuesday. The money was deposited in the Bank of Montreal, and the $8,000,000 bonds security taken up.

Dr. Tupper is pronounced a man of great ability and one who has left his impress upon the affairs of his department. Exactly. A good Tory supported by the Government, Senator Innes asserts that the Department of Railways and Canals is a "seething sink of corruption." Two and two make four.

Personal.

Mr. A. St. A. Smith, of the Bank of Toronto, left town on Saturday evening for his holidays.

Mr. J. W. Carruthers, of Rochester, formerly of Peterborough, chief of the freight department of the N. Y. C. and H. R. R., is in town.

Messrs. J. Niblock and Thomas Niblock, formerly of Peterborough, now ranchers in Colorado, with headquarters at Denver, are in town.

Mrs. S. E. Peck addressed meetings of the electors in favour of the Scott Act as follows:—Bridgenorth, on Saturday evening; Zion, Otonabee, yesterday afternoon, and at Keene in the evening. The meetings were largely attended.

ATHLETICS.

Cricket.

BANKERS VS. CRICKET CLUB.

On Saturday the representatives of the town banks played a team chosen from the remainder of the cricket club. The weather was slightly cool to be pleasant and the ground rather bumpy. The scoring of both teams was excellent. In their first innings the cricket club collected 150 runs, Norley, Stratton, Rutherford, McDonald, Craven and Carter adding to their records 61, 19, 18, 10, 12 and 13 respectively. For the banks, Cooper, Lawford, Geale and Hamilton deposited to the credit 30, 13, 11 and 11 runs respectively. The total score of the banks was 94 runs. The following is the score in detail:—

CRICKET CLUB.

Lacrosse.

PETERBOROUGHS V. RIVERSIDES.

These clubs will play a match to-morrow afternoon in Riverside Park at 4 o'clock. The Riversides are confident of being able to give their older opponents a good, tough tussle, and an interesting game may be expected.

MONTREALERS VS. TORONTOS.

The Montrealers defeated the Torontos on the Rosedale grounds in three straight games on Saturday afternoon. Their playing is said to have been magnificent. The Toronto's did not show good form, and their defeat is attributed to want of practice, although the Toronto papers, previous to the match, represented them as being in A 1 condition. This defeat means practically that the boys in gray will carry off the pennant, for they cannot now be beaten in the champion series.

Baseball.

THE EXAMINER—REVIEW GAME.

The baseball match between the printers of the EXAMINER and Review offices took place on Saturday afternoon, and after a well contested game terminated in favour of the former, by the small majority, considering the length of the respective scores, of one run. In the earlier part of the game, up to the third innings, the game seemed likely to prove a walk over for the EXAMINER men, who piled up 14 and 9 against the Review's brace of two's. In the third, however, the latter made 15 to the EXAMINER'S 9, and from that time on continued in the majority but were unable to make up for their loss in the first two innings. The playing, though not up to the league standard, was better than that of most trade teams, and the comps. could get together a team that would give any other amateur nines in town all their work to defeat them.

Scott Act Campaign.

The following lectures have been arranged for the Rev. B. B. Keefer, of Hamilton:—

Tuesday, 8th Sept., Douro Town Hall.

Wednesday, 9th Sept., Allandale Methodist Church.

Thursday, 10th Sept., Monaghan Town Hall.

Friday, 11th Sept., I. O. G. T. Hall, W. Line, Smith.

Saturday 12th Sept., Nassau Mills.

Sunday, 13th Sept., Lakefield.

The Camping Campaign.

On Monday morning a camping party composed of Messrs. Harry Long, Walter Hooper, T. T. Emmerson, T. E. Pratt, A. Tebb and F. Brownscombe. Several of the members of the party were attired in a striking new uniform, consisting of navy blue shirts, with gayly embroidered fronts, navy blue trunks, held up by bright new belts, navy blue stockings and white felt hats. The arm equipment is double barrel shot guns. The party drove to Mud Lake, on which they will embark in canoes and proceed to Burleigh and elsewhere. They will camp at the head of Stony Lake, and, perhaps, proceed to some lake with a name as long and tortuous as their wanderings. The expedition will be out about a fortnight.

A Dangerous Spot.

Moher's Hill, Douro, just south of the scene of the dynamite explosion, is a dangerous spot. On Sunday Mr. Jas. McKibbon, Smith, accompanied by his son, was going down the hill, followed by a buggy containing Messrs. Moore & Sawers, town. Mr. McKibbon's horse became unruly and in the melee Mr. Moore's buggy was upset, throwing out the occupants, and the horse becoming loosened ran to the foot of the hill, where it was caught. Mr. McKibbon and his companion were also thrown out, but the horse was caught by Mr. Gregor McGregor, of Ashburnham, who was in front. The chief damage done was severe and painful bruises sustained by Mr. Sawers.

Dynamite Swamp, Douro.

The Scene like a Pilgrimage Shrine—Ten Thousand Visitors, Relic Hunters and Ghouls.

The dynamite explosion on the Douro road last Friday is without doubt one of the most gigantic that ever occurred. Since dynamite came into use as an explosive no such large quantity has ever been destroyed at once, and that the destruction to life and property was not greater is entirely due to the locality being so far from any buildings or their occupants. It is certainly the biggest thing of the kind we ever had in this part of Canada. In consequence in Douro has, since the accident, been the scene of a public pilgrimage from all parts of the surrounding country. Since last Friday the scene of the explosion has been visited by between ten and fifteen thousand persons.

DYNAMITE SWAMP,

Yesterday, however, was the day for the pilgrimage, and thousands from Peterborough sought the scene. As early as eight o'clock on Sunday morning it was utterly impossible to procure a horse and vehicle from any livery stable in the town, for love or money—especially for love. From nine o'clock in the morning the river road leading to Lakefield was a sinuous stretch of moving vehicles, like a long procession. Every vehicle was well-laden, some light buggies carrying as many as six persons—three crowded into the seat, one crushed down in front, and two standing on the axle behind. Nearer the scene of the blow-off the plot, or rather, procession, thickened. The retiring teams met the going, and the passing on the narrow road was a feat full of fuss and perplexity. On reaching the crest of Moher's hill, just south of the scene of the explosion, a wide view of country was commanded, and the roads in different directions were from the primitive two wheeled buck-board to the loaded farmers' waggon, in one of which fifteen persons were actually counted. For half a mile from dynamite swamp the fences on both sides were literally lined with teams tied to the fences, while the pit itself at a distance resembled a swarm of bees massed together. And a well-mixed crowd they were—farmers and farmers' wives farmers' sons and farmers' daughters, lawyers, doctors, merchants, hotelkeepers, hiredmen, in fact every class of the community was represented. They were generally massed around the excavation in a circle about twenty yards in diameter. Inside this circle was the crater of the volcano and other parties ventured on the shaking bog in search of relics. Mr. T. Cavanagh, armed with a pole, was persistently prodding the loose soil in the pit in search of the remains of the waggon, which he strongly argued had been driven downward. All around were busy and at each new discovery of remains the fortunate finder would be surrounded by a gaping throng, who watched with dilated eyes while the ghoul would display and then store away in his pocket a blackened piece of putrescent horse or other flesh, a bit of cloth from a coat or a piece of leather. One man was quite a lion for a time. At a distance of 200 yards from the pit he had found a piece of wagon tire about four inches long and one half of a heavy nut that held on a wheel. "You'd better give me one of those pieces." "No, no, Mr. Cavanagh, I would'nt take $20 for it." It was unaccountable to persons with nerves, how some relic hunters could carry on their ghastly work. One fiend seemed what was apparently a fragment of human skull and he took infinite delight in giving an anatomical demonstration, lacerating the flesh with a dull, tobacco-stained knife, and elaborating, with unctuous ignorance, on the points of difference in "them stripe" between horse and human flesh. It is hardly creditable to human nature to have to note, that the majority of those present were morbid-minded relic hunters, while those who moralized over the disaster and vainly attempted to realize the enormity of a calamity by which two fellow mortals, in the full flush of life and health, were, in a moment, swept out of existence, blown to atoms and scattered like chaff, were in the in the minority. The thought that the widowed wives and of the two men were wild with grief and had not even the sad satisfaction of giving their beloved Christian burial, should have had some effect in eliciting a show of decency and human feeling.

ALIVE WITH VEHICLES

RELIC HUNTERS

THIRTEEN ORPHANED CHILDREN

It is estimated that during Friday evening, Saturday and Sunday, there were, at least,

TEN THOUSAND VISITORS.

There were on Sunday hardly less than a thousand on the spot at one time, and they kept going and coming as fast as the roads would admit of their passing, from 9 o'clock in the morning till six at night. Dynamite swamp and its dreadful secret, and its legends will be a household theme of conversation in Douro for two or three generations.

Friendly Invaders.

There was crowded out of Saturday's issue an item stating that on Friday evening five live and lively young Yanks, Messrs. E. M. Gilmour, H. M. Stewart, Geo. F. Hutchinson, J. W. Force and Frank P. Wisner, all members of the Rochester Canoe Club, arrived in town, en route to Burleigh and the lakes in the vicinity, for a fortnight's fishing and shooting and camping. They had an excellent camping equipage and outfit. They are under the wing of that veteran sportsman, Mr. T. Fitzgerald, and that is a good guarantee of their having what our American cousins call a "right smart good time."

Exemption Echoes.

The Way the Dickson Property is Assessed—Interesting Facts and Figures.

Notwithstanding the fulness of the report in Saturday's EXAMINER of the public meeting to consider the exemption question, it was impossible to give the debate in its entirety. Mr. Loch, Councillor McClelland and Mr. Denne endeavored to create the impression that the valuation at which it had been proposed to hold the portion of the Dickson property under discussion, was really too low, Mr. Loch making the extravagant statement that it should be twice that figure.

Mr. T. G. Hazlitt, manager of the estate, showed the incorrectness of these statements in the course of his remarks, by the following comparison between Clegg's mill, part of the Dickson property, and Mr. Denne's mill. The former, he said, was erected and put in operation at a cost of $5,000 and had a capacity of only 40 barrels per diem, yet it had been assessed for a number of years at $6,000. Mr. Denne's mill, on the other hand, cost $14,000 to build, and having been in operation a number of years, would have increased in value at least as much as Clegg's; its capacity per diem was 150 barrels, and yet we found that it was assessed at only $8,000, that is to say, Clegg's mill was assessed at $1,000 while Mr. Denne's was assessed at $6,000 less than it cost, and yet Mr. Denne complained of his assessment.

Mr. Denne endeavored to account for this by saying that the assessment of his property was inclusive of 400 feet frontage.

It was at once pointed out that this only aggravated the case.

Mr. Hazlitt further pointed out in regard to the property owned by the estate on Hunter street, that their two half acres, on one of which stood the Oriental hotel, were assessed at $26,400, the whole remainder of the property on both sides of that street from George street to Bethune street, and including Mr. Dolan's stores was only assessed at $115,200, the assessment of the Dickson property being one-fourth of the whole. He would ask if that was fair assessment? they were being assessed at ten times times the rate of any other property and yet people would say they were assessed too low. There was also a piece of property below the raceway on which the skating rink was placed. This was assessed at $2,000 while the skating rink was there. The removal of the skating rink took away the value of the property and yet the assessment remained and they were to-day paying taxes on $2000 for that property that now had no value.

THE EXEMPTION MATTER.

To the Editor of the DAILY EXAMINER:

DEAR SIR,—The statement was made by Mr. Cox last night in the Council Chamber regarding the undervaluation of my property on Hunter street, whereby he wanted to prove that the Dickson Estate Co. is in comparison over-valuated. I will not accuse Mr. Cox of stating the figures falsely when he said that my residence is assessed for $8,500, but must say that the tenement house is assessed for $1,500 also, or a total of $10,000. Now, let us see how much I am under-valued. Mr. Cox, no doubt, with a motive in making property in Peterborough valuable, and a praiseworthy motive it is, I admit, does not bear out by facts in my case that such a valuation of $15,000, as he puts it, can be obtained. I offered the whole, including the tenement house, to the Catholic congregation some time ago at the price of $13,000; the first offer I got was $10,000, which afterwards was raised to $12,000. Why, then, if the property is worth, as Mr. Cox stated, $15,000, the public should know full well that Mr. Cox would not have let an opportunity for a "spec" pass unnoticed. Regarding my premises on George street, I am assessed for the store $5,300. Since then I have extended it, and as my industry is, after 25 years, the only one of the kind here, should I not also have a right to be exempted for such improvements. My principle, not to exempt any property, I hold to be the only just one to the hard struggling ones for an existence.

Thanking you, Mr. Editor, I remain

The Horticultural Show.

The fall exhibition of the County of Peterborough Horticultural Society opens to-morrow at the Water Street Roller Rink. The number of entries are large, and there will be a fine display in all departments. Lovers of Flora should not miss seeing this exhibition.

For Toronto Exhibition.

The William Hamilton Manufacturing Co shipped to Toronto this morning for exhibition at the great Industrial Fair, the following machinery:—A Perkins' shingle machine complete, one Covell automatic saw sharpener, one improved patent Coveil saw swage. Peterborough will be well represented at the Exhibition.

Local Musical Talent.

At the evening service of St. Paul's Presbyterian Church, yesterday, a solo by Prof. Parker, "Jesus Lover of My Soul" was sung by Mrs. R. H. Dennistoun. The music which reflects great credit to the composer, was rendered by that lady with much pathos and sweetness and the effect was pleasing in the extreme.

Cricket Casualities.

It has generally been thought that lacrosse and football were about the only games in which the players were liable to sustain bruises and contrusions, but the cricket match between town and banks on Saturday was as fruitful of injuries as the most savagely contested lacrosse game could be. Cooper, of the Bank of Commerce, went to business this morning with a handkerchief bound over one of his optics, which had come in collision with a ball. Orde, of the Commerce, wears a little house on one of his fingers, and expects to lose a nail. Forte, another gentleman of the banking persuasion, has sustained contusions, and to crown the lis of catastrophes, Mr. McGill, Manager of the Ontario Bank, had the misfortune to get his thumb broken. A pretty good list of casualties for one day.

THE TARGET.

Hastings v Norwood.—The return match between the above teams was fired over the Norwood range on Thursday afternoon, and the visitors were defeated by 16 points. Dr. O'Gorman captained the Hastings team, while the Norwood boys were under the direction of Lieut. Brennan. This is the second defeat Hastings has sustained from the Norwood team within a week, as the latter won the match shot a week ago over the Hastings range. The distances were 200, 400 and 500 yds. Five shots at each range. Positions military. Appended is the score by ranges, with totals:—

In Self-Defense.

A Cincinnati man was arrested for stealing chickens and was tried by a jury of his peers.

"Gentlemen of the jury," said the judge, on their return from the jury room, "are you agreed upon a verdict?"

"We are," replied the foreman, solemnly.

"What say you? Do you find the prisoner at the bar guilty or not guilty?"

"Guilty of murder in the first degree."

"Guilty of murder in the first degree?" exclaimed the judge in utmost astonishment. "Why, the prisoner is only charged with stealing chickens. What earthly reason have you for bringing in such an outrageous verdict as that?"

"Your honor," replied the foreman of the jury, looking timidly over the crowded court-room, "we plead self-defense."—Philadelphia Call.

Judge Davis Davis.

Judge David Davis used to take delight, when he was a senator, in relating his adventures during the fourteen years that he was judge of the eight judicial circuit of Illinois from 1848 to the fall of 1862. During this time no term of court was lost by the judge's absence, for neither bad roads nor swollen rivers detained him. The life had its physical hardships, but they were softened by scenes at the wayside inns. Out on the Wabash the judge met Dan Voorhees, Joe P. McDonald, Richard W. Thompson, John P. Usher, and other master spirits of the western bar. The lawyers often slept two and even three in a bed after an evening of social enjoyment. Lincoln was usually the star at these circles. His inexhaustible good humor, quaint sayings and pithy reminiscences kept the party in a roar of laughter. The judge was a great reader. His saddlebags were filled with historical and biographical works. The Waverly novels and "David Copperfield" were read with delight. Lincoln seemed to take no pleasure in reading. He glanced at the Waverly novels, and remarked that he would read them when he became older. He studied human nature and was a man of practical observation. He also developed a mathematical turn of mind. "I remember," said Judge Davis, "that while nearly all the lawyers on the circuit were in ecstasies over Macaulay's history, then just published, Lincoln was absorbed in the study of Euclid. Night after night he spent over the problems, and finally demonstrated all of them without the least assistance.—Ben: Perley Poore.

The Legend of Khaled Ibrahim.

Where waved tall palms beside a holy shrine
In Arabby the blest, and one by one
The golden hours ran out in dazzling sands,
Or dreamed away the star-tranced Eastern nights,
There dwelt alone a blameless man of God,
Remote from fell temptation's thousand lures,
From all the countless sorrows of the world,
That stain and bruise the saddened human heart,
His life flowed on, as holy as his faith,
And that was pure, most simple and sincere.
Each day was blessed, and seemed to whisper low,
As forth it floated on the tide of years;
"I am an unseen hand that beckons thee
To where eternal peace sits high enthroned,
Under the stars of thy immortal home;
And there thy soul for evermore shall dwell
With kindred souls who fled from this dark world,
To drink the draught of immortality,
God-given at the founts of Paradise."
And as the years spun out in silver threads
Their benediction on his wrinkled brow,
The turbaned horsemen of the desert tribes
Had scattered far and near, like autumn leaves,
The stories of his rare benevolence
And saintly life; until there came a time,
When way-worn pilgrims, travel-stained and wan,
With staff and scrip came o'er the desert sands,
To view the sacred shrine where lowly dwelt
The Lord's anointed, and a blessing beg;
And mail-clad Knights all humbly bowed the knee,
And sued the favor of the holy man.
Kings journeyed down across the burning sands,
[illegible] palms,
To crave a hearing with the rev'rend man,
And ask the secret of the world's unrest.
Fame, honor, wealth to him at length had come,
And laid their gathered treasures at his feet,
Until men said: "Lo, here is one in truth
To whom life gives that wondrous crown, content.
Wreathed with the fadeless flowers of happiness
That line the pathway of a goodly life."
But when the angel of the Lord came down
The hidden stairway leading from the skies,
To guide his steps toward the vales of rest.
Horizoned with the glow of Endless years,
Then like an arrow in its flight, regret,
Pierced through and through the iron mail of Time,
Sharp as remorse, and, covering his face,
He beat his breast and cried aloud: "O, God,
That I could live my wasted life again."

Getting "Acclimated" in Texas.

A man who moves to Texas from the old States has to be very cautious until he has had time to look around. If he has a little money he had better keep it low down in his pocket for a few months or he will get acclimated. By acclimation they mean losing what you brought with you and getting so reduced that you can't get away if you wanted to. An old acquaintance asked me yesterday if I had got acclimated, and I told him yes and that I had written home for enough money to take me back to Georgia. "Happy man," said he, "if you have any left at home, for but few who come here leave any behind, and by the time we acclimate them they are properly humble and go to work and in a year or so are reconciled to stay."—Bill Arp, Atlanta Constitution.

An East Indian's Bed.

The bed of a dweller in East India is spread upon the floor, and for a pillow is used a sort of basket, which is utilized at the same time for containing the valuables of the house. The covering for the sleeper is made of cotton woven by hand. There are no chairs, and the occupants sit on the floor with crossed legs, or in a reclining posture, with one leg over the other. There are no musical instruments, no notes, no set music. The East Indians lie down without undressing, and on rising roll up their bed and stow it away. Their principal food is rice, which those who are at the table eat with the same spoon. There are no puddings, no desserts, and whoever is the last to rise from the table is compelled to wash the dishes. Woman has scarcely any place in society, literature, or art. Man is the master, and rules. The language is simple, consists of twenty-five letters for an alphabet, and can be learned in a year and a half by one associating with the people.—Philadelphia Press.

The Alarm Clock.

It was the witching hour of 4:30 a.m. A witching hour of sleep. The thrifty Alarm Clock on the mantle lifted up its cheery voice and bade the Sluggard arouse from his lazy couch. She Sluggard, who was making about fifteen knots of solid sleep with both bow ports wide open, merely shut off his busy snore long enough to say:

"Cheese that untimely racket!"

And straightway went to sleep again. But the thrifty Alarm Clock never once shrunk from its duty. It cried aloud:

"How long wilt thou sleep, oh, Sluggard! When wilt thou arise out of thy sleep?"

"Read the tenth verse of the same chapter, Proverbs, six," growled the Sluggard, diving his head yet deeper among the pillows.

"The way of the slothful man is a hedge of thorns," shouted the Alarm Clock.

"I'll make your way like the track of a cyclone if you continue this matin much longer," snarled the weary Sluggard.

"He that is slothful is a brother to him that is a great waster," rattled the Alarm Clock.

"You are a great waster of time when you talk to me in the night," replied the Sluggard. "Call in during office hours."

"As vinegar to the teeth and as smoke to the eyes, so is the Sluggard to those that send him," carolled the Alarm Clock with a perfect hurrah.

"I'll send you up the chimney in another minute, if I do not hear some silence in his room," said the Sluggard, pulling the sheet over his head and getting ready to smother.

"Up!" shouted the Alarm Clock, with prodigious clamor. "Up, and be stirring! Up! Bless you, this won't do! Have an aim in life!"

And then the Sluggard, enduring no longer, stood up on his elbow and aimed a boot at the Alarm Clock with such fatal precision that the air was full of brass wheels, steel springs, striking hammers, fractured bells, broken glass and a bruised and battered dial. One brief moment the Sluggard gazed upon the remnants of what, but a few moments before, had been a good $4 alarm clock, and then settling himself down for a snooze that could only be broken by the 8 o'clock breakfast bell, he said:

"He that blesseth his friend in a loud voice, rising early in the morning, it shall be counted a curse to him. See Proverbs, twenty-seven, fourteen."—Bob Burdette.

OUT OF PITY.

She was just 17: the very youngest little bride that any one remembered ever coming to reign at Arntown Towers; the sweetest, daintiest little Lady Fielding that the country had ever welcomed.

To herself it was like a dream, it had come so fast; it seemed as if all her life had lived itself in those six months, the leaving her English school and going out to her father's plantation in Ceylon, so proud to be his housekeeper and companion; the strange, brief life on the up-country coffee estate. Then the young English stranger who passed through Lindoola, in his rather vague wanderings for adventure's sake, and who was received and entertained at Holme Harcourt with the delightful open-handed hospitality of the colonies.

And then the awful night when the sudden terrible stroke of cholera left her fatherless, and life seemed a great black void; and the chaplain's wife had been good to her, and kept her from dying in despair; and Sir Harry Fielding had been still more good; and then—and then—she was resting her poor little orphaned head on a heart that was kind and true as her own father's, and a strong arm was close around her slender waist, and the voice she liked alone to hear, of all the voices around her, was telling her she should never know another sorrow he could guard her from. He seemed the only real thing in all that dream-time; the sad past, and the present that was so happy, but just as unlike reality. Was it really herself, simple little Nesta Harcourt, that people were fussing over and petting and welcoming home as if she had been a royal Princess?

Perhaps it was as well she could not realize it, or her head might have been turned. Why, had not the whole week Harry and she were spending with his sister, Mrs. Mostyn, to present Nesta to the country-side, been one round of festivities, of which she was the queen? This evening they had all driven to a grand concert in the country town, to hear a famous singer; and Nesta, in her wonderful golden satin gown, rich with embroidery and lace, with her eyes out-shining the diamonds on her white neck, and her cheek flushed with its pretty shy pink, had been an attraction only second to the queen of song herself. She felt a little weary with the excitement and the happiness, now that they had reached home and were having supper in the great hall, for the concert had forced them to dine rather earlier than usual.

The house was crowded with guests, and they were all vehemently declaring that the night was hardly begun yet, and they meant to finish it with a few games. The furniture in the blue drawing-room was being hastily moved, and Nesta's head sank at the thought of further exertion; her head ached and she was worn out. She would slip away quietly to bed, and leave Harry to make her excuses to Eleanor. Where was Harry, by the way? She had not seen him since they sat down to supper, and he and that beautiful Miss Trafford were talking in the doorway. A hasty search through the nearest rooms had no result, and Nesta stopped by an open door to glance in at the half-cleared drawing-room.

Two portly dowagers were deep in conversation, their heads bent together behind their fans; but their voices rose above the music Eleanor was playing, and Nesta could not help hearing what they said.

"Gladys Trafford; yes, indeed!" cried the black velvet gown to the purple brocade. "A very, very old love affair that, my dear. He and she were perfectly inseparable, and a most suitable match it would have been. The two oldest families in the county; his equal in position and fortune. Lord Stourbridge's estates are next his, you know, and Gladys is heiress to a great part."

What made Nesta's heart give such a leap, and her feet feel spell-bound to the spot where she stood? Arnwood Towers was the only place near the Traffords. It was as if her whole being were strained to hear the rest; she never thought of eaves-dropping, poor child; it was life-and-death work with her.

"And why didn't it come about?" asked the purple brocade.

"Heaven knows! A lovers' tiff, I suppose, or some such rubbish. It's a thousand pities! a Lady Fielding has always been at the head of the county society, and Gladys Trafford is just made for the position, with her beauty and cleverness and talents. She has always been immensely popular."

"And who is the girl he has married? She seems a nice little thing enough."

"Oh, a harmless sort of creature; pink-and-white prettiness, nothing more. She was a planter's daughter in Ceylon, or somewhere; and he was staying with them when the father died. She was left quite friendless and destitute, and he married her out of pity. He was always a Quixotic goose, Harry Fielding."

The spell was off now; and Nesta, white as death, was hurrying up the stairs to her room. There was a little sofa in a sheltered nook in the corridor, and there sat Harry—the missing Harry—and the woman he should have married.

Nesta sped past, but as she fled she saw Harry bend his head to kiss the beautiful hand he was holding, and she heard his low murmur—

"If I had only known years ago, things might have been so different!"

On, on, till her own door closed behind her, and she gazed wildly round at the pretty ornaments that strewed her bower, as if she had never seen them before. She flung the diamonds from her throat and wrists as if they hurt her, and sank into a chair beside the quaint old ebony table, leaning her head, with its tangle of crisp brown hair, down on her folded arms. She did not shed a tear, but her brain seemed on fire.

But the next time she woke the hand and voice were missing, and only Harry's back was visible in the room beyond, as she raised herself on her pillows. And as she rose she caught sight of herself in the long Psyche [illegible] opposite, and started at the reflection. For all her tangle of brown hair was cut short, and there was no pink-and-white prettiness now, only great dark eyes and a small white face. And as she fell back on her pillow, half from surprise and half from weakness, for she was very feeble, the bells burst out clear and sweet and mystical, in a perfect carol of exultant joy.

"Christmas bells! is it Christmas?" she said, "Why, it was November when I died!"

And as Harry turned and hurried to her side, she smiled up at him and asked again—

"Christmas? is it really Christmas, Harry?" but he only bent to catch her in his arms.

She yielded to his kisses; then suddenly she tried to push him from her. "Harry, you must not—you must not!" she said

He saw the troubled look in her eyes, and knew that memory was coming back.

"Yes, I must," he said, "my little darling, my blessing, my life! The doctor says I may tell you all about it, for the worry will hurt you more than the talking; and, oh! how I have waited for this moment to come! It has been one long night-mare since the minute I heard you scream, and ran up just in time to see you sink."

"Then it was you who found me? Oh, Harry!"

"Yes, you must hear it all. I came to your room five minutes after you must have left it, and there was the time-table open and your little note, bless it! and so I just set off for the station as hard as I could go. I had almost reached the park gate when that cry came—off to the right—and I turned just in time."

His voice broke and he bent his head down to hers.

Beside her stood the tall vase of rushes that Harry and she had gathered from the lake only yesterday. Wasn't it a hundred years ago?

"Never another sorrow he could guard her from?" Well, it was true; he couldn't help this; it wasn't his fault; he had meant to do right; he had married her "out of pity" when he loved another woman. It must be her own fault, not his; yet, because she was pink-and-white, and nothing more; and she ought to have known pity wasn't love, only it had seemed so like it!

"If he had known years ago, things might have been so different!" Might they not still? What if she were to go away that very night, and never trouble him again? She had not a friend in the world except her old Brighton school-mistress; she would go to her and beg her to take her in, and let her teach the little children. And, perhaps, she might die soon, and Harry could be happy with the woman he had always loved. Nesta felt as if death wouldn't be long in coming, she felt so ill now.

She got up to fetch a time-table. Yes, the mail-train passed through Middlehampton at 1 o'clock; it was only 12 now, and, though she couldn't very well understand the puzzling figures, she thought it must stop at the little station just the other side of the park.

She drew her blotting-book to her, and began to write fast. A big tear or two splashed down on the paper, but she wiped them patiently away; it must be clear, that Harry might read it.

"They say you only married me for pity," she wrote. "I might have guessed it, my darling, but you were so good to me that I never, never did. I can't make you free again; but it is better for us never to see each other any more, and perhaps I may die, and you can go back to the woman they say you have always loved. I saw you just now, when you kissed her hand, and said things might have been so different if you had only known years ago. Yes, they would have been different for us all. God bless you, my poor, good boy! you were not to blame."

She paused and looked up.

"What shall I sign it?" she said; "I am not his wife any more, for only love really makes a marriage."

Her eye fell on her little wedding-ring, its brightness scarcely tarnished yet. She stooped and pressed her lips to it gently, solemnly.

"Oh, Harry, my Harry," she whispered, "if it had only been love, not pity!"

She rose and slipped off the golden satin gown and put on a dark, warm dress instead.

"I must not even go away from him in the things he gave me," she said, as she fastened her long fur cloak with its silver clasps. "I haven't a single gown that was mine before I knew him. He has even dressed me out of charity. His pity has been more generous than other people's love."

She opened the French window in her dressing-room and stepped out on the balcony, whence a flight of steps led down to the terrace below. She glanced back at the pretty room, with its Japanese cabinets, and blue-and-white china, and the ebony table where the letter to Harry lay, with the light full upon it, so that he could not miss it. Then she shut the casement sharply behind her, and resolutely turned away.

The moon was bright with a fitful brightness—now almost as light as day, now hidden behind hurrying clouds—and it was bitterly cold. Nesta drew her cloak tighter around her, and tried to walk fast, but she was deperately weary, and could only stumble along. Somehow the way to the little gate had never seemed so incomprehensibly long. Surely she could not have missed her way? The moon and the clouds were playing such pranks that one could not be sure, and her heart had been too full to notice all the turns. It was as black as Erebus now; a darkness that might be felt. Nesta took a few steps forward, then stopped short, by some mysterious instinct, just as the moon shone out clear and bright once more, its golden sparkle reflected as by a thousand broken mirrors in the water of the lake which slumbered at her feet. A strange, sharp pain shot through her heart, as she saw the very rushes Harry and she had been gathering yesterday. Yesterday? A thousand years ago; when she was happy.

A wild thought flashed across her brain; she had wished to die; would it [illegible] for Harry and for Marion, yes, and for that other woman, if she were lying under those cold smiling waters in a dreamless sleep? It was only a moment, her soul was too white and too brave for more; she recoiled with a start of horror; but, ah! the bank was worn and smooth; her little feet slipped on the edge, she threw out her hands to stop herself, but the frozen grass slid through her fingers; there was one short sharp cry, and a pale sweet face lay still among the rushes in the silent moonlight.

* * * * *

It was dark and warm and deliciously restful when she knew anything again. She heard Harry's low voice before ever she opened her eyes; and felt his clasp of her hand—Harry's hand-clasp, there was no other like it anywhere—and thought it must be heaven, and was glad she had done with earth, since this was so much better. And so she slept again.

And when next she woke she knew that the clouds that she seemed to lie on, clouds soft and billowy, were her own bed, nothing more ethereal; and she was aware it must be earth still, but felt it did not matter since it could be so like heaven, for Harry's voice and Harry's hand were still there; and she slept again, smiling gently.

"Nesta, it was all a lie—a vile, infamous lie, whoever told it. Gladys Trafford and I were always dear old boy-and-girl friends, nothing more. I knew my cousin Wilfred loved her, and I always thought she had something to do with his going to Australia, years ago. It was only that night she confessed to me that they had been engaged all these years, and Wilfred was trying to make a fortune for her sake. I told her I would soon put all that right; and then I scolded her for never having told me before, when I could have saved them both all these weary years of waiting. Nesta!"—for her face was hidden, and she was sobbing softly—"you will not doubt me again?"

"Never, never, never! not if you told me yourself! But, Harry," in a whisper which scarcely reached his ear, "did you really marry me out of pity?"

"Yes, my sweetheart—the very sincerest pity for myself!"

And Nesta never asked any more questions.

Interesting to Cattle Men.

Mr. William Denoon on Saturday shipped two car loads of cattle raised in this section, one to Buffalo and one to Montreal. As an illustration of the advantage farmers may derive by breeding a better class of cattle, the following should be interesting: Mr. Denoon last week purchased from Mr. Josh. Whitfield, of Cavan, a 1,400 pound steer, two years old, paying for it the handsome sum of $70. As may be judged, it was a well-bred animal. In the same field were a number of other ordinary grade cattle, a year older than the one purchased, and which had been raised and fed under similar circumstances, yet Mr. Denoon says he would not have taken them at $16 a head. It pays to breed good cattle.

Spectacles.

Mr. B. Laurance, the eminent English optician, is now in Peterborough for a few days for the purpose of appointing agents for his firm, as he has done in every principal place on his way from Halifax, choosing business men of the highest standing, generally chemists, who will keep in stock every variety of spectacles, eye glasses, and the different appliances that the eyes demand. In fact the agent keeping his lenses will have a positive miniature optician's stock, equal in variety to that found in leading establishments in Great Britain. This firm have in every town in the three kingdom's agents for their lenses, and the same system is being carried out in Canada. These spectacles are recommended by the Presidents, Vice-Presidents, Ex-Presidents and Ex-Vice-Presidents of the Medical Association of Canada; the President of the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Quebec; the Dean of the Medical Faculty of Laval University; the President and ex-President of the Medical Council of Nova Scotia, &c., &c. Mr. Laurance has also received testimonials from some of the professional gentlemen of our town two of which, from Dr. Kincaid and Dr. McCrea we publish herewith. Mr. John McKee, Druggist, will be the representative of the firm in Peterborough, and his standing alone would be a sufficient guarantee. During his short stay here B. Laurance will give him the benefit of his experience and may be consulted there gratuitously, the unerring accuracy of which Dr. McCrea speaks so forcibly enables him to select at once the lense best adapted to the eyes he is suiting. This is an opportunity which should not be lost by those who require aid for their sight, and who would regret hereafter if they allowed Mr. Laurance to leave without availing themselves of his services. The following are the two testimonials to which we referred above:

PETERBOROUGH, DEC. 12, 1883.

I take very great pleasure in stating that I consider B. Laurance, Esq., one of the most skilful and practical oculists with whom I have ever met. His knowledge of the eye is such that he cannot fail to give complete satisfaction to those who patronise him.

R. KINCAID, M. D., &c.

PETERBOROUGH, DEC. 12, 1883.

B. Laurance, Esq.:

SIR,—I find the greatest satisfaction from the use of the glasses I procured from you this morning. I have tried them in reading print of various sizes, and can read any paper or book better with them than with any glasses I ever tried before. The unerring manner in which you select the lenses is really marvellous.

Mrs. Susannah Evans Pech.

The Scott Act Campaign—The Opera Hall Filled to Overflowing—The Welsh Lady Lectures on Temperance—And Touches Incidentally on the Scott Act.

On Friday evening last a vast concourse filled Bradburn's Opera Hall to listen to the address announced to be given by Mrs. Susannah Evans Pech, of New York. Upon the platform were several members of the W. C. T. U. and the resident ministers. After devotional exercises, singing of hymns, and prayer by Rev. W. Bennet, the chairman, Rev. F. H. Wallace delivered a brief address, defining his position in reference to total abstinence, because it was the duty of the individual and the wisdom of the state. He supported the Scott Act because he was a patriot and the country could never reach its full state of development without sobriety assisted her sons in that development.

While the reverend gentleman was speaking Mrs. Pech was the centre of observation. She is a pleasant looking little lady, with rather delicately cut aquiline features; she has a pair of keen black eyes, abundance of black wavy hair, which, though plainly dressed, still ripples in rebellious little waves over her temples. She wore a black cashmere skirt and brocaded satin basque, trimmed with lace, and a bunch of scarlet pelargonium at her throat. Her mouth is rather small, though her lips are full and inclined to pouting. Her enunciation is slow and distinct and her style of speaking lacks the element of rant, which that of American stump orators are not altogether free from.

Mrs. Pech began her address by expressing the pleasure it afforded her to be present and at so large a meeting which she took as an indication of the immense interest felt in the temperance work in Peterborough. The warfare in which they were engaged was a religious warfare, and the price of success was earnest energetic work, for there was no chance of success by taking it easy. Everybody was saying that the Scott Act would be sure to carry, but that result could not be attained unless the electors carried it.

The speaker then described a visit she made at the beginning of the year to the meeting of the Ontario Branch of the Dominion Alliance, and described how the decorations of the walls where the meetings were held were full of encouragement to temperance workers. Scrolls bore the names of the counties that had adopted the Scott Act, and the majorities. She referred to the routing of King Alcohol from the grocery stores in Toronto, and added that he was being driven by degrees from the fair grounds, the steamboats, and the railway trains, and the crusade was being pushed to banish him from the hotels. (Cheers.) To do this work—to cast out whisky—we must go to work in the way appointed by law. Mrs. Pech said she was not an advocate of women's rights in the general meaning of that expression; but she believed that if women had the ballot, the Scott Act would be adopted in every county by sweeping majorities. (Loud cheers.) The speaker went on to show that the Scott Act, in another form and in other times, had been employed to minimise the curse of drink. Romulus enacted a prohibitory law which provided the death penalty for a woman who drank, and Lycurgus, of Thrace, anticipated Neal Dow and enacted a prohibitory law against drunkenness by wine! and, yet, Goldwin Smith and others had the temerity to advocate the use of beer and wine; but in whatever form it appeared it was a curse—it was a hydra-headed monster. (Cheers.) There was no way of disposing of John Barleycorn, except by effectively burying him, and she wanted the people of this county to bury the old reprobate with his face downward, (cheers) and seal his grave with public sentiment against the drinking usages. Without that no law, however stringent, can succeed.

The Scott Act had been denounced as an interference with personal liberty, but what of the liberty of the people to protect themselves from the drink traffic? Even those engaged in the liquor trade admitted that it was a dangerous one, and needed to be restricted by regulations, yet these regulations were studded with prohibitory clauses, and the license law provided against the selling of drink to minors, but the temperance people wanted a law against selling to seniors also. (Cheers.) They wanted the back door shut as well as the front door in prohibited hours. They wanted the sale prohibited seven days in the week instead of one day. They did not expect to make people sober by act of Parliament, but they intended to prevent sober people being made drunk by act of parliament. The Scott Act was not more arbitray than other measures passed without the people's consent, but the people had the dicision as to the adoption of the Scott Act in their own hands, and it was inquired where there was anything arbitrary about it. If hotel keepers were satisfied to get rich gradually like other tradesmen, they could subsist without bars; if they couldn't do so, let them choose some other calling. Moral suasion had proved too weak for the purpose. It would be better to take the dram shop from the drunkard than waste time in trying to win the drunkard from the dram shop. The Scott Act would not injure any trade but the rumsellers. The speaker give statistics purporting to show how the Scott Act had prospered in Halton, how crime had decreased—one of the most important results of the Scott Act. The revenue derived from the liquor traffic was pronounced blood money, and it cost twenty millions to collect six millions of it. There was the moral as well as financial aspect, and so long as the traffic flourished, so long would crime and misery prevail. The speaker closed by entreating the men to vote and work, and the women to work and pray. When the Scott Act was passed, its friends would not quit work, but would work harder than ever to secure its rigid enforcement. A collection and devotional exercises brought the meeting to a close.

What they are Saying.

The transfer deeds of the Phalen lot to the Government for a Postoffice and Custom House site are about completed.—Those who know.

It was a narrow squeak.—The EXAMINER men.

We'll beat you next time.—The Review men.

We were at the scene of the explosion yesterday.—Every one.

The Dickson estate is the most highly assessed property in town.—Manager Hazlitt.

Except mine.—William Lech.

What We May Expect.

The Council to prohibit the passage of dynamite through Peterborough.

The township of Douro to sue the proprietors of the Tweed Powder Mills for damages to their road.

A lively lacrosse game between the Peterboroughs and Riversides to-morrow.

The EXAMINER comps. to put on airs.

Street corner discussions on the exemption question.

Unbiassed people to come to the conclusion that the Dickson estate is assessed higher in proportion than other town property.

What We Would Like to Know.

How much dynamite is stored away in Peterborough.

When the baseball craze is going to end.

If a by-law exempting the Dickson property that would satisfy all parties could not be framed.

Who was the inventor of the style of letter box in use at our Postoffice.

If all the young ladies who call at the Postoffice in the afternoon really expect to get letters.

How soon Smith street bridge is going to be fit for traffic.

Whether the Government have determined on buying both the sites for the Postoffice.

What Mr. William Lech was saying to the assessor on the street to-day.

Unroofed.

About five o'clock on Saturday evening a fire broke out in the residence of Mr. John Drake of Rubidge street, and before the firemen succeeded in getting it under the greater part of the roof was destroyed and the upper part of the house badly damaged. The furniture was removed without any great damage, but there will be a loss of about $250 on the house which was uninsured.

An alarm was also sounded on account of a burning chimney near the Post Office, but the services of the firemen were not found necessary.

TUESDAY, SEPT. 8, 1885.

Personal.

Mr. Newton, formerly of the Victoria Warder, gave us a call to-day.

Mr. H. Carver left town this morning for San Francisco, where it is his intention to make his home for some time.

Mr. J. Kelly, artist of the "War News" and Grip, who is spending his holidays in this vicinity, yesterday visited the scene of the late dynamite explosion and made a sketch of the surroundings.

The Cobourg Sentinel-Star says: "We are glad to see that our townsman Mr. R.W. Riddell has been appointed to attend to the Crown business at the coming assizes at Lindsay. We congratulate Mr. Riddell on his preferment."

Mr. N. D. Beck, formerly of the law firm of Hatton, Hatton & Beck, of this town, and lately of Prendergast & Beck, of Winnipeg, which lately dissolved partnership, has succeeded to the practice of Messrs. Royal & Prudhomme, barristers and attorneys, of Winnipeg.

Amongst the arrivals at the Oriental Hotel yesterday, was Mr. W. Stevens, an English gentleman, who accompanied by a servant is travelling for pleasure. Mr. Stevens, who is an extensive ship owner and a holder of stock in the G. T. R., has visited almost every part of the world. He left this morning for a few days sport on the lakes.

The Exemption Question.

We received from Mayor Cox to-day, too late for publication, a letter in reply to Mr. William Loch's communication of yesterday in reference to the assessment of his property. It will appear in to-morrow's issue.

Parlour Roller Rink.

The Water-street Parlour Rink will be reopened for patrons on Thursday next, and will be run with the same attention to order and seemliness as has heretofore marked its management. Admission, 10 cents; skaters extra. Open every day—forenoon, afternoon and evening.

The Horticultural Show.

The annual exhibition of the Peterborough Horticultural Society is now in progress at the roller rink on Water street. All morning contributions of beautiful bouquets, choice collections of cut flowers and potted plants, huge pumpkins and mammoth vegetables of every kind have been flowing in; some carried in the arms of fair exhibitors and others brought by carters and draymen, until now the rink contains an exhibition of garden products of a most extensive and beautiful description. The judges have been busily kept at work making the awards, and already the show has been visited by large numbers of ladies and gentlemen, and there is no doubt that during the evening the hall will be crowded. The prize list will be completed this evening and will appear with description of the exhibit in to-morrow's issue.

Toronto Collegiate Institute.

The trustees of the Toronto collegiate institute yesterday appointed W. H. Huston, M. A., to the English mastership, vacated by Mr. S Hughes, to manage the Lindsay Warder. Mr. Huston is a graduate of Toronto University and has had considerable experience in the profession as principal of the recently defunct Pickering college. There was about twenty candidates for the position.

There were 2,132 new cases of cholera, and 619 deaths in Spain on Sunday.

Another Editorial Assault.

The Editor of the Port Hope "Guide" Assaulted Again—Williams Waits on Wilson to Wallop Him—The Latter's Revolver Acts as Peacemaker.

The people of Port Hope seem to be exceedingly ready to avail themselves of the principle of lynch law, and unusually ready to take the law into their own hands. Of the existence of this idiosyncrasy, Mr. Wilson, of the Port Hope Guide, has reason to be personally cognizant since he has been assaulted some half dozen times on account of strictures that have appeared in his journal. Yesterday he was again attacked, but with the result that his assailant came to shear and got shorn. The Guide gives the following particulars of the encounter:—

"This (Monday) morning about half-past seven o'clock, Mr. Wilson, Sr., was sitting in his office when he observed Mr. Charles Williams enter the main door of the Guide office, accompanied by a man whom he afterwards learned was Robt. White, of Peterborough. As they entered Mr. Wilson's private office, Mr. Williams told White to sit down on the sofa, adding, "I want to have a private talk with Mr. Wilson." At almost the same moment he sat down on the corner of the desk and picked up a pair of scissors that were lying in front of him and threw them towards the main office, saying, "I don't want you to use them against me." Mr. Wilson then suspected foul play, and quietly opened a drawer in the desk at his right hand and put his hand on a revolver. Before he had quite done so, Williams rushed forward and grasped Mr. Wilson, and while pushing him towards the corner, Mr. Wilson told him to let go his hold or he would receive the contents of the revolver. Williams then began bollering, (sic) "He's got a revolver and he's going to shoot me." While this was going on Mr. R. K. Scott, who was on the opposite side of the street, saw the fracas through the window, rushed across and took hold of the brave Williams by the neck, yanked him to the front door and helped him to the end of the platform with the toe of his boot. Had Mr. Wilson chosen to use the revolver with which Williams' breast was covered all the time, and for which he had more than ordinary provocation, the result would have been of a startling character.

An article appeared in the Toronto World on Friday referring to the impropriety of Charles Williams canvassing for a book that has yet to be written on the life of the late Col. Williams. On Saturday Williams asked Mr. Wilson to defend him against the alleged attack in the World. Mr. Wilson replied that he thought the World was in the right. Williams then got in a towering passion. In Saturday's issue of the Guide the article was copied as a matter of local interest, and was followed by the fracas Monday morning. We have only to say that no one connected with the Guide has deserved such treatment from any of the Williams' connection. Ever since the late Col. Williams prepared to go to the Northwest, no paper referred to him in kindlier terms, and since the sad news of his death reached Port Hope, no paper in the country took a more prominent part in defending and preserving his memory. During the late election contest the "bloody shirt" was used to advance Mr. Ward's interests, and many Reformers were accused in the private canvass by Mr. Ward's friends of not having proper respect for the memory of the late representative of the riding, and electors were appealed to for these reasons to vote against the Reform candidate. The Guide studiously refrained from referring to such disgraceful tactics. And now, simply because the Guide copied a manly protest against a shocking traffic in the memory of the late Col. Williams, the editor was made the subject of a premeditated and brutal assault by a member of the family. Had the Guide followed the example of the Times in the late contest and made it the occasion of a personal attack on members of the opposite political party, it could have said that this same said Charles Williams in canvassing a portion of Cavan for Mr. Ward, attacked the personal characters of prominent Reformers to every elector whom he met, while at the same time he shared the seat in his buggy day after day with a woman of easy virtue, whom he picked up at Millbrook. As to his attack on Mr. Wilson, we have just been informed that a loud-mouthed local Tory said a few days ago that there was a fund to meet the legal expenses incurred by thrashing the editor of this paper. We have only to say that if any such plot as that in existence, we will take an early opportunity of informing the general public of the character of the men connected with the whole business.

[In justice to Mr. White, he states distinctly that he had not the remotest idea what Williams wanted him to go into our office with him for.]

The Tweed Dynamite Factory.

The Belleville Intelligencer gives the following particulars in regard to the dynamite factory of Messrs. Esterbrook & Co, :—

"The dynamite factory, which is located at Tweed, is situated a short distance from the village, and was originally built by Larkin & Carroll, contractors on the O. & Q. Railway, and was purchased by the present proprietors, Messrs. Geo. Easterbrook, Dr. Tuttle and Wm. Wright, in the fall of 1882, since which time the works have been constantly manufacturing explosives, which have been shipped to all parts of the country, usually by waggon.

The factory is engaged chiefly in manufacturing dynamite, which is made from ordinary glycerine and mixed acids, and the time of the greatest danger is when the component is anticipated in its manufacture or transportation, when ordinary care is displayed. When the component parts affiliate nitro-glycerine is produced, which is mixed with an absorbment, such as wood pulp, making the different grades in proportion to the amount of nitro-glycerine used. The dynamite having been manufactured is placed in paper shells, that ordinarly contain from half a pound to a pound in weight, and are filled by being forced into the shells with a stick, after which the shells are carefully packed in sawdust in boxes containing about 100 pounds each."

Ennismore.

(From a Correspondent.)

I noticed in last week's issue an article on the crops from your own correspondent, in which some incorrect statements are made. Speaking of the spring wheat he says, "A large amount will not be worth threshing." Perhaps a large amount of his own wheat will not be worth threshing, but this is not true of the wheat crop of the township. I agree with him where he says the wheat is of second quality, but he is astray again when he states that spring wheat will not average from six to eight bushels per acre. The average will be 12 or 14 bushels per acre, at least. If the wheat crop here only yielded 6 or 8 bushels per acre it would not be worth threshing in some places in this country.

Mr. John P. Galvin, who returned a short time ago from Nebraska, intends selling out next month and removing to that State. He says the winters are mild there, and as he spent last winter in that place he should be an authority. A great many people have gone from this locality to the North Western States during the past three years.

I see by your Bridgenorth correspondence that the Bridgenorth Baseball Club would like to play a game. Our boys (though they are only organized about three weeks) would be happy to accommodate them at any time before the frost sets in. They can arrange for a match with Mr. L. O'Connor, stage driver, who passes through the village daily, as he is one of our players.

Hastings.

(From our Own Correspondent.)

A public meeting of the Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle was held in the Temperance Hall on Monday evening last. The audience was very small, and was not what might be expected from an intellectual and literary people such as the town of Hastings can boast of. After a short address from the chairman, M. J. D. Berry, the following gentlemen then addressed the meeting:—Rev. D. A. Thomson, Rev. Wm. Limbert and Mr. J. H. Scriver. All were listened to with much interest, as they spoke in the highest terms of the advantages to be gained and information derived from taking up the studies in connection with the C. L. S. C.

The dynamite explosion which occurred at Lakefield on Saturday last caused no little excitement among the people here, as the report was heard, and the shock felt in causing most of the buildings to shake. The scene of the occurrence was visited on Sunday by a number of the gentlemen from this village.

Miss Annie Wilson and Miss Maggie Anderson left by train on Friday morning last to spend a few weeks with friends in Toronto. Also, Mrs. Renwick, to visit friends in Peterborough.

Being of an inquisitive turn of mind, we would like to know why so many young men like to loaf on the steps of the Methodist Church during the morning service, and in the afternoon during the Sunday School hour? We do not think they can either boast of beauty, so that the passers by wish to gaze upon them, or of intellectuality, that they cannot afford to go inside and gain a little more information, to be added to that which they think they have already got.

Spain's Regret.

BERLIN, Sept. 7.—Count Benomarck, the Spanish Minister, has expressed to the Government Spain's regret at the insult offered in the popular demonstration against Germany by the populace of Madrid, and has promised on behalf of his Government that the leaders of the mob shall be punished, and Spain would do her utmost to prevent a repetition of the insult. This statement is regarded as terminating the incident.

An Element of Gravity.

BERLIN, Sept. 7.—The feeling here over the Madrid incident is one of tranquility. No serious result is feared, although it is admitted there is an element of gravity in Spain's insistance on prior sovereignty over the Caroline Islands and in the unstable position of King Alfonso.

NEW YORK, Sept. 7.—A Madrid despatch says the excitement was unabated there last night. Thousands of men and women thronged the streets wildly discussing the topic of the hour. The popular belief is that Alfonso can only avert a disastrous revolution by declaring war against Germany.

More German Agression.

MADRID, Sept. 7.—Despatches just received regarding the German occupation of Yap state the Spaniards on the island had hoisted the Spanish flag and had lowered it at sunset for the night, as is customary with all nationalities, and that immediately afterwards a German gunboat ran in, landed marines and sailors, hoisted German colors and formally occupied the place, despite the protestations of the Spaniards. Prince Bismarck has offered to withdraw the German forces from Yap provided Spain will not occupy it pending a diplomatic solution of the question as to Spain's claim over the island. Germany will acknowledge the Spanish occupation of Yap provided Spain proves the Spanish flag had been hoisted on the island before the German gunboat had arrived in the harbor.

Dying Fires.

The log on which the hearth-fire long has fed
Is nigh consumed, and now the flame burns low,
With one faint blaze of feeble, flickering red,
That ghostly figures on the wall doth throw.
But now the wind comes breathing soft along,
It flames again and lights the gloom above,
Then lower sinks, as quick the wind is gone,
Then flick'ring fades and with a puff goes out.

Love's fire, for long has fed upon the heart,
And nigh consumed it through a feeble flame,
From out the ashes now and then doth start,
Casting weird shadows on the troubled brain,
But mem'ry's wind comes breathing softly by,
It glows again and for a time is bright,
Then the thought passes and lips sadly sigh,
As it dies out and leaves behind but night.
—Edward A. Fuller.

Tethered.

I.

An open lake with room for all the sky;
Northward wide slopes and then the tall blue chain;
To east the depths of pines and, closer by,
Willows that met the ripples, warping oaks,
Cedars, dense elms that hold the wood-dovecry;
And stretching to the sun, a boundless plain.

On the free lake, on the free river,
The swans drift by at rest,
Breast the wind's waves in strong endeavor,
Break the clear calm with smooth low strokes;
To North, to South, to East, to West,
Swans on lake and river.

II.

A careful garden where the ivy spreads,
Lending a rustic touch to shadowing walks;
And, in the centre space, the patterned beds,
Catching the noonday sun, bloom red and gold;
And pollard limes send sweetness o'er our heads;
And there's green lawn, save where their shadow falls.

Lilacs blow first, then carpet posies,
Crisp asters find their turn;
Proof of each season it incloses,
(Even though sparrows are too bold),
The garden with the fountain urn,
With the shapely posies.

III.

Swans on the river, on the lake's blue deep;
In the walled garden with the lines arow
A swan sits in a corner, half asleep,
A swan that wears a chain upon his limb,
Measured the length that he may come and go;
And he can reach the urn and has his keep.

On the free lake, on the free river,
The swans go who knows where;
Guest of the garden, guest forever,
Room in the fountain's bath for him,
The chain's full length to take the air,
Swan enchained forever.

One showed a life's long secret, pitying thus,
"Poor swan! 'tis like a tethered soul of us."
—Good Words.

It is almost incredible that so green a person should exist as a man—evidently from Maine—who entered a cheap eating house in this city a few days ago in quest of dinner. He seated himself at a table and suspiciously reviewed the appearance of every man present, after which, evidently convinced that there were no bunko men or other sharpers about, he tilted his hat on the back of his head and awaited developments. The waiters were hurrying about, slamming down dishes and yelling out orders to the kitchen, and presently one of them came up to the stranger. "Ross', beef, ross pork, boil' dinner, ham an' eggs, an' pork an' beans," said the waiter with the speed of lightning and the expression of a phonograph. The Maine man looked at him and grinned. "Oh, go way," he said; "what do you take me for?" The waiter stared and went away accordingly. Presently another one came and went through the same formula. "Git scout!" roared the guest, "an lemme alone, won't yer!" and this serving man also retired. A third and a fourth tried conclusions with him with equal success, and when the last one went away baffled the Maine man was seen to be mad clean through. He arose and marched up to the counter and said to the proprietor at the desk: "Looker here! I come in here to get some dinner, an' I can pay for it too, an' don't you forgit it. But I don't mean to be insulted. If you've got any grub here why don't your waiters trot it out, an' what do they mean by yellin' off a lot of heathen gibberish in a man's ear? Do they think I'm a blamed fool? You may go to thunder with your old hash house; there's places in Boston where a man can come in an' be treated like a gentleman, I guess!" and he strode out and slammed the door after him. And to this time the restaurant keeper and his waiters have not found out what the row was all about.—Boston Journal.

THE DEADLY DYNAMITE.

Yesterday we referred to the necessity of the town taking action in preventing the passing of dynamite through the town. The position taken is re-enforced by the timely remarks made on the subject the Hamilton Times:

"As is almost invariably the case when a blow-up of dynamite or gunpowder takes place, the persons who could throw light on the dreadful accident which took place in the vicinity of Lakefield, Ont., on Friday, were instantly killed—literally blown to atoms—by the explosion. Thus the cause of the calamity will forever remain a mystery. A probable theory leads us to believe that in the first place the packages were not properly secured, and that the trotting of the horses down the hill, at the bottom of which the calamity occurred, caused a loosening in the load, which gave opportunity for the concussion that caused such fearful havoc.

Undoubtedly greater care should be taken in handling this deadly explosive, and if men will not exercise due vigilance to avoid accidents, there must be a stringent law to compel them. Dynamite, as was proved when the terrible explosion took place at Stratford a few years ago, and as was again demonstrated in the calamity near Lakefield, is a preparation that requires to be much more carefully handled than gunpowder. No harm can come of dynamite so long as concussion is avoided, but with very little friction an infinitesimal quantity can do enormous damage. For this reason, it is preferred by contractors, who find it the best agent yet brought forward for blasting purposes, and hence it is extensively used in Canada at the present time.

* * * * * *

In Canada dynamite explosions have, in the large majority of cases, occurred through workmen either not comprehending the deadly nature of the product which it was their duty to handle, or as a consequence of their becoming familiar with the danger, and temporarily neglecting to take the needed precautions to secure safety. The same carelessness has been known to grow upon a man who is constantly handling gunpowder. If any one were to walk into a hardware store, and offer to examine a keg of gunpowder submitted to his inspection by stirring it up with a newly extinguished match, he would be deemed a lunatic, and handed over to the nearest policeman for safe keeping. Yet last year a hardware clerk in the neighboring city of London took this method of testing the quality of gunpowder placed under his care, and lost his own life as well as that of a companion, through the fatal lack of presence of mind. He had become so used to handling the explosive that once—and it was once too often—he did that which no man in his senses should have done. And so it has happened with men whose duty it is to take care of dynamite. To counteract this fatal tendency the British inspector of explosives directed the particular attention of manufacturers and importers to the necessity for the issue of careful instructions on the subject. Now that dynamite is so much used in Canada, similar precautions are much needed. We have no special inspectors to warn manufacturers of their duty to employees. We have no law to compel them to issue necessary and unambiguous printed instructions to ignorant or careless workmen, but we certainly have many a less necessary enactment on the statute book. There should be some regulation whereby the workmen may, at least in a measure, be protected against his own apathy or carelessness, and what is of more importance still, by means of which the safety of the general public may, as far as possible, be assured. If the explosion had taken place in Lakefield, Campbellford, or any of the neighboring villages, instead of in a swamp, a considerable distance away from any human habitation, one shudders to think of the sacrifice of life that would certainly have resulted. In the absence of strict, well understood, scrupulously enforced rules for handling and carrying the stuff, there is no guarantee that such a calamity may not have been chronicled any day.

Medals for the Volunteers.

LONDON, Sept. 6.—The St. James Gazette says:—It has been frequently suggested that some mark of appreciation of the services of the Canadian militia in the work of suppressing the Riel rebellion in the Northwest, should be conferred upon the soldiers who took part in the campaign. Her Majesty has graciously signified her approval of a proposition to bestow suitable medals on those deserving of the honor, and the Dominion Government has been notified of the Imperial approval.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The publisher of THE EXAMINER does not hold himself responsible for the facts asserted, nor the opinions expressed by correspondents.]

A Letter from Rev. William Bennett.

To the Editor of the DAILY EXAMINER:

MY DEAR SIR,—I have in my possession a book from which a few extracts at the present time may not be out of place. The book is entitled, a "A Report by the Committee on Intemperance for the Lower House of Convocation of the Province of Canterbury." The work is printed and circulated by the order of said Lower House. The convocation receiving and adopting the report was held in Jerusalem Chamber, Westminster Abbey, on June 15th, 1869. The report was at once forwarded to Her Majesty, with the prayer that such legislative action be taken as will discourage intoxication and diminish the great moral and social evils which flow from it.

From the report itself I do not purpose quoting. It will suffice at present to give some of the replies sent in to the querries of the committee, and on which the report was based.

The questions issued were in reference to the extent of the evil, the proximate causes, the results, the remedies. They were addressed to the clergy of the Province of Canterbury—to governors and chaplains of goals—constables and superintendents of police—superintendents of lunatic asylums, and governors of workhouses throughout England and Wales.

I propose in this article to give extracts from the returns on the subject of "Remedies for Intemperance."

Of course the remedies suggested are many. They are grouped under sixteen heads and cover 76 pages. The replies to the questions are all numbered, and those given on the subject of "remedies" embrace the items from No. 1,213 to 2,322.

To the questions over the heading "Popular restraint on the issue of licenses," we give a few answers; and, first, from

THE CLERGY.

1975.—"Abolish the abominable sinful system of the sale of drink."

1979.—"The only way is to prohibit the sale of intoxicating drinks, except as a medicine."

1981.—"Nothing less than the Maine law will be effectual."

1987.—"Many drunkards have told me that they should be most thankful to have the temptation removed."

2000.—"Nothing can be done but by the removal of the temptation."

2001.—"I should be glad to see the Permissive Bill tried."

2005.—"Abolish the sale of drink maintained by an ungodly government for the purpose of degrading and destroying the people."

2,006.—"The Permissive Bill. No other legal measure, according to my experience and judgment, will meet the requirements of the case."

GOVERNORS AND CHAPLAINS OF PRISONS.

2009.—"Moral suasion is a failure; agitate for entire prohibition."

2010.—"The Permissive Bill."

2013.—"Nothing less than the Maine law will be effectual."

2019.—"The total extinction of gin shops," or

2022.—"Nothing but the removal of the temptation."

CHIEF CONSTABLES AND SUPERINTENDENTS OF POLICE.

2024.—"The Permissive bill."

2026.—"Stop distillation and prevent the importation of foreign spirits. Let no spirits be sold except by an apothecary and that only upon a certificate by a medical practitioner."

2027.—"The only remedy I can see is to abolish the sale of liquor."

2029.—"Abolish the sale and traffic of intoxicating liquors altogether."

GOVERNORS OF WORKHOUSES.

2040.—"The Maine law."

2043.—"Deprive them in toto of stimulants."

2044.—"Stop the tap."

2052.—"I would suggest the permissive bill."

2053.—"The total suppression of the liquor traffic."

2063.—"The legislature at once and for ever to sweep away all dramshops and beerhouses."

2065.—"I think the closing of all public houses desirable. If this could be done nine-tenths of the vagrancy and pauperism would be done away with."

2067.—"Shut up the public houses."

I have made a digest of the replies from No. 1975 to 2068 and I find that 78 are in favor of either general or local prohibition.

I close this letter with another extract. It is No. 2064 and comes from the Governor of a Workhouse:

"A legislative enactment vigorously enforced for the suppression of the liquor traffic appears to be the only sure remedy. Many paupers and many of the working classes I have again and again heard wish that these dens of evil and temptation—the public houses—were suppressed, that is, public houses as now constituted for the sale of body and soul destroying drinks. It appears to me only nonsense to talk about infringing the liberty of the subject—to enact laws to prevent men and women ruining themselves by indulgence in so vicious a practice as drunkenness."

Yours, &c.
WM. BENNETT.

Peterborough, Sept. 7th.

The Sawdust Nuisance.

The one-time beautiful bay of the Ottawa river below Parliament Hill is just losing its grandeur, and is also rapidly becoming useless, as far as navigation is concerned, owing to the immense beds of sawdust from the Chaudiere mills that are rising above the surface. It was thought a year or so ago that when the law prohibiting the depositing of sawdust in the river was to have been rigidly enforced, the nuisance would in a measure decrease, but instead of this it is increasing. At present there is to be seen a broad bar of sawdust fully one foot above the surface, extending for about two hundred yards east of the island and right in the centre of the bay. Unless the law is strictly enforced in the future the Government will certainly be put to enormous expense in dredging this portion of the river.

Agrarian Outrages.

DUBLIN, Sept. 7.—A party of moon-lighters raided a farm house near Tralee last Sunday evening. They pulled a girl out of bed and cut off her hair, and tied two donkeys together tail to tail and burned them alive. They also burned a rick of hay and stabbed a horse to death.

DR. MACBRIDE.

Saving a Beautiful Girl from Death for His Own Wedding.

Dr. Æneas Macbride was strong in comparative anatomy, and dissected everything that came in his way. His dissecting room was in the courtyard of the Palazzo Carminali, Rome. But it was up stairs in his library and alone that "Il Scozzese" carried out his choicest manipulations and made the more delicate of the "preparations" of human muscles, arteries, veins and nerves, which, when completed, were displayed under glass shades on a long table in the center of the apartment. It was at this table, having just finished the dissection of a very small hand—never mind to what kind of a creature the hand, while it was a living hand, had belonged—that he was sitting in July, 1855, when it suddenly occurred to him that he had exhausted his supply of cochineal with which to tinge the melted wax which he proposed to inject on the morrow morning into the venous system of his "preparation."

Dr. Æneas Macbride proceeded to the well known druggist's shop kept by Signor Panciarotto, at the corner of the Via dei Condotti. It was one of the largest and handsomest shops in Rome. He made his purchase and placed the packet of cochineal in a side pocket.

"Stay," he suddenly exclaimed, pausing on the threshold, "I had forgotten something. You must make up, if you please, that admirably efficacious sleeping draught, with the secret of the formula of which only you and I are cognisant, and which has given ease to so many of my patients. Will you prepare it for me at once? I must take it with me."

"With pleasure, illustrissimo ad eccellentissimo Doctore," said the apothecary, as he hustled from jar to jar, pouring various ingredients into a glass vial. "'Tis a wonderful sleeping draught, to be sure. I have tried it on my wife who, poor soul, endures agonies from the toothache, and it never fails in producing slumber. To be sure, had you not told me that the potion was quite harmless, I should have been afraid to use it; for the sleep that it brings about is so deep and so long as to be really very much like the sleep of death."

He had soon completed his task, and Dr. Macbride, placing the vial in his side pocket with the cochineal, left the pharmacia. He crossed the Piazza di Spagna, in the direction of the College of the Propaganda; when just as he had reached the spot where is now the monument, his path was crossed by a tall man who was wrapped up in a long black cloak, and who wore his broad flapped hat slouched over his eyes.

"It is all very well for you to slouch your hat over your eyes, my friend," said Dr. Macbride to himself, "but I know that hat and cloak very well, or I am grievously mistaken. They belong to the nameless man who lodges in one of the garrets at the Palazzo Carminali. I once nursed you through a fever, my friend, and gave you money to get your cloak out of pawn. I don't think you would do me any harm, though folks do say that you are a spadacino, a hired assassin."

Scarcely had he thus mentally expressed himself when he heard in a low voice behind him the single word, "Eccolo!" "Here he is!" And immediately he was seized from behind by strong arms, a heavy cloak was thrown over his head, and he was lifted from the ground and carried some yards. Then he was thrust forward on what seemed some kind of a bench or seat; the arms which had seized him had relaxed their grasp, a door was slammed and he became aware that he was in a rapidly moving vehicle.

Dr. Æneas Macbride had in verity been kidnapped by two men, forcibly carried by them to a coach, one of the doors of which was standing wide, huddled into the vehicle and rapidly driven away. The whole proceeding, indeed, had been watched with the liveliest interest by an individual who was clad in a long brown cloak, and who wore his hat slouched over his eyes, and who—there is no indiscretion in saying it—was the nameless man who lived in one of the garrets on the Palazzo Carminali, and whose profession was conjectured to be that of an assassin for hire. And as he watched the carriage rapidly retreating into the shadows, the nameless man was jingling some golden coins in his pockets and chuckling merrily.

"Ten ducats," he reflected—"ten ducats only for pointing out the Signor Dottore to them. And they have sworn not to do him any harm. Of course, if they had wanted to harm him they would have come to me; but I would not have stabbed the Signor Dottore; no, not for a hundred ducats. Let us go and drink a bottle of Chianti."

While the nameless man was thus congratulating himself on the successful result of his exceptionally bloodless night's work, unseen hands had relieved Dr. Æneas Macbride of the heavy cloak in which he had been muffled, and in which he had been all but suffocated. He sat up to find himself in the interior of what was evidently the carriage of a person of rank. The blinds were closely drawn down, but a small lamp hanging from the roof gave him sufficient light to see that the opposite seat was occupied by two gentlemen very richly dressed, but whose countenances were wholly concealed by masks of black silk, having deep fringes of the same material. One of the gentlemen hastened to inform him that he must submit to have his eyes bandaged, as the person in whose presence they were about to conduct him was a lady of rank, whose name and place of abode it was imperatively necessary to conceal. As he pulled the bandage out of his pocket and proceeded very adroitly to adjust it to the doctor's eyes, his companion took occasion to remark that he and the other gentleman were fully armed; and should the doctor, at this or any other stage of the proceedings, offer the slightest resistance to any request which was proffered to him he would be immediately stabbed to death. Upon this admonition, Dr. Æneas Macbride resolved, like the canny Scot he was, to hold his tongue and see—when he was permitted to use his eyesight again—what came of it.

It seemed to him that the carriage was continually turning and was driven through a great variety of streets, possibly with a view to prevent his forming any accurate idea as to the part of the city to which he was being conducted. The coach at length stopped, and the door was opened for him. His two companions took him each under one arm, assisted him up a narrow stairway into a room, where, after a moment's pause, the bandage was removed from his eyes. He found himself in a small drawing room, or boudoir, dimly lighted by wax tapers, and richly furnished, although sheets and pieces of tapestry had been thrown over some of the chairs or placed in front of some of the picture frames, as though for the purpose of preventing a stranger from too closely identifying the contents of the room. There was a flask of wine on the table, and one of the gentlemen filled a large bumper of Venetian glass and offered it to Dr. Macbride.

"I want no wine," he said coolly; "it may be poison for aught I know."

The gentleman who had offered him the wine, and who was very tall, and clad in a suit of dark blue paduasoy, richly laced with gold, for all reply put the goblet to his lips and tossed off the contents at a draught. Then his companion, who was shorter and stouter—neither had removed his mask—and who wore a green doublet and coat laced with silver, filled another glass with wine and offered it to the doctor, saying: "You had better drink it. Remember what I told you in the carriage. We allow no trifling in this house; and besides, you have need to nerve yourself for what you have to do."

"I don't like Dutch courage," replied Dr. Macbride, "and am not used to dram drinking to nerve me for my work. However, as I have not the slightest wish to have my throat cut, and you appear to be prepared to cut it" — both gentlemen nodded their heads significantly—"at a moment's notice, if things do not go as you wish them to go, I will drink. And now," he resumed after a very moderate potation, "what is it that you want me to do?"

"To perform a surgical operation."

"When?"

"This instant."

"Where?"

"You shall see."

As the taller of the two masked men made this reply he took the doctor by the arm and led him forward. The shorter person lifted a heavy velvet curtain veiling an open portal, and the three passed into a vast bed-chamber. Here everything in the way of furniture, and even the ceiling and the curtains and the counterpane of a huge four-post bed in the center of the room, had been shrouded in white sheeting. At the foot of the bed there sat, or rather there was half reclining in a large chair covered with crimson velvet, a young lady—she could be scarcely more than nineteen—exceedingly beautiful, and with golden hair that rippled over her shoulders. Her hands were tightly clasped, and she was deathly pale. She was clad in a long, loosely-flowing undress robe of some white, silky material, and Dr. Macbride could see that her little feet were bare.

"You see this woman—this most guilty and unhappy woman?" said in a harsh voice the taller of the two gentlemen. "She has disgraced the noble family to which she belongs, and it is necessary that she should be deprived of life. Here is the case of lancets, and you will instantly proceed to bleed her to death."

"She is prepared to submit to her fate," added the shorter gentleman in green and silver, "and you will make the greatest possible expedition. I need scarcely say that you will be amply recompensed for your pains."

"I will do no such horrible and unmanly thing," said Dr. Æneas Macbride. "Do you think that I, a physician, whose duty is to do everything that he possibly can to save human life—be it that of the new-born infant or of the dotard of 90—would consent to put to a cruel death a poor lady who should be enjoying all the happiness that earth can give? Do your butchery work yourself; I'll have no hand in it."

"It is precisely," replied the latter gentleman, "because we are desirous that this indispensable work should not be done in a butcherly manner that we have brought you here. You are known to be the skillfulest surgeon in Rome, and you will perform the operation at once by opening the veins in her ankles; if you refuse, I swear that I and my bro"—he checked himself before he could wholly pronounce the word "brother"—"my companion will fall on you with our poinards and hack you to death."

"Do their bidding," said, in a low, faint voice the young lady in the arm-chair.

"Do I hear aright?" said the Doctor.

"You did!" resumed the lady. "Do their bidding, or you will incur a fate as dreadful as my own."

Dr. Æneas Macbride appeared to hesitate for a moment; then he said: "I will do your will, and may Heaven forgive me for yielding to you? But I must have a vessel; a large vessel of warm water."

"That shall be at once procured," replied the taller of the masked men, leaving the room. You will remember that Dr. Æneas Macbride was also tall of stature. He bent over the reclining lady and whispered something to her.

"I have told her," he said, drawing himself up to his full length, "that I will not hurt her much."

Presently two female attendants, each closely masked, entered the room, carrying between them a large silver tub full of warm water. This vessel they placed before the young lady, who, without a word, immersed her feet in the water. Then Dr. Macbride, once more bending over the victim, smoothing the hair on her forehead and feeling her pulse, knelt, lancet in hand, by the side of the silver foot-bath. He rose, looked in the victim's face, chose a fresh lancet, and knelt again by the side of the footbath. The water was now deeply discolored. Ere long it was completely crimson.

"Bring another bath—a tub—a bucket—what you will!" said the doctor, "and more warm water!" Then he continued, hastily holding his wrists around the ankles of the patient, while the first foot-bath was taken away and another substituted for it. "This will finish the work."

"How she bleeds!" said the tall man, who, with folded arms, was watching the scene. The young lady had fallen back in her chair, her arms hanging loosely.

"She is insensible!" said the shorter of the masked men.

"She is dead!" said Dr. Æneas Macbride, solemnly.

"How she bled!" repeated the shorter of the two masked men.

"She will bleed no more," said Dr. Macbride. "And now let me ask you what you intend to do with the evidence of your, and I may almost say my guilt? How do you intend to dispose of the corpse?"

"Put it into a sack full of stones and sink it in the Tiber," muttered the taller gentleman.

"At the risk of the sack rotting, the weights becoming disengaged from the body, and of the corpse floating, or of being washed on shore and the features recognized."

"Bury it in the garden," suggested the shorter man.

"It is still dangerous," resumed the doctor. "The bodies of buried people that have been murdered have been disinterred over and over again. One was, you know, last year in that vineyard close to the Appian Way, and the assassin was brought to justice."

"That is true."

"When you planned your little scheme, gentlemen," the doctor went on, almost banteringly, "you should have planned the last act of your tragedy as well as the preceding ones. Let me tell you that a murdered dead body is, in a civilized city, one of the most difficult of imaginable things to get rid of. But since I have gone with you so far in this abominable business I will go yet further and help you to conceal the corpse. Bring it back with me to my surgery in the Piazza di Spagna—I am accustomed to have such burdens brought to me at the dead of night—and I'll dissect her. By which I mean that in less than twelve hours no recognizable trace will remain of your deceased relative—if relative she is."

The victim was evidently stone dead. After a long consultation the masked men acceded to the proposition of the doctor, who appeared to have become so completely their accomplice, and who accepted, with many protestations of thanks, a large purse of gold sequins. Again he submitted to have his eyes bandaged, and again he was conducted to the coach in waiting below; but something else accompanied the party, and was placed on the seat beside the doctor. That something else was the body, rolled up in many thicknesses of white linen, of the lady who had been bled to death! The carriage made a route as circuitous as before to the Piazza di Spagna; but it was then, at Dr. Macbride's request, driven round to the entrance of the narrow lane behind the Palazzo Carminali. Then the burden wrapped in white linen was carried by the doctor and the taller of the masked men by the back door into the dissecting room and laid like a stone on the table. The doctor noticed that his fellow-bearer was trembling violently, and he had evidently had enough of horrors for that night!

Three months afterward Dr. Æneas Macbride returned to Edinburg, bringing with him his wife, a young and extremely handsome Italian lady of a noble Roman family. Pope Benedict XIV., the enlightened and humane Lambretini, had had much to do with bringing about the union of the handsome young lady with "Il Dottore Enea Macbride, Scozzese." He had informed the young lady's brothers, Don Rafaelle and Don Antonio Cordiscoglio, Counts of that ilk, that if they did not consent to the match and pay over a very large fine to the apostolic chamber they should be prosecuted with the utmost rigor of the law for having basely attempted to the murder of their sister by causing her, as they thought, to have the veins of her ankles opened. Dr. Æneas Macbride, while pretending to execute the dreadful behests of Don Rafaelle and Don Antonio Cordiscoglio, had first administered to her a potion which speedily reduced her to complete insensibility, and had next mingled with the warm water in which the feet of the patient were immersed the contents of the packet of cochineal which he had purchased at the farmacia Panciaretto. The poor girl's only offense had been that she had imprudently, and in mere girlish folly, encouraged for a short time the address of a young man much her inferior in rank; but by her haughty and vindictive brothers this transient flirtation was esteemed a crime which her death alone could expiate. How fortunate it was that Dr. Æneas Macbride was so much addicted to making anatomical "preparations," necessitating the use of cochineal for their perfection. I fancy, however, that after his marriage he ceased to dissect small dead animals, and consoled himself with covering small live ones with kisses.—Georgia Augusta Sala in Bow Bells.

MIDLAND CENTRAL FAIR LACROSSE MATCH.

Mr. A. Shaw, Secretary of the Midland Central Fair, states that the principal attractions during the fair week will be a lacrosse match between local and foreign teams.—(Whig, Kingston.)

Why Certainly.

"Can a person import liquor for his own use, under the Scott Act, from a place where the act is not in force, to a place where the act is in force?"

Of course he can.—ED. EXAMINER.

Prob's Weather Promises.

The following forecast of the weather for this district for the 24 hours from 1 a. m. to-day is received from the Toronto Meterological office :—Winds increasing to a strong breeze, or moderate gales from the eastward, increasing cloudiness and rain.

The Anti-Scotts Open Fire.

An Anti-Scott Act meeting was held last evening at Norwood. Prof. Richardson of the Liberal Temperance Union addressed the meeting against the act and was followed by Rev. B. B. Keefer, who opposed the Professor. Both speakers were strong in argument and much excitement prevailed, the meeting lasting to almost one o'clock in the morning.

He's "The Bowld McIntyre."

Mr. J. E. McIntyre, of the Oriental, has in contemplation a deer hunting expedition this fall, in company with his brother-in-law, Mr. Pike, who is a noted marksman. To be ready for business, Mac, the other day, purchased a Colt Magazine rifle, and yesterday afternoon, accompanied by Mr. Kingan, of Kingan, Bros., from whom the rifle was purchased, went out to the range to see what kind of shooting he could make. A target about a foot square, with a circular bullseye 3½ inches in diameter, was put up at 500 yards range, and out of thirty shots, twenty-nine were discovered to have found the target. Mr. McIntyre does not shoot with the ordinary sight, but files the foresight down to a fine hair line, and performed this operation on the range, gradually getting the sight to the condition he wanted it. His first shots were all in the lower right hand corner of the target, but as he gradually got the sight adjusted to suit him, kept creeping in on the small bulls-eye and his last half dozen shots were all fairly lodged in it. The whole target, however, was no larger than an ordinary bulls-eye at the range named would be under ordinary circumstances, and the target, which is hung up in the office of the hotel, may be considered an almost phenomenal example of accurate rifle shooting. It also speaks volumes for the excellency of the weapon. The deer will have a poor chance with the "Bould McIntyre."

Baseball.

PETERBOROUGH VS. LINDSAY.

At last arrangements have been made for a match between these clubs. As Lindsay won't come to Peterborough, Peterborough has consented to go to Lindsay, and to-morrow the struggle for the superiority to which both teams lay claim, will take place. It is to be hoped that the game will be played out in a sportsmanlike and amicable manner, and that the vexed question will be decided in such a way as to leave no room for kicking on either sides. The following players will represent Peterborough :—O'Neil, Sullivan, Rogers, Dayman, Metheral Campbell, Cameron, Moore and Dunn.

A "BASE" HIT.

The following extract, referring to a recent game played in Hamilton, is from the Hamilton Spectator, a baseball paper, published in a baseball city :—

"The scene at Dundurn on Saturday reflected no credit upon Hamilton. We are not sure that it reflected any particular discredit upon the city ; but it is certain that some people who live in Hamilton appeared to very poor advantage. It would be unprofitable to make any inquiry into the merits (or, rather, the demerits) of a vulgar squabble of which drunkenness, blasphemy, gambling and mutual charges of dishonesty make up the particulars. We do not care to enbuire whether a player did or did not deliberately play badly for a money consideration in order that his own club might lose the game ; nor the counter charge that a manager, angered by losing large sums he had bet on the game, acted with unwarranted severity toward the player. These are the accusations which are cast to and fro ; but the general public have little interest in them. All that people care much about is the fact that an athletic game, which might have been a source of enjoyment to many, was turned into such a disgraceful exhibition that all the spectators were disgusted by it. Those who have any love for cleanly and harmless sport will hardly care to pay money in future for the privilege of witnessing a first-class exhibition of rowdyism. Ladies especially, will keep away from a sport upon which drunkenness intrudes itself and profanity and obscenity are freely permitted."

The average lover of athletic games is led to wonder whether a game that could, under any circumstances, lead to such an exhibition of unapproachable blackguardism, can be one that is worth supporting. If the game can sink to such depths of degradation in Hamilton, the birth place of Canadian ball playing, what can be hoped for elsewhere?

The Gun.

FORMATION OF THE PETERBOROUGH GUN CLUB,

A largely attended meeting was held last night at the Grand Central for the purpose of forming a gun club. Much interest is manifested and there is no doubt a first class club will be established. The following are the officers elected :—

John Burnham, M. P.—President.
R. Tivey.—Vice-President.
H. W. Kent.—Secretary-Treasurer.

The admission fee was fixed at $1. Those desirous of joining can give their names to the Secretary and they will be ballotted for at the next meeting to be held at the Grand Central on Monday evening next at 8 o'clock.

Cornice Poles and Curtain Chains just received at A. Clegg's cheaper than ever.

Barnum's Circus Excursion.

Parties intending to go on the excursion per the steamer Golden-Eye and C. P. & M. R. R. to Cobourg to-morrow to visit Barnum's circus are informed that the tickets will be good to return on Thursday without additional charge."

Journalistic Rejuvenation.

In its charming new dress, the Picton Times comes to us as a model of a country newspaper. It is an able champion of Reform principles and an excellent newspaper. Recently it has been improving and the last improvement, a new dress throughout, makes it one of the handsomest, as it has long been one of the best local newspapers in the Bay of Quinte district.

Enterprise Appreciated.

The EXAMINER office is in receipt of numerous communications from New York, Xenia, Ohio, Hamilton, Ont., and other places, asking for copies of the EXAMINER containing the full, prompt and accurate account of the Lakefield dynamite disaster. The Belleville Intelligencer showed its appreciation of the manner in which the EXAMINER handled the item, by clipping it in its entirety, the only alteration made being to make it appear as if it was their own. While acknowledging the compliment, we would suggest that the Intelligencer when again utilizing our reports, should give credit in the proper quarter. The EXAMINER has the pleasure of frequently quoting from the columns of the Intelligencer, always giving due credit. Tu quoque, cotem.

A Careful Official.

Mr. Donald Gunn, G. T. R. station agent, Belleville, appears to be, emphatically, the right man in the right place. Recently Mr. George Webber, of this town shipped a lot of pigs and sheep to Montreal per G. T. R. During the necessary transhipment at Belleville, one of the cars became out of order, and if it had been allowed to proceed on its destination in that manner, the stock would have suffered loss equivalent to a large amount. But Mr. Gunn, with great care, and at considerable personal inconvenience, attended to putting the car in a condition of as good repair as the circumstances admitted, thus saving a patron of the railway that employs him, a large loss, and confirming the reputation of the line as a safe and reliable road by which to ship stock. Railway officials, if so disposed can, even in adhering to the letter of their duties ; make it very unpleasant for patrons, and they can, as Mr. Gunn has shown, be obliging gentlemen and at the the same time promote the interests both of the road and its patrons.

A Scott Act Speaker.

Rev. B. B. Keefer, who arrived here from Norwood on the morning train, will address meetings in connection with the Scott Act as announced in the EXAMINER yesterday. Mr. Keefer is a pleasing speaker, and having met and grappled with the arguments of the opponents of the Act in other localities, is a thorough master of his subject, and wil prove a great accession of strength to those who are endeavoring to secure its passage here.

Sabbath School Association.

There was a very fair attendance of the teachers of the different Sunday Schools of the town last evening in St. Paul's school room for the purpose of organization as a Sabbath School Association. Rev. John McEwan, the secretary of the Provincial Association, addressed the meeting especially on the objects of the proposed local association. He concluded his remarks by reading a draft constitution on which he had bestowed much labor in the preparation. Subsequently it was unanimously agreed that such an association should be formed. Mr. J. W. Flavelle was elected President and Mr. D. B. Gardiner, Secretary. The election of the other officers and completion of organization will take place at an adjourned meeting to be held on the 29th instant in St. Paul's lecture room at 8 p.m., to which all the S. S. teachers of the town and Ashburnham are cordially invited.

A Word to the Unwary.

About a week ago, in a deposit made at the Bank of Toronto was discovered a bogus $4 bill, purporting to be payable by the Bank of Toronto for the Colonial Bank, a wildcat institution since defunct. The bill was at once returned to the depositor, who is supposed in turn to have handed it back to the party from whom he received it. It evidently did not go out of circulation, however, for to-day it turned up at the Bank of Toronto in a remittance from Hastings. The bill cannot be said to be a counterfeit, for although it bears a signature purporting to be that of Mr. J. Chewett, first President of the Bank of Toronto, it does not in any way resemble the notes of that institution. It is of a salmon color, and the design has a medallion in the centre with a portrait of Queen Victoria, while in the left is a female figure bearing a sword and pair of scales, which, but for the absence of a bandage over the eyes, might be taken for a figure of justice. As there may be other such bills in circulation, and they are utterly worthless, it would be well for persons handling money to be on the alert for them.

Out-of-Date Amunition Utilized.

The millennial period comes nearer, when the munitions of warfare are, instead of being used to massacre an enemy, devoted to brightening the homes of the subject. The Powell & Jones Stove Works have recently received three or four carloads of 24-pounder cannon balls, shipped direct from Woolwich Arsenal, England, for use in the manufacture of their stoves. These cannon balls have been displaced by more modern projectiles, and the old out-of-date teeth of the cannon's mouth, that perhaps did duty in Nelson's time, are disposed of for peaceful industrial purposes. The metal of which these balls are composed, is the best of iron, and their employment for stove plates produces a toughness and capacity for resistance to the effects of heat, that make the latter infinitely superior to plates made by any other brand of iron. A Canadian citizen may become quite romantic in sitting beside one of the stoves of the Peterborough Stove Works. While the winter is howling without, he may reflect that the material composing his glowing stove which enables him to laugh the howling storm to scorn, was once hoisted from the shot-locker of the Victory to the merry "yo-heave-ho" of Lord Nelson's jolly, pig-tailed tars.

Don't be Duped.

Smokers will further their own interest by insisting upon having the "Cable", or "El Padre" brands of cigars which have stood the for a quarter of a century, and not allow greedy and unscrupulous dealers to persuade them to take other brands which pays them a larger profit, the consumer being a loser thereby. 13d-25

Dangers as Well as Delights.

The recent drowning in the Potomac near Washington, out of a canoe, of a son of Senator Morgan and a lady companion, furnishes another warning against the use by ladies of such dangerous boats. The inevitable result of an upset to a lady is a drowning, for, be the gentleman ever so gallant and unselfish, as in this case, he can rarely save his companion. The habit of taking ladies in yachts, sailboats and canoes is a growing one in Canadian waters, and should be checked before a sad disaster occurs.

GARDEN AND GREENHOUSE.

Annual Exhibition of the Horticultural Society.

Flowers and Fancy Work.

Vegetables and Fine Arts.

Owing to the unpropitious weather yesterday and last evening the Horticultural Exhibition was not the success in point of attendance that it would otherwise have been, but in regard to the quantity and quality of the exhibits, was well up to the mark and much ahead of last year's display. The Rink, in which it is being held, is well adapted to the purpose, and the exhibits showed to good advantage. Among the floral exhibits the collection of coleï or foliage plants made a very handsome appearance. The ladies' fancy work was a very strong exhibit, and some very beautiful specimens of feminine industry are to be seen. The fine arts display is not extensive, nor are there included any very ambitious efforts, though there are some very good copies in India ink and sepia. The exhibition will be kept open during this afternoon and evening, and as soon as is consistent with the amount of work to be performed by the Secretary the prizes will be paid.

Bridgenorth.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

The lecture given by Mrs. Pech in the Methodist Church on Saturday evening was well attended. A vote of the meeting was taken when all present declared themselves in favor of the Scott Act.

On Monday evening a convention of Scott Act workers of Smith township was held in the same place. The attendance was small but committees were formed for each of the polling sub-divisions and arrangements made for holding meetings throughout the township. A gentleman present remarked that the supporters of the Act were too confident of the result.

Youngs Point.

(From Our Own Correspondent,)

Your Bridgenorth correspondent in a recent letter charges me with having "dubbed" the Bridgenorth Baseball Club, the "Clippers." I would like to know what dubbing there was on my part when in the challenge sent from Bridgenorth to Mr. R. Heard, some time ago, the Bridgenorth Baseballers are styled the "Clippers."

On Saturday and Sunday a number of the inhabitants of the village and vicinity visited the scene of the recent dynamite explosion, bringing home with them some memento of the terrible accident.

Mr. John A. Nicholls, the Scott Act lecturer delivered an address in the school house here on Wednesday night.

The Exemption Question.

Mayor Cox Makes Mr. Loch an Offer.

To the Editor of THE EXAMINER:

SIR,—I notice by Mr. Lech's communication in your issue of last evening that he takes exception to my statements with regard to his assessment.

In the first place, I may explain that it was only his statement that the Dickson estate was assessed below its value, that led me to refer to his assessment, in order to show that the same remarks would apply with even greater force to himself and to many others who are opposed to the By-law.

Mr. Lech's residence and his two dwelling houses on Rubidge street are assessed for $9,700, his two fine stores on George street for $9,000, his stock in trade and personal property for $1,500, making a total of $20,200. Now, if Mr. Lech will make me a written offer of what this assessment is supposed to cover, at an advance of $10,000 on these figures, I will either find a cash purchaser for him within 24 hours, or failing that, will withdraw and apologize for the statements that I made. If he is unwilling to do that, I will only ask him to explain that there are certain cases in which he is not altogether opposed to partial exemptions, because this $10,000 which he is under assessed, is more than the value of the buildings occupied by Brodie's Woollen Mills, employing seventy-four persons.

It is only fair to Mr. Lech to say that his assessment is higher in proportion than that of a good many others who appear to be very much troubled for fear additional buildings may be erected on the Dickson property and escape taxation for ten years.

I may instance Mr. McClelland, who is another prominent opponent of exemptions, and who would, no doubt, be horrified at the idea of erecting another building similar to Brodie's mill on the same property, and allowing it to be occupied as a manufacturing jewellery establishment, free of taxation for ten years. Yet I would venture to say that I would erect such building for the difference between the actual and the assessed value of the property owned and occupied by Mr. McClelland. I find that the dwelling houses occupied by himself, Mr. Riddell and Mr. Sim are assessed together at $6,050—three quarters of an acre of ground, with three brick dwellings, worth at least $10,000. The assessment of his stock is $1,000, and I leave him to say how much that is below its real value. His store is assessed at $2,200 and with the half of Mr. Moore's office upstairs, making $2,700, a good deal less than the value of the land upon which it stands, thus clearly showing an under-assessment of at least $10,000 in his case also. Does Mr. McClelland think this is fair to Mr. Muncaster, Mr. Sanderson, Mr. Clarke and other jewellers

I hope the gentlemen may be able to show by the expiration of ten years the valuable service they have rendered, and the large saving they have effected for the town by their foresight, but I am very much afraid that they will not be able to show either the improvements or the revenue that have been derived from them. I shall, however, be very glad to know that I am mistaken as to that, and in the meantime I shall, in common with a great many more ratepayers, be glad to have these same gentlemen propose some other and better plan for the further development of our manufacturing interests than the one that they have succeeded in defeating, and I hope they will not make too much delay in submitting their plans, because our magnificent water privilege, capable of driving the necessary machinery to employ thousands of artizans, in addition to those already employed on it, is in the meantime being utilized for floating the forest products of our own county past our own railway sidings, to Desoronto, there to be manufactured into doors, frames, sash, blinds, mouldings, &c., employing 180 skilled mechanics, and sent, not only to all parts of the Dominion, but also sent in ship loads to the markets of the Old World, while some of our citizens, councillors and members of Parliament are devoting their best energies to the proper wording of the Dickson by-law so as to prevent the injustice to Mr. Baptie of any such establishment being located here. I do not wish to do Mr. Baptie or any other citizen any injustice, but surely it is not difficult to see that the increased rental from his dwellings and the increased value to his property, from the location of such establishments, would far more than represent the taxes he is paying, nor is it difficult to see that an establishment of this kind would seek a Dominion not a local market, and would, in reality, be no competition to our present citizens, even though engaged in the same line of business. I remain, sir,

Yours truly,
GEO. A. COX.

South Monaghan.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Council met pursuant to call of the Reeve, at Baillieboro, August 31st; members all present, the Reeve in the chair.

On motion, the reading of the minutes of former meeting was dispensed with.

Communications from the County Clerk, stating the sum South Monaghan had to raise for county purposes was $536, county rate, $133, county school rate.

From the several school sections of the township, asking the council to raise the amount required for local school purposes.

From the several committees on road jobs, enclosing reports and recommending payment of some. The communications were received and filed.

Mr. Byers introduced a by-law to levy rates and assessments for the year 1885; it was passed through the several stages, signed sealed, and the rate was struck at 3 mills on the dollar.

Mr. Nurse introduced a by-law to appoint a collector; passed, signed, sealed, appointed Wm. Morrison, collector.

The following bills were passed and orders drawn on Treasurer:—

On motion, the Council adjourned to meet at the call of the Reeve.

The Spanish War Cloud.

The Ship that Did It.

LONDON, Sept. 8.—The German gunboat which occupied Yap was the "Hyena," Capt. Langeman, from Australia. She carries four guns and 90 men.

Rumors Denied.

Rumors that the German Consuls at Saragossa and Barcelona have been attacked are denied.

Plot Against Alfonso.

PARIS, Sept. 8.—Ex-Queen Isabella, of Spain, is here awaiting the issue of the contention between Spain and Germany. She has frequent conferences with Prince Hohenlohe, the German Ambassador, her old friend. She hopes much from his mediation. A party is forming in favor of placing the four-year-old Princess of the Asturias on the throne of Spain, with General Salmanca as Regent. The General is the most popular man in Spain.

A Trustful King.

MADRID, Sept. 8.—At a meeting of the Council, yesterday, King Alfonso declared he had confidence in the present Ministry. He said he was convinced that Emperor William would meet him half way in an honorable compromise.

The Kaiser Solves the Problem.

PARIS, Sept. 8.—The news has just arrived that the Emperor of Germany has decided that owing to Spanish ships having arrived three days before the German gunboat, the island of Yap shall be given up to Spain.

Birds of Ill Omen.

LONDON, Sept. 8.—According to trustworthy intelligence received from Vienna the Carlists are actively on foot, and are not only supported but well supplied with funds. They are watching their opportunity and if the situation should not improve they are determined to steal a march on the Republicans.

A Revolution Expected.

PARIS, Sept. 7.—The majority of the newspapers in the city expect the strong anti-German feeling provoked throughout Spain, by the Carolines affair, will result in a revolution in that country as the people manifest hostile feeling towards King Alfonso and his Ministry for their action respecting the German occupation of Yap. Ex-Queen Isabella of Spain, in an interview, expressed herself as very hopeful of an amicable settlement of the difficulty between Spain and Germany.

Ottawa.

OTTAWA, Sept. 8,—His Excellency, the Governor-General, will leave Ottawa on Saturday next on a tour through the Northwest Territories. He will travel incog., and before returning to the capital will probably visit British Columbia. He will be absent about seven weeks.

Dr. Chapleau, brother to the Hon. Mr. Chapleau, Secretary of State, received a cablegram this morning saying the honorable gentleman would start for Canada at the end of the month, fully recovered in health.

Irish Agrarian Outrages.

DUBLIN, Sept. 8.—Mr. Parnell is wild over the recent frequent occurrence of agrarian outrages and the wide-spread publicity that has been given to them. The cause of his anger is two-fold. He is chagrined at the inability of his lieutenants to prevent disturbances at this time, when he has good reasons for wanting Ireland represented as tranquil; and he is indignant at the avidity with which each petty quarrel or ruction is seized upon and telegraphed far and wide for effect upon the general elections. The Parnellites insist that the outrages now reported every day in the English papers are either invented altogether, or are so distorted as to wholly misrepresent the facts. They suggest as a remedy that every one of the local reporters who is found guilty of writing partizan or exaggerated accounts of these occurrences shall be boycotted.

NOTHING BUT NEGLECT.

"Volunteers Land Grants, Scrips and Pensions," is the title of a pamphlet, by Capt. C. W. Allen, late of the Department of the Interior, which has been opportunely published by the Toronto News Company. The main object of the author is "to protect those entitled to benefit by the bounty of Parliament from being persuaded to sacrifice their interests from lack, on their part, of trustworthy information," but he goes farther, and undertakes to show not only the true relative value of land grants and scrip, but the most advantageous way in which the grantees may transfer their interest if they desire to do so. It is not creditable to the Government that a private individual should have to perform a duty that plainly devolves on the Government. If the Minister of Militia, "Sir" Adolph Caron, had had one half the thought for the volunteers who did the fighting, that he had for himself; if he had worked half as hard to properly equip and provide for the volunteers while in the field, as he did in securing a trumpery title for himself, the land grant matter would not have been so miserably bungled as it has been; volunteers would not have had to be groping in darkness, and at the mercy of sharks and speculators, who lay in wait to rob the unwary. The offensive neglect which the Dominion Government has measured out to the volunteer force ever since its organization and more particularly during the recent campaign is but of a piece with the neglect, indifference and mismanagement that brought on the rebellion. While Gen. Middleton got $20,000 for his services, Minister Caron a knighthood, which, to his little mind, is worth another $20,000, and the clerks of his office $500 each, with which they are now enjoying a holiday tour in Europe; while members of Parliament got $500 each for a little extra length of session, equal to about the length of the campaign, the volunteers are put off with a land grant that not one in a hundred could avail himself of, or were insulted with equivalent scrip, which, owing to the Government keeping them in ignorance of the matter, many by sheer distress, placed at the mercy of sharpers, were swindled out of for the paltry sum of two dollars! Two dollars for three months' hard work, and hard fare and hard fighting; two dollars to compensate for loss of time, loss of situations, and loss of health.

If the Dominion Government had felt the slightest interest in the volunteer force, or cherished a single feeling for the credit of Canada, when appropriating a land grant to the volunteers, they would have taken pains to see that the fullest instructions were issued and the fullest facilities were afforded the volunteers, to enable them to realize the full benefit of the grant. But so long as grab is the game and personal and political self-seeking the ruling motive in the Cabinet, little better can be expected. The Dominion Government devotes its whole attention to strengthening its hold of office, while in the meantime the country merely drifts. Capt. Allen, in his little book, performs an inestimable service to the volunteers. He virtually befriends the Government, for he performs a work which the latter has shamefully neglected.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

A Tory organ calls the Franchise Defence Fund a "corruption fund." In the sense that corruption has made the fund necessary the appellation is correct enough.

Not a single Conservative organ has condemned the action of the Conservative majority in Parliament for voting the members $500 extra sessional indemnity, yet all are unanimous in condemning those Reformers who have refused to devote the amount to personal purposes. They can sympathize with the grab, but a little generosity is past their comprehension.

The Mail is returning to first principles. It has re-opened the reader question and devotes considerable length to the discussion and distortion of the question. It further asserts that the Ontario school system is in a rather ricketty condition, but, for a wonder, admits that neither Mr. Ross nor his predecessors are responsible for that, yet it says the first step of reform should be a complete separation of the school system from party politics. So desperate a proposal argues that the Mail hasn't the slightest hope that Mowat will ever go, and Meredith come into power.

Mr. John A. Macdonnell, the Toronto lawyer, who everlastingly disgraced himself by appearing in a condition of, at least, not excessive sobriety, and insulting Mr. Huntingdon, on the floor of the House of Commons, denies that Sir John intends to make him junior judge of York county, and says he would not accept the position if the entire Dominion Government had offered it to him. There is some hope for this young man yet—he seems to know what he doesn't know, and that he is unfit for the position in question.

The Mail asserts that the destruction of the Senate would be equivalent to the repeal of the British North America Act. When that venerable body adjourned for a couple of weeks during the past session, the collection of taxes still went on, and possibly the Dominion would hang together if they adjourned for a couple of centuries. In a column of apology for the existence of the Senate, made by the organ, not one sentence is devoted to justifying its existence. The only excuse the Mail offers for its perpetuation is that Quebec demands it as an antidote against the application of the principle of representation by population in the House of Commons.

Canadian Cheesemaking.

A Canadian Giving Instructions in the Art in Scotland.

Mr. J. B. Harris, of Canada, went to Scotland last spring as an instructor in the Canadian ways of making cheese. His system, while meeting with general favor, is considerably criticized in some quarters. At the Galloway Society show Col. McDowall, who officiated as Chairman at the regular dinner, said he did not think if one wanted to learn French that he would go to Belgium for an instructor, and for his part he did not see the need of going to America for a cheese maker. The Americans, he said, received their instructions from Somersetshire—the same source as they in the Rhinns had received it long ago—and his experience of the new system with American modifications, had been a step in the wrong direction. He maintained that if they made cheese according to Mr. Harris' instructions they had an article that would not keep, and, whatever the state of the market might be, they were obliged to sell them. He thought the old system was much the best, and he advised them to stick to it. Mr. John McMaster replied that whatever might be wrong with the cheese, they could not lay the blame on the system of making. He believed Mr. Harris' system to be a good one, and pointed out to the worthy chairman that the Canadians had by their method beaten them on their own ground, as, with the exception of a few prime Somerset-made cheese, the Canadian products commanded the highest prices in the London market. That was sufficent proof that they had still something to learn; and his experience of Mr. Harris' method had been the opposite of Colonel McDowall's, as his cheese had never kept better, or been of a better quality. But the most convincing argument in favor of the Canadian system is found in the fact that the prize takers among the cheese makers at the fair mentioned were with a single exception, those whom Mr. Harris instructed in making their cheese.

The New Traction Engine.

From the Ontario Reformer, August 28th.

The New Traction Engine mentioned in a late issue, arrived in town early Monday morning in a drenching rain, which continued until three p. m. The roads were very muddy, and many thought the New Traction could not come up town through the mud; but about half past three, steam was let on, and the little iron horse started for the town. Some loads of coal had been brought from the lake, and met the engine on Simcoe street. The horses were taken from the waggons and connection made to the engine by chains, until a load of eleven tons was made up of coal, waggons, and boys and men, and yet with only 40 lbs. of steam pressure, the load was taken to the gate of the Jos. Hall Machine Works. No difficulty was experienced in turning the corner at the Town Hall. The following day four holes were dug in the foundry yard 1½ feet deep, and the engine steamed into them and stopped, when steam was let on again, it passed out both forward and backward without any difficulty. This seemed a very severe test, but Mr. Galloway then directed that a hardwood scantling eight inches square be laid in front of the holes, and the engine again steamed into them and stopped, started again and passed over the scantling. Still not satisfied, Mr. Galloway directed that the engine be backed over the scantling into and out of the holes. These very severe tests were gone through with twenty times or more and were easily effected. The Governor Belt was then taken off and the engine driven at the rate of seven miles per hour. Two New Model Treshers and a Dingee Horse power were then chained together and hitched behind the engine and tender, and started for the G. T. R. Station. On its way it turned three right angles and steamed its load up under the crane at the station, uncoupled, turned around and returned to the Hall Works as readily as a team of horses. Yesterday loads of coal, pig iron, a thresher, and an ordinary portable engine were coupled together, making 21 tons 700 pounds. Thirty boys climbed into the waggons, making a load of twenty-three tons, not counting the engine. Steam was let on and in a moment the train was in motion. Mr. Galloway assures us that he could readily have drawn thirty tons to the station had the coal and water tender been strong enough to have chained the load to, so that a constant supply of water could have been pumped into the boiler, and that less than one-fourth or a ton of coal he could have hauled it to the lake, with only a ten horse-power engine. Mr. Galloway, the mechanical superintendent of the Hall Works, deserves great credit for the manner in which he conducted all the various experiments. Although he had not handled a Traction Engine for nearly 15 years, he brought it up from the station, through the mud, drawing eleven tons, without an accident of any kind. He showed perfect control of the engine and good judgment in testing its capacity. While familiar with the developments in Traction Engines in Great Britain and the United States, he assures us that this engine is infinitely in advance of any he has ever seen or heard of. From our standpoint this engine marks an important era in the use of steam power, hardly second to the Railway Engine. It has more than fulfilled the claims we set forth in a late issue. The proprietors of the Jos. Hall Machine Works have the exclusive control of the patent for Canada for 15 years.

We learn that a second engine has been purchased from Messrs. Wood, Taber & Morse, and is now on the way here for the exhibition at London and other places, and the one here will be shown at Toronto.

THIS TRULY WONDERFUL MOTIVE POWER GIVES TO THE HALL WORKS THE VERY FIRST POSITION IN THE DOMINION AS BUILDERS OF AGRICULTURAL MACHINERY. The New Model Thresher, the Hall Thresher, the Collins Patent Clover Thresher, the Pitt's Planet, California, and Dingee Horse Powers (mounted and down,) the Oshawa Engine, the Rubicon Traction Engine, Walrath's Patent Straw Burning Engine, with and without traction attachment, Reapers, Mowers, Seeders, Grain Drills, Coal and Water Tenders, &c., all of the very best models, make a list that no other establishment in the Dominion of Canada, or even in the United States, can offer to the farmers. To Oshawa it means more than we have space in this issue to foretell.

Just as we are going to press the little steam horse has started with its coal and water tender and a New Model Thresher, for the top of the high hill north of Whitby town.

Cornice Poles and Curtain Chains just received at A. Clegg's cheaper than ever.

Smokers will further their own interest by insisting upon having the "Cable," or "El Padre" brands of cigars which have stood the test for a quarter of a century, and yet allow greedy and unscrupulous dealers to persuade them to take other brands which pays them a larger profit, the consumer being a loser thereby. 13d-25w

My Saint.

My saint! As I name her I fancy you thinking
Of some gracious woman, tall, stately, and fair,
Who bears her serenely, while wearing full queenly
The beautiful crown of her burnished brown hair.

It grieves me, believe me, to slight your ideal,
Your vision is one for an artist to paint;
But its loveliness vainly would strive to show plainly
The form and the face and the charm of my saint.

Is she young? Is she old? I am puzzled to tell you;
Her age is the last thing one thinks of, you see.
Should you reckon by trouble, her years have known double
The sorrow life portions to you and to me.
Still her tones are so steady, her smile is so ready,
The glance of her eye is so fearless and brave,
Few note the looks faded, the pale brow invaded,
By lines that no chisel but pain's can engrave.

The saints, whom we women have reverenced for ages,
Spent hours in prayer at the altar and shrine;
My saint in brief snatches her time for prayer catches,
By heart-throbs cries out to the helper divine.
So busy for others, worn sisters, and mothers,
Whose burdens she aids them to lift as she can;
In love to the neighbor in lowliest labor,
She serves the dear Lord in a service to man.

Not dimpled and dainty, ah! no. In life's battle
Who fights, though a victor, is guerdoned with scars.
The old wounds awaking, oft hurt to heart-breaking;
How pink and white beauty such agony mars.
But children adore her, the babies climb o'er her,
The weary sob out their distress on her breast,
And her plain little dwelling, it goes without telling,
Is cosy and curtained and warm as a nest.

She hasn't much money, this saint of my praising,
But never her loaf is too small to be shared.
Of her best she is giving while patiently living;
The one household darling who could not be spared.
Oh, far be the day when the angels shall call her;
At the thought, at the presage, my spirit grows faint;
The way would be dreary, once shorn of the cheery,
The dear, quiet presence I christen My Saint.

—Margaret E. Sangster.

A SOLDIER'S BRIDE.

"Well, pa, what news to-day?" asked a lovely girl, as Colonel Metcalf entered the bungalow, looking careworn and anxious. "Have our men responded to your appeal? Do you think they will remain loyal and true?"

"Yes, Dora; at least I suppose they will," he said dejectedly; "but treachery and disloyalty are abroad. I wish I had sent you home to England when your mother died."

"Don't fret on my account, papa," she said, as she threw her arms around his bronzed neck: "our brave fellows who have followed us so often to victory will never desert their colors, and not a hand would they raise against their colonel's daughter."

"Heaven grant that you are right," he said wearily. "To-morrow I will send you into Lucknow under escort. Your safety will then be assured, darling."

"And what of yours?" she asked as she kissed away a solitary tear, the first he had shed for years, which rolled down his manly cheek.

"I am colonel of the 24th, and my place is at the head of my men," he said proudly; "but here comes the man of all others that I trust in this hour of danger."

"Shall I leave you now, papa," asked Dora.

"No, my pet," he replied, as he stroked her silken braids. "He has known you from your infancy, an it's the man I have selected to command the escort to Lucknow."

As he spoke a tall, soldierly man entered and saluted Colonel Metcalf, and then made a low obeisance to Dora.

"Well, Major Ram Singh, you see I am trying to forget trouble in the society of my daughter," said the colonel; "she is more precious to me than diamonds."

"And has nothing to fear," said the major in good English, which he spoke fluently; "there is not a man in the regiment who would not fight to the death for the sweet missie."

Colonel Metcalf held out his hand in a frank, soldierly manner, which the other took, but his eyes could not meet those of Dora, who seemed trying to fathom his innermost thoughts.

"To-morrow at five you will have the escort ready, major," said the colonel, "she will travel by palanquin."

"Oh, let me ride Nimrod, dear papa," Dora pleaded; "if anything should happen I would have a chance of escape left open to me."

"But nothing will," said Ram Singh, quickly, unable, however, notwithstanding this remonstrance to meet her gentle eyes. "The heat will be too great for you, missie."

"I shall ride," she replied, decisively, "and go well armed. To shut oneself up in a palkee when disloyal soldiers swarm the country-side would not be prudent on the part of a soldier's daughter."

"As you please, Dora," remarked her father fondly; and turning once more to Ram Singh, he said: "To-morrow morning at five, remember."

The answer was a low bow, to indicate his obedience to his chief's commands.

"Ram Singh," said Dora earnestly, "my father is about to entrust me to your care; I am motherless and only a girl; treason is abroad, and many a countryman and countrywoman of mine have suffered already. But tell your men and take it to heart yourself, that if the mutineers did not leave one European alive in India, yet England's might is not the less able to reach the murderers. Your countrymen will yet know what it is to defy a nation which met single handed a whole world in arms."

"Spoken like a soldier's daughter," said her father, proudly, when Ram Singh, with averted face, a pallor under his dusky hue, had left; "but surely you do not suspect Ram Singh's fidelity?"

If he had only known that at that very moment the Oriental was muttering to himself:

"To-morrow must never come to him, and I must taste the sweets of her lips. Englishmen will die, but Dora Metcalf will enter my harem."

"Fidelity," said Dora earnestly. "Oh, papa, trust nobody now. Fly with me. Let every English officer withdraw at once. Trust to my woman's instincts, I implore you."

And in her anxiety she knelt at his feet to enforce her pleadings.

"Dora, whatever happens will be Heaven's permission. I have grown up from boyhood almost, with the old corps. To see its colors flapping and to listen to the martial music of its band has filled me ever with delight. No, my darling, I cannot leave my post."

To avoid further solicitation at her hands, for it always pained him to refuse her anything, he left the bungalow, hastily.

Ten minutes later Dora, who had buried her face in the cushions to have a good cry, was aroused by a cheery voice saying:

"Well, Dora, I never knew you to cry before. What is the matter, darling? Has the pater been scolding you or any of our men annoying you?"

Rising, she threw herself on her lover's breast, saying brokenly:

"Oh, Jack, I am so unhappy."

"Why? Oh, I know. You've been reading the accounts in the papers about the doings of these black demons."

"It is not that, Jack," she said, drying her eyes and returning his kisses. "Papa wishes to send me to Lucknow to-morrow morning under an escort commanded by Ram Singh."

"A wise resolve, my sweet pet," said Jack Spencer, gravely. "He deserves my thanks for that. You will be safer there than at Setapore."

"But papa and you will be exposed to peril."

"It is a soldier's lot to brave danger, dear Dora. Our men are still loyal, thank Heaven!"

"How long will they remain so, Jack? Do prevail upon papa to withdraw all the Europeans to Lucknow."

"Why, you simple little goose, do you want Ensign Jack Spencer, who adores you, to get the severest reprimand he ever got in his life? The pater would call me a coward if I did what you wish."

"Then you don't love me," she pouted.

"Don't I though!" he replied, laughing, as he gave her a bear-like hug. "I'd like to see anyone else dispute that fact, you little witch of an unbeliever."

"Papa might let you coax him into letting you take charge of the escort," she pleaded with a strange persistence.

"It is useless, Dora," he sighed. "I'd forfeit a whole year's pay and seniority for the chance of placing you in safety. See here, Dora, do you not know one thing?"

"Well, Jack Solomon the Wise, what is that?" she said in a more sprightly tone, somewhat modified by his words.

"It is owing to the presence of English officers at Setapore that the native regiments have not mutinied. That is an unanswerable fact, and quite upsets all your wily arguments."

"Oh, Jack, then get papa to let me stop here."

"I declare, there's no pleasing you," he laughed. "But it was ever a woman's province to change her mind. No, my willful little woman, you must go."

She gave in pleading at last, and it was arranged that she and her lover were to spend that last evening together in love's sweet converse, for in those troublous times every officer of Sepoys carried his life in his hand, and no man could say what a single day might bring forth.

Seated in the verandah of the bungalow—the month was May—she endeavored to read one of Mudie's novels, a box of which reached her every quarter, but her mind was not with heroes or heroines.

"Can so fair a world be polluted by such wretches as I read of almost every day?" she murmured. "Brave men, gentle women, helpless children, massacred in cold blood!"

Alas! it was only too true, for in the memorable year of 1857 rebellion stalked through the land, and a crusade of butchery was inaugurated.

"The sun shines, the trees wave their branches, and all nature is bright," she thought, as she gazed upon the fair scene; "and yet at this moment death and destruction walk abroad, seeking fresh victims."

Palm trees rustled their spear-like leaves, and the broad-leaved banana bowed its satiny fronds, whilst birds of bright plumage flew about screaming, as if in salutation of each other, and monkeys gamboled in an adjoining grove embowering a Mahommedan mosque.

Native servants, in spotless linen, moved about with catlike tread, and Dora thought they looked meaningly a each other, for when alarm is in the air, one is prone to invest every object with suspicion.

"Thank Heaven another day has passed in safety!" said the colonel as he and Jack Spencer came on to the verandah.

"Yes, sir, that is a matter of gratitude to Providence," Jack replied. "I think we can look forward to a quiet evening."

"Perhaps," said the colonel, meaningly. "Mind, not a word to Dora of what the havildar said."

"Trust me, colonel; the arms are all under lock and key. Any attempt to seize them would give us timely warning. Had you not better have the horses saddled and kept in readiness?"

"A good idea. Just run around, Spencer, and tell the syces to do so. All my pistols are loaded, and my sword hangs where I can put my hand on it at any moment."

Having arranged these matters, the little party sat down to dinner, Dora little dreaming that her father was forcing himself to eat, whilst every morsel was a pain to him.

"Do sing us something, Dora," said Jack, when the meal was over, and the pair had adjourned to the drawing-room, leaving the colonel to enjoy a weed in the garden as was his wont.

"I'll give you 'Rule Britannia,' if anything," she said, smiling; "it is a patriotic song, and one suited to these times."

"All right, darling; and won't I give lungs to the chorus, that's all!"

Jack was as good as his word and was singing in the voice of a stentor; "Britons never will be slaves," when shots were heard outside, and before they could realise the awful fact that the mutiny had begun, Colonel Metcalf staggered in, saying hoarsely:

"Jack, save Dora. I'm done for."

Having spoken these his last words, he fell to the floor dead.

Jack Spencer knelt down and felt his friend's heart to see if any sign of life existed, while Dora, her hands pressed to her temples, stood looking fixedly at the scene, as if she had been turned into stone.

"Poor fellow!" murmured Jack, "he's gone. Now to save Dora. It was his parting command; and only for that I would rush into their midst, the cowards, avenge him, and sell my life dearly."

"Sahib!" cried Dora's ayah or nurse, rushing in, "save missie. Sepoys come—plenty; shoot; kill."

Seizing Dora in his arms he rushed to the stables, and found the groom waiting with the horses already saddled.

A great sob escaped from Dora, and with it came the return of consciousness.

"Mount before me, Dora; not a moment is to be lost."

"No, no, Jack; I will ride Nimrod; you take poor father's charger."

"You know what has happened, Dora?" he asked as he saw to the girts. "I would never have deserted him while he lived."

She bowed her head, saying "Yes," gulping down her tears, for she was a brave girl, and knew that grief would not bring her father to life again.

The pair leaped their horses over the low mud wall that encircled the bungalow, and made for the high road leading to Lucknow.

Flames lit up the sky in various directions, and musket-shots in volleys disturbed the stillness of the coming night. Bullets whistled past the ears of the fugitives, but luckily without hitting them.

It was indeed a ride for dear life; murder lurked everywhere, and fierce shouts rent the air as the murdered corpses of Europeans were dragged forth and exposed to the view of the rabble soldiery.

On and on went the lovers, keeping close together, so that they might render each service if needed.

They were nearly clear of the station of Setapore, when, in passing a tope, or grove of trees, they fell upon an ambuscade, and quite a fusilade of musketry was opened upon them.

Jack uttered an exclamation of pain, but kept his saddle, saying in answer to Dora's inquiry:

"Only a flesh wound. We must ride for our lives now."

And ride they did, faster than they ever had before, objects seeming to fly past them.

After a while Jack drew rein, and reeling in his saddle, he said with a groan:

"Dora, save yourself. Good by. God bless you, darling."

The next moment he fell to the earth, and almost as quickly Dora had dismounted and was kneeling at his side.

"Jack, speak to me, oh, say that you are not dead," she cried as she leant over his prostrate body, not thinking of danger in her loving solicitude for him.

"We can only die together," she said, as she heard the approach of a body of horse. "It will be a short, quick pang, and then I will join dear father and mother in heaven."

"Who's there?" asked a voice in English.

"Dora Metcalf," she cried. "Save Ensign Spencer—for the love of Heaven, do."

As if Providence had ordained that her devotion to her lover should not go unrewarded, the horsemen turned out to be friends.

A squadron of staunch, loyal sowars, native light cavalry, were escorting their officers to Lucknow.

Jack Spencer was placed before one of the sowars, whilst Dora, remounting, joined the cavalcade.

When the minarets of Lucknow, that city of mosques and palaces, loomed into view, Dora knew that she and her lover were saved, and she raised her eyes heavenward in mute thanks.

Here Jack recovered from his wound and was able, as a brave soldier, to take part in the splendid defence of the residency.

But before that event came off he received a letter from England telling him that he was now Sir John Spencer, his uncle having died.

"Dora, will you be my wife?" asked Jack. "We are on the eve of a great struggle; if anything happens to me you will be provided for."

"Yes, Jack, I will," she answered sweetly, "because I love you."

They were wed amid the thunder of cannon, the rattling of musketry, and the bursting of shells.

And Dora Metcalf, arrayed in simple white, without bridesmaids or orange blossoms, became "A Soldier's Bride."

Friends and patrons of the EVENING EXAMINER are requested to use the telephone in communicating items of news which may come under their notice. We should be glad to avail ourselves of any information transmitted in that way before 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Ward Committees will meet every night till polling day.

That Gun.

In an item published in the EXAMINER yesterday it was inadvertently stated that the rifle with which Mr. McIntyre made such excellent shooting was purchased from Kingan Bros. This was an error, the weapon having been bought from Mr. Melville Millar, hardware merchant, of George street.

Presentation.

Mr. Joseph Armstrong, formerly an employee of Messrs Hackett & Johnston, of this town, and lately with Danford Roche & Co., of Toronto, when leaving the latter firm to go to Cobourg, was presented by his fellow employees with a handsome napkin ring, a gold tooth pick and a dressing case, as a mark of the esteem in which he was held by them.

Scott Act Mass Meeting.

Another mass meeting will be held on Thursday evening at the Opera House, to be addressed by Mr. John A. Nicholls. An invitation has been sent to Prof. Richardson to be present, offering him equal time if he will debate the question with one of the Scott Act supporters on Thursday night. As "Prof." Richardson has no other engagements this week, according to his own statement, the Scott Act men claim that if he refuses the offer it will be because he is afraid to meet them.

Spectacles.

Mr. B. Laurance, the eminent English optician, is now in Peterborough for a few days for the purpose of appointing agents for his firm, as he has done in every principal place on his way from Halifax, choosing business men of the highest standing, generally chemists, who will keep in stock every variety of spectacles, eye glasses, and the different appliances that the eyes demand. In fact the agent keeping his lenses will have a positive miniature optician's stock, equal in variety to that found in leading establishments in Great Britain. This firm have in every town in the three kingdom's agents for their lenses, and the same system is being carried out in Canada These spectacles are recommended by the Presidents, Vice-Presidents, Ex-Presidents and Ex-Vice-Presidents of the Medical Association of Canada; the President of the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Quebec; the Dean of the Medical Faculty of Laval University; the President and ex-President of the Medical Council of Nova Scotia, &c., &c. Mr. Laurance has also received testimonials from some of the professional gentlemen of our town two of which, from Dr. Kincaid and Dr. McCrea, we publish herewith. Mr. John McKee, Druggist, will be the representative of the firm in Peterborough, and his standing alone would be a sufficient guarantee. During his short stay here B. Laurance will give him the benefit of his experience and may be consulted there gratuitously, the unerring accuracy of which Dr. McCrea speaks so forcibly enables him to select at once the lense best adapted to the eyes he is suiting. This is an opportunity which should not be lost by those who require aid for their sight, and who would regret hereafter if they allowed Mr. Laurance to leave without availing themselves of his services. The following are the two testimonials to which we referred above:

PETERBOROUGH, DEC. 12, 1883.

I take very great pleasure in stating that I consider B. Laurance, Esq., one of the most skilful and practical oculists with whom I have ever met. His knowledge of the eye is such that he cannot fail to give complete satisfaction to those who patronise him.

R. KINCAID, M. D., &c.

PETERBOROUGH, DEC. 12, 1883.

B. Laurance, Esq.:

SIR,—I find the greatest satisfaction from the use of the glasses I procured from you this morning. I have tried them in reading print of various sizes, and can read any paper or book better with them than with any glasses I ever tried before. The unerring manner in which you select the lenses is really marvellous.

PETERBOROUGH V. LINDSAY.

Despite the threatening weather this morning the Peterborough baseball nine left for Lindsay on the 10.25 train. It is hardly likely, however, that with the prevailing weather, the match will come off to-day, but at all events the Lindsays cannot say the Peterboroughs did not come to time.

THE CHAMPIONSHIP MATCH.

The Cheekers of Beaverton have communicated with the Secretary of the Peterboroughs asking a postponement of the championship match for two weeks. A reply has been sent stating that the home club could not assent to this, but would play them on any day next week they like to name.

What We May Expect.

Prob'e Weather Promises.

The following forecast of the weather for this district for the 24 hours from 1 a. m. to-day is received from the Toronto Meterological office:—Strong winds and moderate gales shifting to south-west and north-west; generally cloudy and showery to-day; finer to-morrow.

Parlor Roller Rink.

The attention of devotees of roller skating are again reminded that the Parlor Roller Rink, Water street, will be reopened on Thursday (to-morrow). During the holidays the floor has been placed in first-rate condition, and such improvements effected as seemed necessary to make this rink the best equipped place of amusement of its kind in the province. The management will pay particular attention to the order of the rink. The slightest indication of unseemly levity, unruly conduct or misconduct of any kind will not be allowed, and no person not on his or her good behaviour in every respect, is desired or will be allowed to be a patron or frequenter. Open morning, afternoon and evening. Admission 10 cents. Skates extra.

Back to His Old Love.

Mr. James J. Sheehy is now installed in his neat, well-stocked and handsome dry goods and gents' furnishings store, George street, next door to Wm. Lech's fur store. Although only open for a few days Mr. Sheehy is doing an excellent business, the courtesy, accommodating disposition and knowledge of business he has exhibited in his past relations with the public, coupled with the fact of his stock being all fresh, new and cheap, accounting for the popularity of the new establishment. Mr. Sheehy is neatly fitting up commodious rooms in the rear of his store for dressmaking purposes. This presents a good opportunity for some dressmaker to secure most desirable premises.

A Splendid Stock.

While calling at Mr. B. Shortly's harness rooms, George street, our reporter was much impressed by the thoroughly complete nature of the stock exhibited. This consisted of a large array of double and single harness, draught and pleasure harness, saddles, bridles, horse-blankets, carriage rugs, nets, whips and in fact a full supply of horse furnishings. The trunks, valises, hand-bags, etc., make a very fine display. Every department is unusually full and complete and every care has been bestowed upon the purchase and manufacture of these goods. Never before has this popular establishment been better equipped for meeting the demands of its numerous customers, while the prices defy successful competition.

Personal.

His Grace, Archbishop Lynch, accompanied by Bishop Mathony and Rev. Father Laurent, of Toronto, was in town yesterday.

Mr. J. Morrow, Inspector of Inland Revenue, Toronto, is paying the Peterborough officials a visit to-day.

His Lordship, Bishop Jamot, left last night for Toronto for the purpose of securing much needed rest. He is recovering rapidly from his recent attack of illness.

1 o'clock	58°	28.85°
3 o'clock	51°	28.90°

Serious Accident.

As Mr. D. Truscott, of South Monaghan, with his family, was driving to the Methodist church at Bensfort his horses became frightened and ran away, upsetting the carriage and throwing out the occupants. Three of Mr. Truscott's daughters were seriously injured, others less severely, while the carriage was completely wrecked. The injured ladies are progressing favorably under medical care.

Gigantic Journalism.

The Toronto Globe comes to hand to-day in a handsomely lithographed cover of striking and artistic design, and containing thirty-six pages, bearing to the world, in addition to the usual quota of telegraphic and local intelligence, the mammoth advertisements of enterprising manufacturers and merchants in every town and city in the Dominion, who avail themselves of the Globe's enterprise by taking this method of reaching the thousands of people who will attend the Great Industrial Fair. The following figures, which are given on the editorial page of the issue will give some idea of the magnitude of this journalistic enterprize.

"There are printed of this paper thirty-five thousand copies. The weight of the paper used was nine and a half tons. The copies, if laid in a pile folded as they come from the press, would reach half a mile high and 275 feet beyond. If laid in a continuous string, page by page, they would reach nearly 255 miles, or as far as from Toronto past Lake Nipissing to Lake Temiscamingue or from Toronto in an air line to fifty miles beyond Detroit."

In regard to its circulation the Globe further says:—

"The thirty-five thousand copies of this day's Globe will go to our regular readers in every Province of the Dominion, in every State of the American Union, in every Kingdom and Principality in the United Kingdom, in all of the British Colonies and possessions, and in almost every other country under the sun. The paper will be regarded as an evidence of the energy and "go" of the merchants and manufacturers of Canada, as a testimonial to their enterprise, and there is no doubt it will be a revelation to many as to the amount of business done, and to be done, at this Exhibition. A paper like this going into the hands of the capitalist or business man will give him more real and more trustworthy information than he can glean by any means elsewhere. It is, in a word, an exemplification of Canadian business, and as such it may safely challenge comparison with anything which any other community may attempt."

It might be added that it will also be regarded as an evidence of the "energy and go" of what has long been recognized on all hands, as the first newspaper of the Dominion.

Don't be Duped.

Smokers will further their own interest by insisting upon having the "Cable", or "El Padre" brands of cigars which have stood the for a quarter of a century, and not allow greedy and unscrupulous dealers to persuade them to take other brands which pays them a larger profit, the consumer being a loser thereby. 13d-25w

The Provincial Exhibition.

The Rainy Weather has a Depressing Effect on the Opening.

LONDON, Sept. 8.—The opening of the Provincial Exhibition to the public has taken place under very depressing circumstances. At an early hour this morning it commenced to rain, and the steady downpour never ceased till dark. The grounds were consequently nearly deserted except by the officers and employes of the Agricultural Association, and those in charge of the cattle and other exhibits. The secretary now finds that the total number of entries foots up to 15,000, of which over nine hundred are in the horse classes. The stabling accommodation is of course not equal to the occasion, and a large number of both horses and cattle are quartered in various parts of the city. The Council have ordered the erection of twenty more horse stalls, but this will not help matters much.

Giroux & Sullivan

The Daily Examiner.

THURSDAY, SEPT. 10, 1885.

Personal.

Mr. Geo. Goodwin, of Ottawa, contractor for the Trent Valley Canal Works, was in town yesterday.

Mr. D. G. McBain, of Montreal, for whom Mr. B. Green, of this town, makes large cheese purchases, is in town looking after some consignments he is to get from the factories in this locality.

Mr. and Mrs. Graham, Mrs. Garbutt and Mrs. McKibbin and Mr. James Stewart, of Lakefield, left for the London Provincial Exhibition to-day.

Woven Wire Spring Beds, warranted; only $5.00, and a good line of Mattresses and Feather Pillows at A. Clegg's.

Court House Park.

The Horticultural Society is not easily wearied with well doing. One would have thought that the splendid improvements made the past season would be enough for one summer, but the work still goes on. A first-rate gardener is now engagaed in laying out and constructing some eight or nine new flower plots in different parts of the lawn. The work is done thoroughly. The turf is removed from the bed as outlined, and the soil to the depth of about eighteen inches dug out, carted away and its place supplied with soil of the proper degree of fertility. The plots will be of different designs, and some of them will be planted with bulbs this fall, ready to burst into growth in the early spring.

Powell & Jones Stove Works.

The work of construction on the fine buildings for these works, which have risen, as Milton would say, "like an exhalation," is about completed. The bricklayers have finished and a felt and gravel roof has been placed upon the finishing department. The wing containing the boiler and engine room and machinery has been covered by Mr. D. Breeze, the job requiring the use of 2,112 lbs. of galvanized iron. Mr. Breeze has also secured the contract for roofing the moulding shop with Canada plate, of which fifty boxes, containing 2,500 plates, will be used. The work will be begun to-morrow and it is pretty certain that it will be completed on Monday evening and a good job made of it, too. At the same time the work of fitting up the interior of the building goes on apace and in a very few days the manufacture of stoves will be begun.

A Coincidence.

Yesterday afternoon a horse and buggy belonging to Mr. William Hewson, who lives three miles west of Keene, suddenly and mysteriously disappeared. A hired man in Mr. Hewson's employ disappeared about the same time. Search was at once instituted and it was found that the horse and buggy had gone east, and a sharp lookout is being kept for it. Mr. Hewson expects to hear of his horse and hireling turning up before many days. Since the foregoing was written it has been learned that the horse and the hireling were in town yesterday, and that the later was endeavouring to dispose of the rig and horse for $40 in different places. Chief Johnston, hearing of the matter, made search for him, but he had evidently gone. Mr. Hewson is in town to-day looking for his missing man and rig and by the advice of Chief Constable Johnston has telegraphed to Lindsay and other places to be on the look-out for them.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The publisher of THE EXAMINER does not hold himself responsible for the facts asserted, nor the opinions expressed by correspondents.]

The Exemption Question.

Mr. Lech on Mayor Cox's Offer.

To the Editor of THE EXAMINER:

SIR,—When the meeting was called for the consideration of the by-law exempting the Dickson Company from taxation, I had not the least idea that the same would end in such a disgraceful manner. I do not think that anything I forwarded against the by-law should have offended Mr. Cox, as I have on all occasions held the same views as sound in principle. Any business shirking to bear the burden of taxation, to make business profitable to them, seems to my mind as beginning in a crippled condition. The Auburn Woollen mills serves as an illustration in the case of failure. But to show Mr. Cox as well as the public that I am not acting as an obstructionist in furthering the interests of the town, ratepayers will recall the time when the building of the Carworks was up for discussion. Mr. Cox offered to take stock for $20,000 on condition of a bonus and exemption from taxation, later on, this sum Mr. Cox reduced to $10,000 stock. When Mr. Law with his stock book made a call on me I, although I debated against the bonus and exemption, subscribed $1,000 stock, which, according to my resources, I could ill afford to spare; and what about those who had been so noisy about having bonus and exemption from taxes granted—in what way did they further the prosperity of the town?—not in taking stock—oh no!

I hold it very questionable whether Mr. Cox should have personally taken the course he did to advocate interests of his own in the position as the presiding officer over our Council, and furthermore, if Mr. Cox was aware of such flagrant cases of undervaluation of taxable property, he has neglected his duty in not unearthing those any sooner, and nobody will thank him for doing it now to serve his purposes.

I was rather taken back by the onslaught Mr. Cox made on the several assessments when he charged the assessors as having perjured themselves. What about his own? Is that all sound? Mr. Cox mentions my two stores as being assessed at $9,700. Well, I only occupy one for which I am assessed, not for $4,500, as Mr. Cox showed up at the meeting, but for $5,300, and I think it is a fair valuation. With the other store I have as much to do as Mr. Cox with his stores that he has tenants in. As for the offer of Mr. Cox to find a man to buy me out it is as ridiculous as it is unreasonable and insulting, and the public will take it for what it is worth, as a bluff of the coarsest kind, as he fully well knows me to be a too active man to relinquish and alter my course of life in selling out. Personally, I would take Mr. Cox at his word, but there are other interests involved in my business more weighty than money considerations, which prevent me from accepting Mr. Cox's kind offer. My two sons, who have actively assisted in the business from the time of their leaving school, have learned the trade, and now Mr. Cox wants me to turn them out as a recognition of their services. Thank you, Mr. Cox, for your kind offer, none of all your piles of money can buy me out. The business I have since the last twenty-five years built up under the most trying circumstances, I have done with an aim, not of turning my sons out, but for them to do business after me. Mr. Cox should remember that Frederick the Great was not able as a king to buy a poor miller out who held the mill as heirloom from his forefathers, so is it in this case with buying out a fur business. If otherwise Mr. Cox is not satisfied, and he thinks I am undervaluated in my stock I am ready at any time to show by sufficient proof that it would astonish not only Mr. Cox but the public to know how it has been possible to build up a business, which I venture to say not one in a hundred in this trade could have done.

As for Mr. Cox's invitation to devise a scheme to have the Dickson Company's estate utilized for manufactories, I don't think myself under such an obligation. If Mr. Cox is afraid of investing his money when with a tariff high enough to exclude foreign competition entirely, if then, competition in our Dominion is so great and the market so glutted, as for instance the case has been and always will be, with the cotton mills, then such factories are not wanted. I have or any other manufacturer has, also, to contend with competition, and who thinks of exempting us from taxation? The rule used to be that those less favored with worldly goods went to the richer ones calling for favor, now this rule seems to be reversed. Thanking you, Mr. Editor, I remain,

Yours, &c.,
W. LECH.

Italians.

Several emigrant cars containing 400 of Italy's swarthy sons arrived at the G. T. R. station last night and laid here over night. They are railway hands, who, having been discharged from the works on the Callander extension, were on their way to work on Mr. H. J. Beemer's contract on the Quebec Central Railway. Their bivouac here made quite a corner in the liver and pig's foot market, these being edibles which, on account of their cheapness, are much affected by these toilers from the Tyrol. Another of their culinary devices is to boil chopped hay and use it for tea, sweetening the exhilarating fluid with a little sugar of the coarsest description. With such a bill of fare for their daily diet it is not a matter of surprise that out of their scanty wages of 90 cents a day on the Callander extension many of them have contrived to save considerable sums of money, but what use in the world money can be to men with the tastes and stomachs of a dog is a conundrum.

Port Hope.

Threshing an editor does not always pay. Mr. C. H. A. Williams, of Port Hope, because Mr. Wilson, of the Guide, exercised his right of deciding what was proper matter for his paper, attempted to thresh the editor. He didn't consummate his assault, and had to pay $5 and costs for the privilege of failing to "C.H.A.W." up his editorial enemy. Club law won't be so popular in Port Hope if the ready revolver insists on taking its innings. A revolver rather puts an elderly and physically weak man on an equality with a stalwart assailant, and the remembrance of the fact may tend to place pugnacious Port Hopers in harmony with the usages of civilised society.

Lindsay District Camp Meeting.

We have been requested to publish the following notice:—

The Lindsay District Camp Meeting, of the Methodist Church, will commence Wednesday, Sept. 16th, in Mr. Webster's grove, one mile from Oakwood, and near Mariposa Station. The ministers of the district and Rev. Chas. Fish, Conference Evangelist, are to be present. Besides, a large pavilion, capable of holding 1,000 people, a provision tent for meals, &c., and private tents for rental, will be on the grounds. Accommodation will also be provided for horses. Mass meeting for children Saturday afternoon.

[illegible] dull one, no sales having taken place. There was a large number of boxes of July and August make offered. Buyers made an offer for the latter, but sellers refused to part with it, holding on for better prices. The highest offer was 7⅞ cents. There was no disposition on the part of buyers to offer for the July cheese.

Belleville.

The fall term at Albert College began Tuesday. About fifty students arrived Monday night, and all the rooms at the College are taken. The attendance it is expected this term will be larger than it has been for several years. The formal reopening took place at 2:30 in the afternoon, with prayer, and the students signed the roll.

The Methodist Tabernacle is financially embarrassed, and the bondsmen are being pressed for the settlement of a mortgage, amounting to about $19,000. The latter decline to assume the total debt of this beautiful edifice, but they are willing to subscribe liberally towards a settlement of the trouble. The congregation cannot expect more, and as these gentlemen freely lent their names in the cause of Christianity, it is now the duty of the congregation and the people of this city to save the church property from being sold. It is a church that is needed here, and its architectural beauty is a credit to the City of the Bay. The Star Assurance Company of England is pressing hard for their money, and whatever is done should be done quickly.—Ontario.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

COUNCIL MEETING.

A special meeting of the village Council was held in the Council Chamber on Monday evening the 7th inst.

Present—Councillor John Isbister in the chair, Councillors McWilliams and Cox.

Moved by Councillor McWilliams, seconded by Councillor Cox, that the Clerk is hereby instructed to write Mr. A. P. Possette and notify him that this Council will accept his offer made to them and lease mill reserve No 1 for the term of five years, with the option of buying at any time during said term, other conditions to be as in letter of August 10th.—Carried.

Moved by Councillor Cox, seconded by Councillor McWilliams, that the Clerk be instructed to write to the Village Solicitor and have the lease of mill race No. 1 from Mr. Poussette to this Council, prepared and lay it before the Council at the next regular meeting.—Carried.

Moved by Councillor McWilliams, seconded by Councillor Cox, that this Council do now adjourn to meet at the call of the Reeve.—Carried.

CAMPING.

Notwithstanding the cold weather hardly a day passes that one or more camping parties do not pass through the village on their way up the lakes camping. Most of them consist of gentlemen only bent on sport, but quite a number of ladies are not afraid to brave our autumn winds and storms and will be rewarded by the grand appearance of the Islands which are ablaze with autumn colors.

COUNTY IMPROVEMENTS.

The contractors for painting the iron bridge have made a start and we may soon expect to see a change from the dull heavy appearance it now presents.

ILLUMINATION.

The committee appointed to look after the illumination of the islands and canoe parade on the evening of the civic holiday, and which was prevented by rain, held a meeting on Tuesday afternoon, and decided to have it next Friday evening, the 11th. Three valuable prizes are offered for the best illuminated canoe, and two prizes are put apart for the best canoe decorated and paddled by boys under 16. As many of our citizens went to great trouble to make the illumination on the river a success, there should be a good turn out on Friday night if the weather is favorable. The islands and shores will also be lit up; canoe parade will begin at 8.30 p.m.

ATTEMPTED PRACTICAL JOKE.

A practical joker in the village proposed on Sunday afternoon to go down to the scene of the explosion and spread the report that some of the dynamite had been found still unexploded, then explode a small cartridge at a safe distance off among the bushes, but was persuaded to give up the idea. What a scatteration there would have been among the "relic hunters" and curious parties who thronged the neighborhood of the disaster when they heard the report, and what good time would have been made on the homeward track.

There was no meeting of the school board on Tuesday evening, the night being so stormy, a quorum did not attend.

Saskatchewan Coal.

The manager of the Saskatchewan Coal and Navigation Company states that the Galt Railroad was completed from Dunmore to Lethbridge on the 25th August, and that 109 miles of track had been laid in 43 days. Lethbridge is the location of the mines. Shipments of coal are expected to arrive in Winnipeg early in September, and the price is given at $7.50 per ton on board car, and $8 delivered in that city.

The Riel Appeal Refused.

Probable Appeal to the Privy Council—No Stock Taken in the Insanity Plea—Making it Easy for Other Prisoners.

WINNIPEG, Man., Sept. 9.—Judge Richardson's decision was given in the Manitoba Court to-day, refusing the appeal in the Riel case. An appeal will probably be taken to the Privy Council. The judges take no stock in the insanity plea.

Easy on Other Prisoners.

WINNIPEG, Sept. 9. A Regina despatch says:—Yesterday the following prisoners were brought into court and arraigned on charges of treason felony: Louis Goulet, Chas. Bremner, James Bremner, William Frank, Henry Sayer, Baptiste Sayer, and White Blanket. Mr. T. C. Johnston appeared for the prisoners. Goulet was charged by Captain Younge as being inculpated in the Frog Lake troubles. The prisoner pleaded not guilty. The prosecuting counsel stated that the Crown did not wish to prosecute harshly. Goulet would be discharged on his own recognizance. If he behaves himself in future he would be allowed to go free.

A Terrible Tornado.

A Town in Ohio Almost Swept from the Earth.

SPRINGFIELD, O., Sept. 9.—A terrible cyclone struck Washington, a town of 4,000 inhabitants, 25 miles west of here, at eight o'clock last evening, and almost literally swept it from the earth.

The tornado whirled up Court street, the main business thoroughfare, and ruined almost every business block on it, at least 40 or fifty in all. Hardly a private residence in the town escaped, fully four hundred buildings going down. So far fifteen bodies have been recovered from the debris of various ruined buildings. Probably as many more will be found.

"The movement led by Mohammed Ahmed, the Mahdi," says Mr. Kelly, the Soudan correspondent of the London News, "is a curious admixture of religious, political and social fanaticism. It is at once a war against the Turk, the infidel, and that common enemy of disinherited humanity—the man of property. Under the new dispensation there are to be no poor and no rich. Every one is to have a little and no one too much. The central idea of the movement may be described with sufficient accuracy as an effort to redistribute surplus property. The new formula would then run—all surplus property is robbery; and with this amendment the new champion of Islam might strike hands with the French and German Socialists as a man after their own hearts, only somewhat more thorough."

The Daily Examiner.

THURSDAY, SEPT. 10, 1885.

THE TESTIMONIAL NUISANCE.

We are frequently called upon to chronicle presentations of gifts and addresses of various kinds, in the columns of the EXAMINER. We are also, like mostly all the business men on the main street of a stirring town, besought with unfailing regularity to contribute our quota to the cost of these testimonials on almost every occasion.

Now, while we aver our readiness to sympathize both with voice and purse in all endeavors to show public and private appreciation of useful and laudable efforts in doing good, we are decidedly opposed to the present method of bestowing gifts and making addresses to men and women in every rank and station in life.

Some people seem to regard the getting up of presentations as their only proper object in this world. They spare nobody. Desirous as they are of a little cheap glory, they pull the strings, talk the affair over with a few friends, write out the heading of a subscription list, extol the virtues of the departing clerk or saleswoman, and behold the thing is done! An individual who comes to you with his mind made up to extort a dollar for any object, has an immense advantage over the person who has paid no attention to the subject, and is not prepared to be called niggardly or mean or even peculiar.

No sooner has Mr. Brown got another situation in an office, or Mr. Jones been promoted to a more lucrative post, or Miss Thompson ceases her connection with the firm of White, Bro. & Co., than these toadies arrange to give a banquet and make a presentation to their friend before his departure. He may not have been very much beloved, he may not even have been noted for diligence in the discharge of his duties; that, however, is of small moment! Mr. Johnson and Miss Timkins, their predecessors, received tokens of "affection and esteem," and so an exception in this case is impossible! So the presentation and the buncombe address follow as a matter of course.

A precisely similar state of things exists in the numerous benevolent and other societies throughout the country. "The Worthy Knights" desire to honor their Illustrious and Worthy Past Chief Counsellor, who has so ably filled the duties of chairman during the past term, and has been instrumental in bringing within the magic circle so many other "Worthy Knights." So Brother Judson gets his reward, and Brothers Budson and Hudson, who follow him in office, are certain to feel eternal obloquy, unless the lodge honours them in the same way and bestows the Past Chief Counsellor's Jewel and the same amount of laudation and admiration upon each one of them in turn.

Of course, people frequently smart under these afflictions, these constant demands for subscriptions for brother so-and-so's epergue or gold watch or service of plate, but they have not the moral courage to resist these appeals. These departing citizens, whom it is proposed to honour, are better off by the removal; they move in a higher circle than most of those who contribute from scanty means to the presentation in their honour, but the habits, the usages of polite society, which impel the promoter to make addresses and bestow gifts, cannot be opposed except by very strong-minded men, indeed, and so the evil custom continues. The honesty, the the genialty, the goodness of our departing friend are expatiated upon ad nauseam. These things must be suitably acknowledged and so the hat is passed around and the shekels raked in. Undoubtedly presentations have their proper place. They can serve a good purpose. They may be offered out of goodness of the heart, not as a reward for duty performed, not because others under similar circumstances, so received them, not to pamper silly pride, but as a genuine token of esteem and good will, as a memento of regard and as a proof that the individuals who received them were, indeed, useful in their day and generation, and leave behind them the fragrance of their good deeds on behalf of the poor and suffering. But why men should be feted and honored and rewarded for fulfilling the duties for which they punctually and regularly draw a sufficient salary is a puzzle, which we humbly venture to say, "No fellow can find out."

LOVE'S FETTERS.

"I suppose it is a rude thing to say, Dick, but I wish your fair cousin was not coming to-day."

Dick Gordon smiled a little.

"You'll take that back within a week," he said, quietly.

"Shall I?" ironically. "Then Miss Ethel Darrell will prove to be a most unusual specimen of her sex."

"She's hardly what one might term a usual young lady," laughed Dick. "But you will see her at dinner."

Rex, with a bored expression, flung his half-consumed cigar among the ferns.

"I never enjoyed a month as I did the last," he said, discontentedly, "and now here comes a fair society belle to spoil things generally. I've the strongest mind to pack up my traps and take the evening train. You could make my excuses to your mother."

"I could tell her you were afraid of Ethel," laughed his friend; "but you're not going to make quite such a fool of yourself, my boy. I'll guarantee she will be willing to dispense with your reluctant gallantries. Jove!" looking at his watch, and rising with more haste than dignity, "it's later than I thought. We'll hardly have time to make ourselves presentable for dinner."

Rex followed his example, and together they were presently sauntering through the sunset toward Dick Gordon's home.

There was a silvery twilight over the earth as they went across the shaven lawn—two tall, sunbrowned, handsome youths, without a single spoil after their day's fishing. They were laughing easily, when something drew Reginald Ormsby's eyes to the balcony directly above his head, where clothed in white, with great red roses in her belt and bosom, stood the most beautiful woman he had ever seen, in the very dawn of her glorious womanhood; with lips as crimson as her roses, haughtily, delicately curved, dewy as those of a child; a broad brow, over which fell a few half-curled locks of dead-black hair, rendering its creamy whiteness but the more marked.

Somebody has said, "A moment is long enough for love to be born!" and to some that strangely-sweet and strangely-sad dream comes as sudden as the flash of the lightning and as fraught with death.

Half an hour later, Mrs. Gordon introduced him to her beautiful niece. If he was unusually silent during dinner, Dick set it down to the fact that his friend was so averse to the society of fashionable ladies. And Miss Darrell seemed calmly unconscious of his presence.

After dinner they went out to the wide balcony, where the summer moonlight lay fair as a thought of the angels.

Dick placed his cousin in a pretty willow-chair, and flung himself down on a rug which was before it. Mrs. Gordon had taken a seat which Rex had drawn near Ethel for her. For himself, he stood leaning against a stanchion, his arms folded, his lips silent, his eyes on the landscape. Dick laughed as he watched him.

"Rex," he said, lazily, a twinkle in his eyes, "will you sing for us? You were so eager to meet Ethel, and pledged yourself so willingly to help to entertain her; and he sings with the correct amount of feeling, I assure you," to Ethel; "he does."

"Oh, please do, Mr. Ormsby!" seconded Mrs. Gordon. "Ethel, my dear," to her niece, "I can promise you a treat."

Rex felt quite uncomfortable under the lifted velvet orbs. She was very fair in the moonlight, and the smile on her lips made her face very sweet and womanly.

"Pray sing us something!" she said, softly.

And he obeyed her. In the moonlight, in the hush of the summer evening, he sang one of the saddest things he knew—choosing it, he knew not why—"When the Flowing Tide Comes In."

What had induced him to sing that particular thing? Rex wondered, half-impatient of himself, as he fancied that the long, dark lashes of Miss Darrell were wet as he concluded.

"That will do, dear boy," Dick said, by way of thanking him; "that will do. When we want to feel as though some of our friends might come in with the first 'flowing tide,' we'll call on you again."

"It was so beautiful, but so very sad!" said Mrs. Gordon.

Miss Darrell gave his song the sincerest of all praise—silence.

Rex didn't pack up his things and go, nor had he the least desire to do so after that first sight of Ethel's face; and yet, three weeks after her coming, he was a very restless and miserable being, very much to Dick's silent amusement.

"I say"—the latter said to him suddenly, at last when they were walking in the lawn,—"what makes you such a muff lately? Ever since Ethel came, you've not been fit company for anyone. I'm awfully surprised that you dislike her still."

"I don't dislike her," curtly.

"Then, by Jove, I shouldn't be greatly surprised to hear that you have fallen in love with her!"

"Dick, you are insufferable! But that's just what I have been fool enough to do."

"That's a compliment to Ethel! Oh, if I dared to laugh! Ethel's pretty badly hit herself, too, or I'm blind as a—a mole. But don't you think you ought to go straight to Ethel and tell her? If she don't want you, she can tell you so, you see; and if she does—why let me give the bride away. I left her in the library, and you'll find her there alone. I'm going to walk for half-an-hour."

Rex followed the advice, and, when he had found her and told his story, she looked up at him with a strange softness in her eyes.

"I fell in love with you while you were singing, 'When the Flowing Tide Comes In,' Rex," she said placing her hand in his.

"Was I a false prophet?" Dick asked cheerfully, from outside a window, which was open very near where they were. "Pray don't mind me; I'll never tell. But, Ethel, Rex was going to pack up and go when he heard you were coming."

"He has changed his opinion of me since," said Miss Darrell, with her charming smile.

$100 Traction Engine Prize.

(From the Ontario Reformer, August 28th,)

We are informed that the manufacturers of Traction Engines, except the proprietors of the Hall Works, have declined to compete for the $100 prize offered by Capt. McMaster, Vice-President of the Toronto Industrial Association, and that, therefore, the Association are about to withdraw the prize.

The proprietors of the Joseph Hall Machine Works promptly informed the Secretary of the Association that they would compete for the prize, and have gone to very considerable expense to do so. We cannot see the justice of withdrawing the prize. In some lines of cattle only one exhibitor has been present, and yet the prize was not withdrawn. The fact that the manufacturers of SO CALLED TRACTION ENGINES do not feel inclined to meet the New Traction in a fair contest, under the direction of competent and disinterested judges, is no reason for withdrawing the prize. The Hall Works Engine will, however, be on hand at the Exhibition, ready to submit to any tests that may be demanded.

Mr. Glen, M.P., General Manager of the Hall Works, informs us that they will couple a Ten Horse Rubicon Traction Engine to any 16 Horse Power Traction Engine made in Canada, and if the 10 Horse Rubicon cannot draw the 16 Horse of any Canadian make backwards, they will abandon their claim to the $100 prize.

Don't be Duped.

Smokers will further their own interest by insisting upon having the "Cable", or "El Padre" brands of cigars which have stood the test for a quarter of a century, and not allow greedy and unscrupulous dealers to persuade them to take other brands which pays them a larger profit, the consumer being a loser thereby. 13d-25w

NICHOLAS AND CHARLOTTE.

A Love Romance of History.

The betrothal and marriage of the Princess Charlotte, of Russia, with Nicholas, who was then a Grand Duke, but afterward became Emperor of Russia, forms one of the sweetest and most romantic episodes in the world of European courts, which is usually so devoid of love and romance, and would, on that account alone, deserve being remembered, quite regardless of the historical interest which will henceforth adhere to all the members of the family of the conqueror of France.

Princess Charlotte was born in the year 1798, and was the eldest daughter of King Frederick William the Third of Prussia and his beautiful and accomplished wife, Queen Louisa. Her early childhood elapsed amid scenes of terror and humiliation for the royal family of Prussia, and nobody would at that time have ventured to predict for her the brilliant career which Providence kept in store for this child, born and brought up under such fatal auspices. We might, indeed, make an exception in favor of her mother, who, with that prophetic intuition which seems to have been the distinguishing feature of that high-minded woman, wrote one day to her father, the Duke of Mecklenburg, the following lines about his daughter:

"Charlotte is given to silence and reserve, but under the apparent coolness she conceals a warm and loving heart. Her indifference and pride are but the dullest outside of a diamond of the purest water, which some day will shine forth in its brilliant luster. Her bearing and models are noble and dignified. She has but a few friends, but these few are warmly attached to her. I know her value, and predict for her a brilliant future, if she lives long enough."

The young Princess was indeed a very frail and delicate creature—one of those tender flowers which seem to wait for the kind hand of the gardener to transplant them into warmer clime. She was charming and handsome, but her beauty was rather that of a pale lily than that of a blooming rose.

Charlotte was just 16, when, in the year 1814, the Grand Duke Nicholas, on his way to the camp of the allied armies in France, passed through Berlin and was warmly welcomed as an honored guest at the royal palace.

The description those who saw and knew the Grand Duke at that time have given of the incomparable graces of his person and mind, make it easy for us to imagine that the heart of a young girl, just budding into womanhood, was captivated and charmed by him at first sight.

Well he might have said, like Cæsar, "I came, I saw, I conquered."

The Princess fell in love with him, and fortunately for her, the young Grand Duke returned her love fully as passionately.

The Grand Duke Nicholas had the reputation of being one of the handsomest, if not the very handsomest man of the times; and his majestic and stately form, which measured no less than six feet and two inches, was considered unparalled in beauty not only in Russia, but in all Europe.

He was vigorous, strong, full of and health, with broad shoulders a chest, while his small hands and fe were of the most aristocratic elegance His whole figure realized the perf model of manly and commanding be ty, which the genius of a sculptor of tiquity has immortalized under features of Apollo Belvidere.

His features were of the Grecian cast—forehead and nose formed a straight line—and the large, blue, sincere eyes showed a singular combination of composure, sternness, self-reliance and pride, among which it would have been difficult for the observer to name the predominant expression.

Those who have looked closely and attentively into these remarkable eyes would have easily believed that their threatening glance would suffice to suppress a rebellion, to terrify and disarm a murderer, or to frighten away a supplicant. But there would have been but few to believe that the sternness of those eyes could be entirely softened so as to beam forth nothing but love and kindness.

Among those few, however, was the young Prussian Princess, who had drunk deep in their intoxicating fervor. It is true that she was the only person in the world in whose presence the Olympian gravity of his features gave way to a radiant cheerfulness, which made his manly beauty perfectly irresistible.

In such moments his magnificent brow, always the seat of meditation and thought, exhibited the serene beauty and Attic grace of a young Athenian; the serious Pericles seemed, by the invisible wand of a magician, to have been transplanted into the youthful Alcibiades.

At this time, however, the matchless personal charms of the Grand Duke were enhanced by political prospects of the most exalted character. He was not eventually considered an heir to the imperial crown of Russia. It is true, Alexander the First, his brother, had no children, but in case of his death, which could not be expected soon, the Grand Duke Constantine was to inherit the throne of Peter the Great, and leave to Nicholas at best but the position of a Prince of the first blood. Nevertheless, Frederick William, charmed alike by the beauty and intellect of his guest, and by the hope of uniting the sovereign houses of Prussia and Russia by the close ties of family union, greeted the prospect of a marriage between the Grand Duke and his daughter with enthusiasm, especially when he discovered that the young folks themselves were fond of each other.

The King then delicately insinuated to his daughter that, if she had taken a liking to the Grand Duke, and had reason to believe that the Prince entertained similar feelings toward her, their marriage would meet with no objection on his part.

But the young Princess, although secretly delighted in a hope which fully responded to the secret wishes of her heart, was either too proud or too bashful to confess to her father her love for the Grand Duke, who had not yet made any declaration to her.

In this manner the day approached on which the Grand Duke was to leave Berlin. On the eve of his departure a grand gala supper was given in his honor, at the royal palace, and, by the way of accident or policy, the young Princess Charlotte was seated by the side of her distinguished admirer.

The Grand Duke was uncommonly taciturn during the evening. His forehead was clouded, and his gloomy eyes seemed to follow in space vague phantoms flitting before his imagination. Repeatedly he neglected to reply to questions addressed to him; and when he was asked to respond to a toast which one of the royal Princes had proposed to his honor, he seemed to awake from a profound dream which had entirely withdrawn him from his surroundings.

Suddenly, as if by a mighty effort of his will, he turned to his fair neighbor and whispered, so as only to be understood by her:

"So I shall leave Berlin to-morrow!"

He paused abruptly and looked at the Princess, as if he were waiting for an answer which expressed sorrow and grief on her part. But the Princess was fully as proud as the Grand Duke, and, overcoming the violent throbbing of her heart, she said politely to him:

"We are all very sorry to see Your Imperial Highness leave us so soon. Would it not have been possible for you to defer your departure?"

"You will all be very sorry?" muttered the Grand Duke, not entirely satisfied by the vagueness of sorrow which these words of the Princess implied. "But you in particular, madam," he added, after some hesitation; "for it will depend on you alone whether I shall stay here or depart."

"Ah!" replied Charlotte, with her sweetest smile; "and what have I to do to keep Your Imperial Highness here?"

"You must permit me to address my admiration and homage to you."

"Is that all?"

"And you must encourage me to please you."

"That is much more difficult," said the Princess, with a deep blush, but at the same time her eyes beamed forth so much affection and delight that the Prince could see at a glance that his fondest hopes had been realized beforehand.

"During my short stay at Berlin," the Grand Duke continued, in the same tone of voice, "I have taken pains to study your character and your affections; and this study has satisfied me that you would render me happy; while on the other hand, I have qualities which would secure your own happiness."

The Princess was overcome by emotion, and in her confusion did not know what to answer. At last she said:

"But here, in the presence of the whole court, at the public table, you put such a question to me!"

"Oh!" replied the Prince, "you need not make any verbal reply. It will be sufficient for you to give me some pledge of your affection. I see there on your hand a small ring, whose possession would make me very happy. Give it to me?"

"What do you think of? Here, in the presence of a hundred spectators?"

"Ah, it can be easily done without being seen by anybody. Now we are chatting so quietly with each other there is not one among the guests who suspects in the least what we are speaking about; press the ring into a morsel of bread and leave it on the table. I will take the talisman and nobody will notice it."

"The ring is really a talisman."

"I expected so. May I hope to hear its history?"

"Why not? My first governess was a Swiss lady by the name of Wildermatt. Once she went to Switzerland to enter upon an inheritance which had been bequeathed to her by a distant relative. When she came back to Berlin a few weeks afterward, she showed me quite a collection of pretty and costly jewelry, which formed a part of the inheritance. 'This is a curious ring,' said I to her as I put this little old-fashioned ring on my finger. 'Does it not look queer and cunning? Perhaps it is an old relic or talisman, and may have been worn centuries ago by a pious lady who had received it from her knight, starting for the Holy Land.' I tried to take the ring from my finger again, but I could not get it off; for I was a little fleshier then than now," said Charlotte, smilingly. "My governess insisted on my keeping the ring as a souvenir. I accepted the present, and the ring has been on my finger ever since. Some time afterward, when I was contemplating its strange workmanship, I succeeded in pulling it from my finger, and was much surprised at seeing engraved on the inside some words, which, though nearly rubbed out by the wear of time, were still legible. Now, Your Imperial Highness, what do you think were the words engraved upon it? I think when you hear them you will take some interest in the ring."

"Ah! and pray what were they?"

"The words engraved upon the inside were, 'Empress of Russia.' This ring had undoubtedly been presented by an Empress of Russia to the relatives of Mrs. Wildermatt, for I was told that both this lady and her mother had formerly belonged to the household of the Czarina, your most august grandmother."

"This is really remarkable," said the Grand Duke, thoughtfully. "I am quite superstitious, and I am really inclined to regard this ring, if I should be happy enough to receive it from you as a pledge of your love, as an omen of very auspicious significance."

In answer to this second and even more direct appeal to her heart, the Princess took a small piece of bread, played carelessly with it, and managed to pass the ring into the soft crumbs. Then she dropped it playfully on the table quite close to the plate of her neighbor. And, after this adroit exhibition of her skill as an actress, she continued to eat as unconcernedly as if she had performed the most trivial action of her life.

With the same apparent coolness and indifference the Grand Duke picked up the bread inclosing the ring, took the latter out of its ingenious envelope and concealed it in his breast, for it was too small to fit any of his fingers. It was this ring, both the pledge of Charlotte's love and the auspicious omen of his own elevation to the imperial dignity—which Nicholas wore on a golden chain around his neck to the very last day of his life, and which, if we are not mistaken, has even descended with him into the vault of his ancestors.

Three years afterward, in 1817, Princess Charlotte, then only 19 years of age, and in the full splendor of beauty and happiness, made her entry into St. Petersburg by the side of her husband, whose eye had never looked prouder and whose Olympian brow had never been more serene than at this happiest moment of his life. As he looked down upon the vast multitude who had flocked together from all parts of the vast empire to greet the young Princess with shouts and rejoicings, and then again upon his fair young bride, perhaps the inscription upon the ring recurred to his mind; for, bending his head close to the ear of Charlotte, he whispered: "Now Empress of the heart, and some day, perhaps, Empress of the realm."

At this moment the procession reached the main entrance of the Winter Palace, where Alexander I., the Emperor, came to meet his beautiful sister-in-law and conducted her into the sumptuous drawing-rooms of the magnificent palace of the Czars.

Who would believe that eight short years afterward the brilliant young Emperor had breathed his last, and that Nicholas and Charlotte would succeed to the throne of Russia? Truly the inscription of the engagement ring had proved prophetic.

The Lover's Fatal Blunder.

"Louise," said he, as they, despising a plurality of chairs, and practicing an economy of gas, sat in the parlor together, a few evenings before the rising of the honeymoon—"I ought to tell you that I belong to a Masonic lodge, and have to attend its sessions; so dearest, when we are married you mustn't fret if some evenings I have to be away from my little wifey-pifey." And the designing villain chuckled at his prudence.

"Of course I won't, William," she said softly; "how many lodges do you belong to?"

"Only one, darling," he answered.

"And when does it meet? How often? On what evening?"

"O, once a week—on—on Thursdays."

"Very well; then I shall have you at some every other evening in the week—that will be so nice."

And as she took out her tiny note book and made a memorandum on the subject, he felt that, after all, he had made a mistake.—New York Mail.

Prob's Weather Promises.

The following forecast of the weather for this district for the 24 hours from 1 a. m. to-day is received from the Toronto Meterological office :—Moderate to fresh winds, mostly east and north, clearing weather, stationary or slightly higher temperatures ; fine to-morrow, with slightly higher temperatures.

Lawn Social at Hazel Brae.

Remember the lawn social and sale of fancy work at Hazel Brae to-morrow evening. The band of the Fire Brigade Band will be in attendance ; old Probs has promised his finest weather, and this is likely to prove a most enjoyable evening. Refreshments for those desiring them will be provided on the ground. The gates will open at 7 o'clock. Admission ten cents. All are invited.

Scott Act Campaign.

Mr. John A. Nicholls speaks on the Scott Act in the Opera House again to-night. The interest in the campaign is on the increase, and it is likely there will be some exciting times before the contest is over. All who did not hear Mr. Nicholls last week should do so to-night. This week will close his stay in the county. Next week Rev. W. A. McKay, of Woodstock, and Rev. B. B. Keefer and others will take the platform.

The Horticultural Show.

The exhibitors at the horticultural show have been busy to-day removing their plants, fruits and fancy goods from the Water street rink, and that building will now again echo to the merry laugh of the skaters on wheels, as they glide gracefully along the well kept floor. The exhibition, despite the rain, was visited by large numbers of citizens yesterday.

"Hello! is that Lakefield?"

Mr. G. D. Edwards, special agent of the Bell Telephone Company is in town to look after the putting up of the wires between here and Lakefield. The work will be conducted with all expedition, and by the middle of next week we may expect to hear the cherry hello ! of our Lakefield friends, who, with their accustomed go-ahead-itiveness, are becoming subscribers to the telephone in large numbers.

Testimonial.

Testimonial from the Rev. David Mitchell, pastor of John street Presbyterian Church, Belleville :—

BELLEVILLE, Nov. 23, 1883.

A visit to Mr. Laurance satisfied me that he has made successfully a specialty of the study of the eye. His skill enables him to give one the glasses or spectacles that are adapted to the condition of the eyes. The result is, as in my own case, that I have gained a power and comfort in my study which I have not felt before.

DAVID MITCHELL.

Direct Importations.

Fair, VanEvery & Co. have received per S.S. "Titania," from Glasgow, this season's importation well worthy of your inspection, every department being filled with choice new goods. Staple department comprises a large range of Woolens, Flannels, Blankets, Cottons, white and grey, plain and twilled, Cottonades, Ducks, Denims, Shirtings, Sheetings, Towels, Table Linens, etc. Carpet department, a full range of choice patterns in Union, All-wool, Tapestry, Brussels, Oil Cloths, Matts, Cretonnes, Lambrequins, etc. Mantle and Dress Making department affords an elegant assortment of Dress Goods, and Mantling, in every material and shade. All orders executed on shortest notice, in most modern styles. Millinery department will be very attractive shewing all the grand novelties of French, English and American markets. Tailoring department, a full line of Scotch and Canadian Tweeds, Overcoatings, Fine Worsteds, Furnishings. First-class Cutter, and a good fit guaranteed.

ATHLETICS.

Baseball.

PETERBOROUGH VS. LINDSAY.

Although the home team went up to Lindsay yesterday they could not, on account of the bad weather, play the game, and they returned last evening, their expenses out of pocket. It is probable that the Lindsays will have the grace to return the visit next week, and that after all Peterborough will be the scene of this much talked about contest.

THEY'VE GOT IT IN BELLEVILLE.

The Belleville Ontario, replying to a hint thrown out on Tuesday by the Intelligencer, says :—

"A recent baseball match between rival typos in Peterborough has so inflamed the ardor of our friends over the way, that nothing but gore or glory on the "diamond" will satisfy them. The "Wild Cats," of the Ontario will come to the "scratch" to satisfy the longings of the "Tigers," and if Saturday afternoon, the 19th inst. is acceptable to the latter, those doughty type-flingers are invited to try conclusions at wind pounding and leather hunting on the hospital lot on that date.

[illegible] the game and the usual ambulance can in this game be dispensed with.

Lacrosse.

THE PETERBOROUGHS AT BEAVERTON.

As the result of rather extensive telegraphic communication between the secretaries of the Beaverton Checkers and the home club yesterday the following team left for Beaverton this morning to make an effort to bring back the championship of the Midland District :—Joyal, Rudkins, Fortye, Hall, Halpin, Scott, Kelly, Henderson, Rutherford, Myles, McAvelia, Sheehy, M. McDonald, Captain. The team is a good one, and although the weather has precluded much actual lacrosse practice, they have been getting into good condition by taking plenty of running exercise, and the Checkers are likely to find their victorious career somewhat checkered by the time they get through with them.

The Rollers

RACING AT THE LANSDOWND RINK,

Last evening the regular programme of races at the Lansdowne were announced, and the race for the management's medal was contested by McFarlane, Shevlin and Kerr. The former won, Kerr who led for the first two laps falling out, and Shevlin finished second. On Monday evening there is to be a two hour go-as-you-please on the rollers.

Cornice Poles and Curtain Chains just received at A. Clegg's cheaper than ever.

What they are Saying.

The Dawsons are a fraud.—The baseball players.

Fine weather after the rain.—Everyone.

We're going to clean up.—Tommy Beavis.

It won't do for me to talk about Maine this evening.—John A. Nicholls.

They call me a magic lantern professor.—Prof. Richardson.

What We Would Like to Know.

Why the crossing at the corner of George and Brock street is not put in better order.

The probable outcome of all the discussion on exemptions.

That the present weather was going to last.

What Adam Dobbin wanted to water the flower beds in Court House Park for this morning.

If the Dawsons of Hamilton ever keep their engagements.

Or if there is such a club as the Dawsons.

What We May Expect.

Fine weather and a good time at the Hazel Brae lawn social to-morrow evening.

The Peterboroughs to vote the Dawsons of Hamilton no gentlemen.

More correspondence on exemption.

The magic lantern professor to turn up at the Scott Act meeting to-night.

Some high flown oratory, coupled with some abuse from John A. Nichols at the same gathering.

That people will leave the meeting with the same views they held on entering it.

Locks.

I am now receiving Door Locks made in Peterborough, and have no hesitation in saying that they are equal to the goods made by the best makers in the United States. As I intend only to keep only these goods in stock in future, I am selling at reductions in prices of 20 to 30 per cent. all the American Locks Knobs and Door Trimmings that I have on hand to make room for a full line of our home-made goods. There are some very fine lines, especially in Mortice Locks among them, and I would respectfully ask your inspection. Cut Nails and Door Hangers are very low in price just now.

GEORGE STETHEM.

The Right Way.

TORONTO, 27th August, 1885.

GENTLEMEN,—We are directed by Mrs. Conger to acknowledge the prompt and courteous settlement, through you, of her claim on the British Empire Mutual Life Insurance Company for $20,000 secured by policy in her favour on the life of her husband, the late Mr. P. D. Conger. Although the conditions of your policy allow the period of one month for payment after the necessary proofs are furnished, yet in this case a cheque for the full amount, without any discount, was forwarded as soon as the proofs were completed.

Yours sincerely,

MOSS, FALCONBRIDGE & BARWICK,
Solicitors for Mrs. Conger.

A Story of a Rainy Day.

Circumstances After Cases in Trade as Elsewhere.

Rain ! rain ! rain ! It had been pouring down in a steady stream since 7 o'clock in the morning. Down the middle of George street and in the gutters ran miniature Mississippi rivers, from the eaves' troughs and discharge pipes issued little cataracts, and as the energetic tradesman, with trousers turned up at the bottoms, and the rain dripping copiously from his mackintosh and umbrella, crossed George street in quest of his morning mail, the Simcoe street crossing, sinking beneath each businesslike footatep, sank him ankle deep into a pool beneath it that seemed to indicate that the course of the Otonabee had been turned into some subterranean passage, that found its outlet under the planking.

No one seemed very busy ; at each friendly doorway, sheltered from the pelting rain, stood little groups of listless citizens, who, for want of better employment, were speculating on the probability of the downpour ceasing, bewailing the bad luck of the Horti-cultural Society [illegible] tones & discussion in regard to the all absorbing question of the Dickson exemption by-law. There is no denying it, business was flat, and the EXAMINER reporter who had just returned after a fruitless search for items from Chief Johnston and Tommy Beavis, found that news was flat too. This was the reason that he dropped into a leading jewelry store on George street, partly to get out of the discouraging rain for a few moments, partly to get some information regarding the big pumpkins at Horticultural show, and partly to while away the time that hung heavy on his hands by a chat with the general goldsmith. The latter worthy shared the general idleness caused by the unpropitious weather, and was nothing loth to enter into conversation ; so, after the prospects of the Peterborough baseball club defeating Lindsay in the rain had been canvassed, and the relative merits of A. Sanders' and G. M. Roger's collection of garden carrots had received due consideration, the conversation turned on

TRADE MATTERS.

The reporter incidentally remarked that it must cost a deal of money to carry on a business so extensive in a class of goods of such high value as those in the jeweller's stock. "Why," said the tradesman, "in those drawers and show cases there is not less than $10,000 worth of goods, and what is more, every bit of it is paid for, cash, sir, cash ! There's nothing like running a business on cash principles. You see I can buy goods for cash at such rates as to enable me to defy the competition of small dealers who buy on credit, and so I always carry a heavy stock."

A glance at the plated show cases with their glittering display of heavy gold and silver watches, chains, brooches, diamond studded jewelry and other expensive products of the goldsmith's art, and the imposing array of heavier articles of plate on the shelves were a convincing proof of the truth of the assertion in regard to the value of the stock, and the scribe, whose mind was full of exemption discussion ventured to remark, "Let's see, your assessment is about $1,500 isn't it?" The man of merchandize tumbled, dut nothing disconcerted, went off on another track. "Well, you see," said he, "we have to keep up appearances, but if you come down to facts that's about all it's worth ; I don't mean to say that the value of the stock is not fully what I said, although a good many of those drawers and boxes are empty, too, but you see we don't always pay cash for everything and there's a good deal of it that is not really assessable to me, that is to say it really is the property of the wholesale dealer in Toronto, don't you see."

"Oh, yes," said the reporter, and he did see very clearly that values vary and that circumstances and the fear of the assessor alter the value of cases of jewellery, and many other things, and bidding the merchant good morning he plodded through the slush and rain up George street, revolving in his reportorial brain a scheme for the equitable assessment of all kinds of property, and thinking that the exemption principle did not seem to be exclusively confined to "new industries."

A successful social at Hazel Brae this evening.

And fancy articles to bring fancy prices.

A large attendance at Rev. Mr. Keefer's meeting in Lakefield on Sunday evening.

Mr. Lech's good natured boys to succeed him in business.

A general increase in 1886 assessments.

Another meeting of the Town Council ere long.

Visits from aspirants to the lacrosse championship.

Who won't win it.

What they are Saying.

It was the proudest day of my life.—Harry LeBrun.

I will stop talking Maine when opponents of prohibition cease misrepresenting it.—Jno. A. Nicholls.

Did you see Harry's handsome bouquet in my window.—Jimmy Sheehy.

Our lacrosse boys do us proud.—The citizens.

Well done, boys!—Lovers of lacrosse.

Baseball will have to take a back seat now.—Lovers of "the ball game."

I don't like Mr. Keefer; he pokes fun at me.—The "Professor."

What We Would Like to Know.

Who made C. Gordon Richardson a professor.

If John A. Nicholls can't take a joke.

How long our lacrosse boys will hold the championship medal.

What Professor Richardson means when he writes of "the unhappy struggle."

And if Rev. B. B. Keefer ever did assail him with coarse personalities and invective.

When we are to get the historical, biblio-economical and scientific objections to the Scott Act from Prof. Goldwin Smith, Moses Oates and the other "professor."

If a cured ham ever becomes diseased again.

Guns and Ammunition.

I would respectfully advise the public that I have Colt's Magazine Rifles in stock as well as Winchester; price $20. Cartridges to suit, 85c. per box. Discount for quantities as usual. Shells, Wads, Shot, Powder and Caps at very low prices. George Stethem.

Y. M. C. A. Anniversary.

As the Rev. Dr Potts cannot conveniently be here on Monday, the 28th inst., the anniversary of the Young Men's Christian Association will take place on the following Thursday, 1st October. A large choir is making preparations for the music on this occasion.

Captured at Lindsay.

Chief Johnston received a telegram last evening from the Chief Constable of Lindsay saying that Holbridge, the hired man who stole a horse and buggy from Mr. Hewson of Keene on Wednesday evening, had been arrested in that town. The horse and buggy were in his possession. Mr. Hewson, who left town for Lindsay last evening, may thank Chief Johnston's suggestions for the recovery of his property and the capture of the thief.

A Splendid Stock.

While calling at Mr. B. Shortly's harness rooms, George street, our reporter was much impressed by the thoroughly complete nature of the stock exhibited. This consisted of a large array of double and single harness, draught and pleasure harness, saddles, bridles, horse blankets, carriage rugs, nets, whips, and in fact a full supply of horse furnishings. The trunks, valises, hand-bags, etc., make a very fine display. Every department is unusually full and complete and every care has been bestowed upon the purchase and manufacture of these goods. Never before has this popular establishment been better equipped for meeting the demands of its numerous customers, while the prices defy successful competition.

Direct Importations.

Fair, VanEvery & Co. have received per S.S. "Titania," from Glasgow, this season's importation well worthy of your inspection, every department being filled with choice new goods. Staple department comprises a large range of Woolens, Flannels, Blankets, Cottons, white and grey, plain and twilled, Cottonades, Ducks, Denims, Shirtings, Sheetings, Towels, Table Linens, etc. Carpet department, a full range of choice patterns in Union, All-wool, Tapestry, Brussels, Oil Cloths, Matts, Cretonnes, Lambrequins, etc. Mantle and Dress Making department affords an elegant assortment of Dress Goods, and Mantling, in every material and shade. All orders executed on shortest notice, in most modern styles. Millinery department will be very attractive showing all the grand novelties of French, English and American markets. Tailoring department, a full line of Scotch and Canadian Tweeds, Overcoatings, Fine Worsteds, Furnishings. First-class Cutter, and a good fit guaranteed.

THE SCOTT ACT.

Third Meeting in Bradburn's Hall.

Rev. B. B. Keefer Throws Down the Gauntlet.

But the Professor Declines.

Mr. John A. Nicholls, the temperance orator, made his second appearance in Peterborough under the auspices of the Scott Act Committee, in Bradburn's Opera House, last evening. The House was packed to the doors, and the chair was occupied by Mayor Cox. Rev. J. Torrell and Rev. B. B. Keefer also occupied seats on the platform. An invitation was extended to any person present who desired to speak in opposition to do so, Mr. C. G. Richardson being specially named, and an assurance given that a fair opportunity of discussing the matter would be given. Neither that gentlemen nor any one else, however, accepted the invitation. A departure from the regular order of proceeding was made in the taking up of the collection before the commencement of the speaking, and after this had been done, Rev. B. B. Keefer opened the meeting with prayer. After a couple of campaign hymns had been sung, Mayor Cox addressed the meeting briefly, announcing himself to be fully in sympathy with the movement. Although it conflicted with the interests of some in the community he felt so fully convinced, he said, of the great and enduring benefit it would be to the whole community, that he could not look upon it as a question of dollars and cents. The rescue of sons, brothers and parents from the danger of a drunkard's grave was a matter that could not and would not be measured in dollars and cents, and he could not understand such arguments being put forth when was to be considered on the other side of the question. He thought the vote of every supporter of temperance should be recorded in favour of the Act, if it were only to show opposition to the traffic in every form; and an unmistakable expression of the people of this Dominion in favour of the Act could not but result in a general prohibitory law at no distant date.

AN ETERNITY OF SOULS

Mr. John A. Nicholls then took the platform. As Professor Richardson was not present, he said he would take the arguments used by the Liberal Temperance Union in a sheet that was being circulated in this county, and show the fallacy. Taking first the argument that the Scott Act was an undue interference with the right every one had to do as they pleased with their own, he went on to say that the law would not allow him to attempt suicide, he could not do as he liked with himself in this respect. If he owned a building lot on a main street in this city and bought a lot of hogs he would not be allowed to build a hog pen there, be it never so handsome, and keep his hogs in it. It would be suppressed as a nuisance. Now, we had the same right to suppress a liquor shop, which was too, and if we were to have public nuisances on our street corners, he must own, for his part, he preferred the hog pen. The idea that society had not a right to interfere with matters of this kind was an absurd one. He then attacked the proposition that alcohol was food, something which he said he did not believe, but even if it were we had a right to dispense with it for the good of others. If a baker made a kind of cake that would induce a man to go home and beat and ill-treat his wife and family and neglect his work to obtain it, the baker would be prohibited from selling that food, because it interfered with the public safety. Yet, he agreed, this was just what the liquor did, and quoted extracts from Montreal and other papers to show this to be true. The interests of wives and families demanded the suppression of the traffic. The EXAMINER had commented on his talking about Maine when he was here before. He talked about Maine because that State was the subject of continual mis-representation by opponents of prohibition. When the opponents of prohibition would let Maine alone he was quite ready to follow suit, for Maine was well able to look after itself. He then took up the arguments advanced by Mr. Goldwin Smith to the effect that the Scott Act was likely to be productive of

DOMESTIC TROUBLE

and compared the domestic trouble caused by drinking habits with that feared by Mr. Smith, much to the disadvantage of that gentleman's arguments. He next combatted the idea that the men engaged in the liquor traffic were entitled to compensation, arguing that they were only granted a license from year to year under certain conditions, and he would like to find one of them who had not violated those conditions. He held that the law as it stood now was a prohibitory law with exemptions to those engaged in the liquor traffic, and all the Scott Act asked was that those exemptions should be abolished. Mr. J. Gordon Mowat's scriptural arguments were next taken up, and against them he quoted the language of Canon Farrar, an authority on scripture, he said, at all events more than equal to Mr. Mowat. In short, all the various arguments, scriptural, social and economical, advanced by the literature and lecturers of the Liberal Temperance Union, were taken up by Mr. Nicholls seriatim and disposed of in summary fashion. He produced statistics from the town of Quincy, Mass., showing that in that town under prohibition in 1885 the expenditure for police and administration of justice was only $587, while in 1880 they had expended $10,000 for the same purpose. Peabody, a town near it, of the same size, in which there was no prohibition, paid $6,725 for the same expenses, and here in Peterborough the expense of police and administration of justice was $5,000 per year. It was said that the Scott Act would not be

PROPERLY ENFORCED.

He admitted that the Dominion officials were not efficient in many places, but the people who passed the Act would take steps to see it enforced, and he had authority to say that the executive of this county were going, if the Act was passed, to pay a man to see that its provisions were properly obeyed in this town. The liquor traffic could be put down in this county if they had backbone enough. Speaking of the arguments of the opponents of the Act, he said the mightiest he had yet met was a four-foot plank which had come in contact with his head in Saint Catharines, and it seemed to be the kind of argument they were most expert in using.

Rev. B. B. Keefer then addressed the meeting, saying that he had come there in the hope of meeting Professor Richardson, a gentleman he had enjoyed the pleasure of meeting in several previous campaigns; and of the result of their meetings he could only say that if Mr. Richardson was satisfied he himself certainly had nothing to complain of. Mr. Richardson had been invited to be present at the meeting to-night, but in a letter in the Review had rejected the invitation. The speaker characterized that letter as a very slim excuse for

A MOST UNGRACIOUS RETREAT.

In that letter Mr. Richardson complained of the treatment he had received at Mr. Keefer's hands at a late meeting in Norwood. He, the speaker, had in his hands a telegram from a number of the leading people of Norwood, stating that Mr. Richardson had met with the fairest treatment there, both at the hands of Mr. Keefer and the audience. He hoped that, as Mr. Richardson had declined a fair offer to meet him to-night, he would at least have the grace to cease misrepresenting him. Mr. Keefer then proceeded to attack Mr. Richardson's arguments, handling them in a manner which caused much amusement among the audience, and evincing a thorough [illegible] particularly strong in his arguments with reference to Mr. Goldwin Smith's objections to the Scott Act, and showed that the very provisions to which that gentleman so strongly took exception were actually contained in the Crooks Act and the McCarthy Act, to which it was only fair to believe that Mr. Smith was favorable. Dealing with Mr. Richardson's argument that alcohol was food, he quoted from Professor Franklin, an eminent English authority, showing that, admitting it to be a food, it was too expensive in proportion to results to be of any value.

During the earlier part of Mr. Keefer's address a good many in the audience left the hall, but those who remained were evidently well pleased at having done so, for, in addition to being most convincing in arguments, the Rev. gentleman handles his subject in a thoroughly good natured and most facetious manner; he is certainly the strongest champion of the Scott Act who has yet appeared before a Peterborough audience, and after listening to him everyone would come to the conclusion that whoever would meet him in debate must needs come well armed.

The meeting adjourned about half-past ten o'clock.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The publisher of THE EXAMINER does not hold himself responsible for the facts asserted, nor the opinions expressed by correspondents.]

Scandanavians Wanted.

To the Editor of the DAILY EXAMINER:

SIR,—If any of your readers know the names and addresses of any Scandanavians in our town, I should feel much obliged if they would send them to me to P. O. Box No. 1031.

Peterborough, 11th Sept., 1885.

Soldiers' Scrip.

To the Editor of the DAILY EXAMINER:

SIR.—As a number of the members of "G" Company, late Midland Regiment, are anxious to receive any information regarding the scrip granted to them by the Government for services in the Northwest rebellion, you will confer a favour on myself, as well as the members of my old company, by publishing the following extract from a letter I have this day received from Major H. R. Smith, of Ottawa, who took command of the regiment upon the death of our lamented Colonel A. T. H. Williams, M. P.

Yours truly,
THOS. BURKE,
Capt. late Midland Regiment.

Norwood, Sept. 9, 1885.

"OTTAWA, Sept. 3, 1885.

DEAR CAPTAIN BURKE,—In reference to to yours of the 1st, inst., the information as to the issue of scrip to volunteers will be sent to you with the least possible delay. So far no definite arrangements have been made, but the scrip will be issued by the Department of Interior under authority from the Department of Militia.

Yours very truly,
HENRY R. SMITH.

CAPTAIN BURKE,
Late Midland Regiment."

Mr. Cox's Explanation.

To the Editor of THE DAILY EXAMINER:

SIR,—I regret very much that my communication has conveyed a different impression to Mr. Lech from that which I intended. He complained that the Dickson property was assessed too low. I only wanted to show him that the same remarks applied to himself and many others; that in point of fact his own stores and dwellings were practically exempted, as the value of his stock and land was as much as his total assessment, leaving his magnificent residence and stores free from taxes.

I must disclaim the slightest wish to interfere with Mr. Lech's business. As a citizen of Peterborough, I am too proud of it, and I congratulate him on the energy, industry, ability and enterprise that have made it such a marked success. I rejoice in his prosperity as I do in that of every other citizen of our town, who, like Mr. Lech is doing so much to build up and improve the town, and, although I do not altogether agree with him on the question of exemptions, I nevertheless wish both himself and his sons increased success and a constantly increasing business. If I had my way I would have them sending out their manufactured furs to all parts of the Dominion, as they have the enterprise, ability, and capital to do.

If you will allow me space, Mr. Editor, for this explanation to Mr. Lech, I will promise not to trouble you with any further newspaper correspondence as it is somewhat out of my line.

I am sir,
Yours truly,
GEO. A. COX.

Peterborough, Sept. 11th, 1885.

The Exemption Question.

The "Review" Reviewed.

We have been roqested to publish the following letter:

To the Editor of the Review:

SIR,—In your editorial of last evening, on exemptions, you make the following quotation from my letter:

"Nor is it difficult to see that an establishment of this kind would seek a Dominion, not a local market, and would, in reality, be no competition to our present citizens, even though engaged in the same line of business."

And I think you will agree with me that that would practically be the result with such establishments as we would hope to get located here; but you add: "Why not carry out this idea by assenting to a prohibition of local competition." I will endeavour to answer that question by the following illustrations: Suppose that Mr. Yelland, instead of buying his hubs, spokes, felloes, and such like articles, at Hamilton, St. Catharines or Strathroy, where a large number of persons are employed making them, decided to manufacture them himself, and is doing so made his operations sufficiently large to supply other towns and cities, and applied for power and buildings on the Dickson property to do so, they would immediately be told you cannot rent to Mr. Yelland, because he is in the retail trade and it would be unfair to Lockhart & Chowen and others with whom he is in competition.

Suppose that Douglas & Logan, instead of bringing their springs and axles, and gearings, from Gananoque, Guelph and Galt, decided to manufacture for themselves and for shipment elsewhere, and they also applied for accommodation, the same difficulty would arise,—local competition with Porter Bros. or some other dealer.

Suppose that Mr. Belleghem, instead of bringing in, as he now does, from Bowmanville, Toronto and London, carloads of cane and wood seat chairs, and other articles of furniture that he has not sufficient power and room to manufacture, decided to take more commodious premises and more efficient power on the Dickson property, and reverse the order of things by entering into competition for a Dominion trade with the men who are now supplying him. Why should he not do so? All the material they use can be laid down in Peterborough as cheaply as at any of those points, and in some cases cheaper, because a good proportion of the lumber they use is taken from our own county. Again we would be told that cannot be allowed, because Mr. Belleghem is in the retail trade, and it is unfair to others in the same line.

I might give a good many more similar illustrations to show that in nearly every case some objection could be used.

The most liberal opponents of the present by-law only go so far as to say to the Dickson company, "Go on and put up your buildings, we won't tax them until they are rented, and when you have an opportunity of renting, if it is a new industry worthy of encouragement and one that does not interfere with local dealers, we will grant you exemption." In view of the objection that could be urged against almost every applicant, I think you will agree with me that there is not very much encouragement to erect buildings for manufacturing purposes under such circumstances, and take the chance of renting them.

While the by-law is condemned as being too broad and too sweeping, I submit that your suggestion, Mr. Editor, is not broad enough to meet the case.

Apologizing for the space I have occupied, and promising not to enter into any further correspondence or controversy upon this subject, I will leave some other person to work out the improvements that I have desired, but failed to accomplish.

I am sir,
Yours truly,
GEO. A. COX

Peterborough, Sept. 11th, 1885.

The Farmers' Picnic.

A Successful Gathering and Social in Aid of St. Peter's Cathedral

The monster farmer's picnic, which was held yesterday afternoon in Hazlitt's grove, Ashburnham, proved to be one of the greatest successes of the season. The advertising and arrangements had been attended to with rare tact and energy, and the weather being the most delightful we have had for many weeks, there was an exceedingly large concourse present on the beautiful grounds, which have never been used before for a similar gathering. A dancing platform had been erected on the ground and a capital quadrille band furnished music, to the strains of which many a blythe lad and maiden gaily tripped the light fantastic, the cool weather being just what was needed to render it enjoyable. An extensive programme of athletic sports had been announced, but it was found impossible, on account of the limited time, to get every event put through. The following contests, however, took place and were won as follows:—One mile race won by Mr. Bird of Peterborough, Mr. Rose of Otonabee second. One hundred yards race, won by Mr. William Buck. Tug of war between teams of twelve from the town and country was carried off by the townsmen. The hop, step and jump, three running jumps and high jump fell to Mr. Callance of Enniamore.

In the evening a social and dance was held in Ashburnham Town Hall, at which the voting competition for a handsome watch between Miss Annie Redmond, of Otonabee, and Miss Begley, of town, was brought to an issue. The votes were sold by the ladies at 10 cents each, and Miss Redmond's admirers invested to the amount of $57.80, while Miss Begley's supporters manifested their admiration by contributing $140.80, thus leaving her the winner of the contest. Dancing was kept up with great zest until an early hour in the morning, when tired out by the afternoon's and evening's enjoyment, the happy revellers dispersed to snatch a few hours slumber before the coming of the day. To the gentlemen comprising the various committees too much credit could not be given for the admirable management which ensured a happy termination to a day of unalloyed pleasure.

The following are the gentlemen composing them:—

COMMITTEE OF SPORTS.—D. Crowley, F. Fairin, P. Hallihan, T. Houlihan, T. Welsh, M. McDonald, T. Hickey, J. Galvin, J. Duffus, W. Buck, J. Coughlin, Wm. Clancy, J. Clancy and Jos. Daly.

GENERAL COMMITTEE.—Jas. Hanlan, D. Moloney, P. Lynch, John Shaughnessy, J. F. Crowley, M. Galvin, J. Shea, Henry Carveth, C. McDonald, Wm. Leahy, P. Fitzgerald, P. Hallihan, B. Hayes, R. Carey, T. Henry, M. Hallihan, P. Martin, Wm. Kennealy, P. Clancy, J. C. Sullivan, L. Mercier, T. Powers, R. Carey, sr., R. Redmond, M. Sullivan, J. Doherty, Wm. Redmond, Dan. Hayes, D. Shaughnessy, J. Kennealy, T. Coughlin, Jas. Houlihan, J. Kiely, T. Slattefy, Michael Crowley and Timothy Mulcahy.

Mr. Wm. Buck was the efficient chairman of committee, and Mr. James Hanlan filled the office of Secretary-Treasurer.

We are happy to learn that the affair was a great success financially, as in other respects, upwards of $500 having been taken in from the various sources.

Mr. Hugh Ross and family left for Montreal this morning.

—Byron.

We have just concluded a couple of articles on Mrs. Moodie and her writings. In order, however, to complete the task, we have undertaken, viz., to give a general sketch of Canadian poets and poetry, we must devote a little space to her husband, though the genius and fame of Susanna Moodie are much more deserving of mention.

Mr. Moodie was the son of Major James Moodie, of Melsetter, in the Orkney Islands. His family was one devoted to martial pursuits, and from a very early age he acquired the same tastes. He was lieutenant of the 21st regiment of Fusiliers, and when only sixteen years of age, was severely wounded at the night attack on Bergen-op-Zoom in Holland.

In 1819 he joined his brother Benjamin and emigrated to South Africa, where he remained ten years. Returning to England, he published a narrative of his adventures in that country under the title, "Ten years in South Africa." Extracts from this work formerly appeared in some of the old Canadian school readers, and in this way, doubtless, many of our readers are tolerably familiar with Mr. Moodie's style.

Among Mr. Moodie's warmest friends in England was the celebrated Thomas Pringle, the author of that beautiful poem,

"Afar in the desert I love to ride."

At the house of the poet Moodie met Miss Susanna Strickland, whom he shortly after wooed and won.

He came to Canada, as we have stated, in 1832, three years after his marriage. The English Government at the time granted 400 acres of land to officers on half-pay, and Mr. Moodie drew his land in the Township of Douro, where he subsequently settled. In his case, as in many others, emigration was a matter of necessity, not of choice. He belonged to an old but impoverished family, and rather than keep up the struggle with respectability in a country, where poor, proud aristocrats are barely tolerated, he determined to seek his fortune in Canada.

At that time, and indeed long afterwards, Englishmen had the idea that to possess lands, though they knew nothing of farming and had little or no capital, was the direct road to fortune and position in this western world. No men could be worse fitted to contend with the struggles incident to a settler's life in the colonies. They feel a very easy prey to speculators and traders. They were, as a rule, not insured to hardships of any kind, and dependent altogether too much on the comforts and luxuries of civilised life. They were very often, if not lazy, somewhat indolent and a little "stuck up." Careless and easy in disposition, they lived from hand to mouth, or sinking still lower, wasted their substance in intemperance and riotous living, gradually becoming so depraved, that they lost all self-respect and sank into oblivion, or an early grave.

No wonder that such men suffered great hardships in their first battles with the difficulties of colonial life. Mr. Moodie, although a man of energy and perseverance was, in other respects, no exception to this rule. He knew nothing practically of farming or bush life, and his first seven years, instead of floating him on to fortune, almost brought him and his family to the verge of starvation.

He served in 1837 in the Provincial Militia in Toronto, and afterwards on the Niagara frontier, until the reduction of the "Queen's Own," in which he held the rank of captain and was paymaster to sixteen companies of militia. Mrs. Moodie frankly acknowledges that many old debts were paid off by his hard-saved pay, and "their condition was so much improved thereby that they looked less to the dark than to the sunny side of the landscape."

For his important services he was appointed by His Excellency, Sir George Arthur, to the Shrievalty of the District of Victoria, now the county of Hastings. This was in the year 1839. Mr. Moodie immediately took up his residence at Belleville and lived there in comparative ease and comfort until his death in 1869. He resigned his office only a few years before the end came.

In addition to the volume to which we have alluded, he wrote "Scenes and adventures as a soldier and settler, during half a century." This was published in Montreal in 1866. He also prepared an account of the campaign in which he was engaged in Holland, for the United Service Journal, and contributed several articles to the Library of Entertaining Knowledge. He also published short essays in the Montreal Literary Garland, and for some time assisted his wife in editing the Victoria Magazine.

Mr. Moodie was a man of sterling worth, manly and fearless, generous and sincere. His unsuspecting nature made him an easy prey for designing knaves, and the troubles he suffered thereby were of no light or easy kind. He did not write very much poetry, but what his pen produced shows that he was capable of doing much more had his ambition been rightly roused, or had his adopted country shown due appreciation of his other literary ventures. Canadians must answer for it if the muse of song is so often depressed and silent. The way to strengthen the genius of poetry is to value at its true worth what has already been done in this direction by workers in the same fields.

Richardson vs. Keefer.

To the Editor of THE EXAMINER:

SIR,—The following letter appears in the Review of the 10th inst.:—

SIR,—I notice in your issue of this evening that a challenge has been sent to me by the Rev. B. B. Keefer to meet him in Bradburn's Opera House to-morrow evening. After the very ungentlemanly manner in which I was treated by the Rev. B. B. Keefer at my meeting in Norwood last Monday, I must absolutely decline to meet him upon his own platform. My meetings, however, in the future will, as in the past, be always open to the fullest and freest discussion, and Mr. Keefer may expect the same cordial welcome he has received in the past. That I am not afraid of the discussion may be recognized in the two hours accorded the reverend gentleman at the Norwood meeting. I have myself refrained, I trust, from any coarse invectives or personalities during this unhappy struggle, and though I may be unable to escape from such at my own meetings, still I do not feel myself called on to seek them elsewhere.

I am, truly yours,
C. GORDON RICHARDSON.

Peterborough, Sept. 9th.

Immediately upon reading the above letter, I telegraphed it to Dr. Ford, of Norwood, requesting him to forward a reply by the six o'clock train. Instead of a letter I received the following telegram:—

NORWOOD, Sept. 10.

"Too late for train to-night. The undersigned citizens of Norwood, present at Prof. Richardson's meeting, Monday night, deny most emphatically the allegations of that gentleman in the Review that he was treated unfairly by the Rev. Mr. Keefer. He was treated fairly both by the audience and by Rev. Mr. Keefer. Scores of signatures can be procured if necessary to this denial. He was thoroughly routed, horse, foot and artillery; hence his unwillingness to meet Mr. Keefer again. Signed: E. D. Gough, T. J. Howson, John Pettigrew, P. W. Reynolds, Rev. D. F. Gee, Thos. Armstrong, P. W. Stevenson, Robt. Metcalfe, Hugh Spence, R. W. Waters, Matthew Nicol, Oliver Buck, John Knox, Dr. Ford.

This telegram removes any necessity that, otherwise, I might feel to defend myself from the charges of treating Mr. Richardson in an "ungentlemanly manner," or using "coarse invectives or personalities." Mr. Richardson will not think it strange that his declarations that "I have refrained, I trust, from any 'coarse invectives,' etc.," compels me to recall the fact that on the public platform in Beaverton he charged an honored minister of the Presbyterian Church with being a liar, saying, "You lied, and you know you did, and when the lie was proven you had not manhood enough to acknowledge the lie. If you should come on my platform I should get off it, for I should feel myself disgraced by being on the same platform with you."

I am not surprised that Mr Richardson should absolutely decline to meet me on my own platform. He knows something, and proves it by declining to accept a challenge to discuss, on equal terms, the Scott Act before the electors of Peterborough. But that he should offer so thin an excuse for his refusal, can be understood only upon the ground that he had no confidence in the justice of his cause, or in his ability to make good his case in a fair discussion.

It is not Mr. Richardson's policy to allow discussion on equal terms in his meetings, and he has not, it seems, the courage to accept such an opportunity at Scott Act meetings.

In conclusion permit me to renew the challenge to Mr. Richardson or Mr. Gordon Mowat. If these gentlemen will name a date when they will meet the advocates of the Scott Act to discuss the issue now before the electors, on equal terms for them, and have known the date to the Scott Act Secretary, and I guarantee that the Peterborough Executive will complete the arrangements for such discussion and assure them fair play and equal time. Let these gentlemen either accept the challenge or admit that they have no confidence in their arguments except before a packed jury.

Yours, truly,
B. B. KEEFER.

The Exemption Question.

To the Editor of the DAILY EXAMINER:

SIR,—As a ratepayer I have been a deeply interested, though quiet observer of the different phases of the exemption question, and am in a position to consider myself as an illustration of the adage, "lookers-on see most of the game." And I have seen a good deal of it, and have carefully studied the motives of the chief actors. I am surprised and not surprised, either, at the course taken by some of them. In the Review of last evening I notice an editorial article intending to explain away and gloss over the conduct of Mr. Carnegie in his scheme for opposing the introduction of new industries in Peterboro'. The attempt is a failure. The petty spirit of opposition and obstruction will not down at the beck of sophistical apology, and Mr. Carnegie still stands forth as the head and front of the local opposition to the project for which municipal encouragement is sought. Mr. Carnegie's saucous oratory has been heard time and again in advocacy of the National Policy as a policy calculated to promote the establishment of manufacturing industries, and every day the columns of his paper contains unctuous endorsations of this policy; yet, the first organized attempt to apply the principle, the first organized effort to introduce a system of manufacturing industries is met upon by the man who is a professional advocate of their value to the community. Here is a splendid contrast of the value of mere profession, as compared to practice. Mr. Carnegie proposes to be anxious for the up-building of the town, yet what is his record in this respect? Is his money applied to the promotion of industries and enterprises calculated to secure that end? Is the purchase of bulls or fancy brands of sheep encouraging to manufacturing industries? His record in this respect does not entitle him to the right to interfere in a hostile manner to discourage the endeavors of a man whose whole career has tended in this direction. Just for one moment contrast what Mr. Cox has done to build up the town with his chief opponent's efforts. The facts are too well known to need repetition here. He has too decided and extensive an interest in the town to propose anything that would injure its prosperity. Any such attempt would be suicidal on his part. His own loss or benefit is involved in that of the town. Yet a comprehensive scheme for promoting the interests of the town is no sooner proposed in a practical and practicable form, than petty personal, not to say political, intrigue crops up. Little paddling issues are lugged in and an effort made, under cover of a specious affectation of interest, to defeat the scheme by a man whose previous attitude of indifference would suggest that he had no right to play the part of the dog in the manger, or rather that that role just suits his position in the premises. On the one hand we have a broad patriotic position assumed; on the other, a petty, pettifogging, carping, small-souled, narrow-minded scheme of obstruction, and an endeavor to secure a little cheap, political capital at the expense of the town. These two contrasting attitudes are distinctly defined, and no amount of apology and special pleading, editorial or personal, can confuse the issue nor alter the minds of the public as to the relative position of the above letter, in relation to the matter of the Dickson Company exemption by-law.

Another chance for contrast is presented by the paragraph in the editorial referred to, in which it is proposed that a hard and fast agreement not to establish competing industries would "completely disarm the opposition" of the editor of the Review. This is a characteristic narrow-mindedness and an appearance of fairness that aims at completely defeating the scheme under consideration. The idea can never be carried out, because it is practically impossible to establish any new industry that will not in some way compete with established industries. If this principle were to be carried out there would be an end to all progress. I am convinced that, apart from prejudices, the holding of this narrow illiberal and retrogressive view is confined chiefly to the editor of the Review and his little following. If the town of Peterboro' is to progress, there must be a more broad and liberal spirit exhibited. The promotion of the general good in any way, cannot be accomplished without running counter to some private interest. The splendid railway facilities we enjoy have not been secured without the sacrifice of private interests. Yet the general good had to be consulted. Let a broader, higher, less self-interested, public spirit be shown. Without that, real progress cannot be expected. Now, as a considerable ratepayer, I feel an interest in the matter, and this must be my excuse for putting the facts of the case, in what seems to me, to be their true light. Thanking you, Mr. Editor, for the space afforded me,

I remain
Yours truly,
PROGRESS.

The Face in The Moon.

BY GRAEME MURDOCK.

We had all observed for some time that Tom Eaton had been unlike himself. Originally a good-natured sort of chap, without much facility in painting, to be sure, but with any amount of ambition, he had pleased us all. The one or two sharp criticisms on his pictures that had been accepted by the hanging committees and the innumerable rejections he had sustained at their hands, seemed at last to have really turned his temper. He grew blue, somber, now and again gruff, and singularly loquacious on the subject of his art. He would orate by the hour on theories of painting, and was sometimes ingenious if obscure. I was talking to Gleason Tower about him one day, and Gleason, who deals in caustic speeches, said: "Sum up Tom Eaton, and he is a good example of a limited man with an unlimited ambition. He was supposed to have great talent, and started out in life under the impression that he was a genius. He lived in this dream for a while; now he is waking to find he is only an ordinary sort of man like the rest of us. It makes him mad, or if he is 'not mad he soon will be,' if he goes about with his notions and talk."

A week or so later, Eaton monopolized an evening at the Kit-Kat club by giving us his new views on art. Art meant only portraiture. Everything else, from still life up to landscape, was a mere accessory. He really dawdled on with his thought, though his words flew fast enough, and I felt as if he were killing his friendships as I glanced about the room and saw numerous indications of suppressed yawns.

It was so. Gleason Towner said: "Eaton has rung his own death-knell. He belongs in an insane asylum, not in an art club."

"I really think his brain is cracked," suggested Bob Langley. "They say he has an uncle who—"

But some one broke in with tidings of a new model, and we dropped Tom Eaton.

* * * * * * *

I do not believe I gave the fellow a thought again until he chanced upon me the next summer while I was staying in an out-of-the-way village in Maine, on a sketching excursion. One day, in July, I stumbled upon Eaton sitting out under his umbrella, painting.

"Hello, old man! given up portraits?" I called, remembering by the association of ideas his talk the last time I saw him.

"No, this is a portrait," and he turned his easel toward me to display a most indifferent figure of an Irish woman with a basket in her hand.

He held his brush idly for a moment, and then looked up at me quickly.

"I have come here to see you," he said abruptly. "I heard you were here. Will you go rowing with me to-night? I have something to say to you—a secret. I have come all this distance to find you, for say it I must."

I will confess to a vague remembrance of Eaton's queer ways, but I am not half a bad fellow, and was, moreover, a trifle flattered at this proof of confidence and friendship, so I consented.

"At 8?" he asked.

"At 8," I answered.

"Meet me here at this point if you will. I shall be busy until then, and do not care to see you and idly chat over nothing while my secret chokes in my throat."

He laughed uneasily.

"In love," thought I; "and I shall lie in a boat and listen to descriptions of her beauties and her charms all night. Hello-ho!"

At 8 o'clock precisely I had reached the point, but Eaton was there before me sitting in the boat, oars in hand, paddling about uneasily. He had pulled off his coat, and as he was a fine, brawny fellow, I looked at him with some admiration.

"What a Hercules you are!" I cried.

"And what a crab, a turtle, are you! Get in."

As I jumped into the boat, annoyed by his tone, which was almost savage, I stumbled against his paint-box and a big bit of canvas.

"What are these things doing here?" I queried, as I sat down in the stern of the boat.

"They go where I go," he replied. "They are my tools."

We did not speak for some time. Eaton pulled hard and fast, and I lay back with my hands under my head and looked up at the sky. It was just before moonrise, and the heavens were in their golden glorious expectancy. I did not care to break the silence. The secret of the night was grander and more interesting than any pretty human confidence could be. Eaton spoke first.

"You are not curious?"

"I beg your pardon; I am ready."

He was silent again for a few moments.

"I am going to be a great painter," he said abruptly.

Ah! It was not a love secret then!

"But to accomplish my end I must take terrible means. I must condemn myself to years of agony. I must condemn also another being to a briefer but very horrible torture."

Then it must be a love story, after all!

"Yes?" I replied, as he paused, putting as much expression as I could into the words.

My mind, curiously enough, rambled back to another moonlit night when I was quite a lad, and when I sat in the stern of the boat with such a beautiful little girl, Anita Grayson by name, a child of 12, perhaps. Some one sitting by had said, "Anita looks like the moon," and I had watched her during the rest of the evening and wondered why, and gone home to dream that I saw the moon in the water, and that it had Anita's face in it. While I was dimly recalling this, and half listening to my friend, I became suddenly quite roused from my dream. Eaton had been saying something about his incapacity to catch a likeness.

"I cannot make the people I paint impress me. One race follows another swiftly, and my model flits away with these spectres. Now, only one thing can impress a face upon my mind. I feel sure—impress it so that it will stay by me and haunt me by day and print itself on my soul at night. I have thought it all over. There is but one way.

God help me! I must commit a crime. I must kill some one! That face—his face—will haunt me. I shall see only that, and I can paint it. You see, I am quite calm in this matter. I have reasoned the thing out. I am a good man; my bitterness of spirit will harass me into work. I shall hold my brush with remorse. I shall paint a great, a terrible picture!"

Great heavens! Gleason was right. This is a madman, I thought, and glanced about with my mental eye to take in the situation. It must be strategy versus strength. I saw that at a glance. I must not betray the slightest fear. His plan was settled. I must plot to defeat it. In the first place I must gain time. This might be only wild talk.

"Whom do you propose to kill?" I inquired nonchalantly, although my heart seemed to stand still as I waited for his answer. He lifted his oars, and I could hear them drip, drip in the moment's silence.

"I propose to drown a man," he said. "Then I will tie him to my boat—this, my [illegible] and I am [illegible] frost. I shall drink in the sight of that floating face in the dark water, with the moonlight about it, and the world that has scorned me will hold its breath."

"An original plan, indeed," I replied. "Have you chosen your man?"

"I have chosen you."

"You should have selected a handsomer face, or at least have made him shave before starting. A bearded face in the water is—pshaw! very bad. Don't you see?"

My voice sounded steady, and I was lost in admiration of myself as a man of nerve. "Don't you see?" I repeated.

"I shall see, for I shall paint it! You take it coolly," he continued, eyeing me warily.

My thoughts were flying about in confusion. I could not swim. Eaton knew it. I am a slight man, a mere nothing to this Hercules. No help, indeed, but by my wits. If I was cool so was he. I must try a new tack, unsettle the fixed idea that anchored his wild fancy and gave him this terrible strength of purpose.

"A woman's face would have been better," I suggested. "Something really poetic about that, now! Ah, look there!" I cried, an idea striking me, and pointing as I cried out to the moon mirrored in the water. She had risen, but had been cut off from us in the heavens by a ledge of rock at our left, just beyond this her counterfeit presentment shone round and full in the water. "Look there!"

"What do you see?" cried Eaton, his voice trembling with excitement, his whole body eagerly bent forward.

"A woman's face in the moon in the waves!" I called, gazing fixedly as if at a vision. "What a brooding face! What shadowy hair! What a slow smile! And her eyes! Ah! do you see her eyes? She has opened them! Have you killed her?"

"I swear to you, no!" cried Eaton; "I swear to you, no! I know no such woman; I have never killed her! I have not even broken her heart! Tell me more about her!"

"She is young, very mystical, yet very real, with a smile at one side of her mouth, while the other looks quite grave."

This was a characteristic of Anita's mouth, and it was she I was describing—Anita as I fancied her grown older, for I had not seen her, scarcely indeed thought of her, since that day when we were children.

"It's a pity you can't paint her for me," said Eaton impetuously, as he gazed at the moon. "I don't quite see her, but she sounds great."

"I might try to paint her to-morrow," I suggested, taking a cigarette from my pocket, and relapsing into my calm manner again.

"You forget—to-morrow will be too late. But you shall paint her to-night—now, before I kill you."

He put up his oars as he spoke and came toward me, drawing a rope through his heavy hands. He was in a state of wild excitement, and I felt my light, airy manner slipping away as he approached. I was chilly as—as my watery grave was like to be. Yet I let him bind me hand and foot, and instinctively counted his deep breaths the while by way of something to do. A lurch, a struggle, and I should have been overboard and lost. Now that there seemed a chance for life, I was in terror, and I was more than half out of my senses as I watched my Charon lay me on the hither side of his stream. He took me from the boat as if I had been a child. Then he built a fire.

"I can mix colors by firelight," he cried, and unfastening my hands set his canvas and easel before me, gave me a brush and bade me begin.

For the life of me, and in spite of the threatened death so near at hand, I could but feel an interest in the freak.

"I must do it in grays or browns. It must be a monochrome, or we shall ruin it." I spoke impatiently. So I did it in grays. The bit of black rock, the waves, the moon resting on the waves, and little Anita's face, with the half-solemn, half-smiling look upon it.

The strange scene, the maniac beside me, my own former fear and present excitement and the stirring of my fancy gave me a certain fictitious strength. In less than an hour, as I should think, I had finished my sketch. It was certainly weird and, as it seemed to me, strong. In the distance I half suggested the boat, and two men in it, one gazing eagerly toward the moon and the face, and the other lying in the stern, his arms over his head, his eyes toward the heavens. The boat and the men were small and well in the shadow.

"Bravo! bravo!" cried Eaton. "Don't touch it again! Give me the brush! Here," and snatching it from my fingers he wrote his name, "Thomas Eaton," in bold black letters under the boat. "This is my work, remember—mine, not yours. It will be a great success, and you"—he paused and looked at me—"you have saved your life." Saying which he jumped into his boat with my sketch, laughed a harsh, bleak sort of laugh, and rowed away around the ledge of rock.

For a few moments I sat still thinking it over—the strange, ridiculous, yet almost tragic scenes. "I am not sure that little Anita didn't save my life after all," I thought to myself.

It did not take me long to get out of my close quarters, but the walk home over the dreary, rough coast was long, and it was late before I reached the village. What a strange, eerie walk it was, with the sea charging the moist air, and the moon contracting and expanding before my eyes through the mist that had risen. Anita shared the walk with me.

I found a telegram telling me of my father's very serious illness at Baden Baden, and I was busy packing and driving through the chill, early morning toward the nearest railway station, so that I had no chance to look up Eaton. I remember that I told my driver something about an artist, a friend of mine who had turned up, who seemed wrong in his mind, and ought to be looked after. I believe I wrote a line to the same effect to Gleason. I know I meant to do so. But the anxious voyage and more anxious weeks in Europe put all other thoughts from my mind.

* * * * * * *

It was after my father's death late in the fall that I sailed for home. Taking up a paper that came out on the pilot-boat I saw the notice of the Saltsagundi exhibition. Coupled with it was an announcement of the death of poor Tom Eaton, who had died in a mad-house the week before. "An unsuccessful but painstaking artist," the review went on to say, "it is somewhat surprising that the only work he has left of any strength should now be hung at the black and white exhibition. This sketch was made after his madness was fairly upon him. This picture is in grays, oddly colored, but in composition and drawing quite full of a certain weird power. Not to be too funny at a dead man's expense, this gives the poor fellow a good send-off at any rate, as a friend of his remarked the other day. The picture, taken in connection with the tragic death of the artist, has created some little stir, more particularly as the face in the sketch is strikingly like that of a young Boston beauty who is making her debut in New York."

So poor Eaton was dead, and his picture—my picture—was a success, and—Anita had lived in Boston when she was 12!

I hurried to the black and white that very afternoon, and found quite a group collected about my picture—Eaton's picture. I laughed somewhat nervously as I stood before it. Some one behind me spoke. It was Gleason. "You needn't laugh, man, I am glad to see you back, by the way. There is some force in that, and I am glad for poor Tom's sake that he has left this sketch behind him. I give you my word I had no idea he could do as well. He couldn't have while he was sane. Every one is surprised. How are you? You look pale. Have you come back to stay?" etc., etc. I lingered around for awhile and found myself back again, and again before my picture (Eaton's picture), the picture never to be claimed as mine now. It chanced I had told the story to no one. There had been no opportunity. Now, of course, I never must. As I stood looking at it, and somewhat moved, perhaps, more by the remembrance of that night than by anything actually before my eyes, two girls and an elderly woman approached and stopped.

"It certainly is like her, mamma; I wonder if she will see it herself. It is quite time she were here, by-the-by. She promised to meet us at 3, you know."

"I don't think it does her justice," replied the elder lady, looking through her glasses critically. "She is a very beautiful creature, and this face is less so," she added rather indefinitely, and with some hesitation in her voice, so that I fancied the picture grew on as she looked, and that she might yet reverse her decision.

The other girl spoke now. She had a discerning face, as I could see, and that long upper lip that goes with speech-faculty. "It is like," she said "more like her soul than her body. It is like the way she will look to her guardian angel—or her lover." She turned abruptly to greet some people who were walking toward us.

I was singularly excited. The maniac in the boat had no such paralyzing power over me as this potentiality in a soft gray gown, with a long gray glove outstretched. My heart beat and the picture swam before my eyes, for this might be, might it not, Anita herself? I heard a voice exclaim. "This is the picture!" A lady in black with the gray girl began an apology: "We are late. As usual, Signor Boldini and some new music. Ah!" interrupting herself, "it is like—why, yes, very. Don't you think so yourself?"—the name at last, surely—but no—"don't you think so yourself, dear?"

"Yes, do tell us what you think. Isn't she weird? and can you look like that?" cried the girls.

Ah, the other me!" said a new voice softly a voice with a low thrill in it. "It is like what I might have been, I'm sure. Some one told me once when I was a child, I remember, that I was like the moon, but having lived eight years since then in a flood of sunshine?"—and the gray hand touched the black glove near hers, a grateful touch, I felt sure—"why, I am not so much like it now as I was."

"In spite o' the smile that you always will and always won't smile outright. That is in the face in the moon, too, you see. Did you ever meet Mr. Eaton?"

"And do you think the girl very beautiful, and very like a maniac's dream?" broke in the shorter girl. "Do tell us, Anita."

So then it was Anita. I turned, and as I walked away faced the blue-gray eyes, like violets, and the hair like shaded moonbeams, and the smile. Not the little 12-year-old Anita this, but a beautiful, sunny creature, with the other Anita somehow suggested, and yet not there. This one more of the world, with a savoir faire lying over the moonshine. I had meant, if it were she, to speak to her at once and boldly. As it was, I simply gazed, and when her eyes met mine I fear it was I, not she, who blushed. But she recognized me. My identity was all in my face, I am sure. I saw a puzzled look in her eyes, and I seized my chance. I bowed; I spoke:

"Years ago you knew me, Miss Grayson, when I was a boy in Boston, and when you were like the moon."

I was introduced to the aunt in black. My father had been one of the old family friends. So in a few moments I was talking like an old friend myself. Mrs. Grayson touched on my recent loss, and then, as I turned to leave, said:

"I should be glad to know your father's son. Can you dine with us on Sunday next?"

* * * * * * *

So the golden gates were opened for me, and Sundays came and Sundays went and I was fathoms deep in love. I could not paint, I could not talk. I heard a good deal of music, and I suppose—alack and alas—read poetry. Fatal habit of lovers. And so at last it came to the point when I must tell her. Armed with a shield of violets I met her in her aunt's drawing-room one Sunday again toward twilight. A day in April it was, and spring was in the air.

The aunt was out on an errand of charity; would soon be at home, Anita hoped. I said nothing. Talk flagged in consequence.

"If those violets are for this house, why do you hold them?" asked Anita; "why do you not give them to me?"

"I hold them because you will soon touch them yourself"—which was an asinine speech. Wasn't it?

"That is stupid," she laughed frankly, "and like other men, and not like you."

"But I am like other men," I answered, abruptly, "for I—" Then I paused, gave her the violets, and conversation flagged again. We tried various subjects—Russian dynamite, Scalchi; all failed.

"How good Aunt Emily is!" cried Anita at last in enthusiasm—"so full of thought for the poor and needy. I wish I had ever done any one any good."

"You saved my life once," I said. I must have said it very earnestly, for Anita flushed and then paled.

"Why must you jest with me in this way to-day? You are breaking our friendship."

"I want no friendship from you. I am glad to break it. I will tell you how you saved my life if you will say Yes to a question I am going to ask. But you must look at me and not at the violets."

* * * * * * *

And so all the debut went for nothing, and the swells and the lordlings that had hung about got their congé, and I got my moonlight; for the girl with the long upper lip—who, by the way, is now my cousin—was right, and Anita was the moon Anita to her lover.

In the course of time we married. Such a bald statement of an idyllic fact! But that is all that words can do—only half tell any tale. Our secret and our love and how she looks to me still are all told to us silently by a picture that hangs over the fireplace in our nursery, for there is a nursery as well as a studio, and the picture is the picture of a moon with a face in it, and in bold black letters the name of the artist—Thomas Eaton.

A certain brown haired baby boy, [illegible] ing said up to warm his wee toes by the open fire, always stretches his hands toward the face in the moon and calls: "My mamma! my mamma!"—Our Continent.

Testimonial.

Testimonial from Chief Justice James Macdonald. N. S., late Minister of Justice:—

HALIFAX, N. S., Jan. 13, 1883.

To Mr. B. Laurance:

DEAR SIR,—I beg to say that I have used the spectacles and eye glasses with which you fitted me, a sufficient time to test them thoroughly, and I am pleased to say they have given me the highest satisfaction in every way.

Yours truly,
JAS. MACDONALD.

Wedding Bells.

The EXAMINER a short time ago ventured to "expect" the early marriage of a certain bachelor of musical proclivities, and much speculation was rife as to which of the many musical bachelors of Peterborough could be the happy man. It affords us great pleasure to set these speculations at rest, by announcing that last evening at Christ Church Cathedral, Montreal, Mr. Charles C. Hampshire, the talented and popular organist of St. John's Church, led to the altar Miss E. M. Ford, of Birmingham, England. The marriage ceremony was performed by Rev. J. G. Norton, rector of Christ Church Cathedral. It was the wish of the choir of Christ Church to have given Mr. Hampshire, who was formerly organist there, a choral wedding; indeed a similar offer was made by another church in Montreal with which he had been connected, but both offers were declined, a quiet and unassuming ceremony being preferred by Mr. Hampshire and his bride. Mr. and Mrs. Hampshire will arrive in town tomorrow evening, and the EXAMINER joins in the hearty welcome and cordial congratulations with which they are sure of being received.

A Chance for Doing Good.

Many persons naturally inclined to doing good find an excuse for ignoring their inclinations in the plea that no opportunity suited to their capacity and resources presents itself. Hazel Brae branch of Dr. Barnardo's Homes, however, affords a chance for performing a little well-timed kindness. There are a large number of children now at the Home, and, as the winter is drawing near, those having charge of them naturally feel concerned for their intellectual improvement, and are, therefore, anxious that something in the nature of a library should be provided for the use of the orphans. Those who are willing to co-operate can, with no outlay and very little exertion, do a great deal of good. If they have any books, even though they may not be new ones, which would be interesting to boys and girls, they will be doing an act of great kindness by devoting them to the purpose of amusing and instructing the children of the Home. Thus they will be helping the latter to profitably employ the long evenings of the winter. There is scarcely a household in the town in which there are not several books of the character required, which have served their day, and still would be interesting to those who have not read them. A little thoughtfulness and a little prompt action would result in providing an abundance of reading matter for the little denizens of Hazel Brae during the coming winter. Those willing to assist in the matter can communicate with Mr. Duff, at the Home.

ATHLETICS.

Lacrosse.

THE BOYS BRING HOME THE CHAMPIONSHIP.

In the year 1882 the lacrosse championship known as that of the Central District, was instituted, and on September 11th, of the same year, was won by the Peterboro' club, who defeated the Orillias in three straight games. From that time until the spring of the present year, they were successful in holding the medal representing it against all comers, among whom were numbered the Uxbridge, Orillia, Oshawa and Barrie clubs, all of whom made several attempts to wrest the coveted honor from them. On the 23rd of June last, however, the club being weakened, and the interest in the game somewhat dormant, owing to the absence in the Northwest of several players, the Checkers, of Beaverton, caught them napping, and the result was that the visitors succeeded in defeating the champions in three straight games, and carried away to their village home the proud trophy. For some time the home club seemed to be under a cloud, but the return of the man from the Northwest, and the knowledge that a determined effort must be made to win back the medal, infused new life and energy into it, and the first ray of light broke through the cloud when the boys a couple of weeks ago disposed of the doughty champions of the United States in summary order. This added new ardour and spirit to the club and their admirers, and when they and a number of their supporters left for Beaverton yesterday morning to make a struggle to bring back the championship once more, it was confidently anticipated that they would not return empty-handed. These anticipations and hopes the boys have gallantly fulfilled, and the championship has once more returned to the home where it is to be hoped it may long remain.

THE GAME.
